The certificates under S. 129-A of the Bombay Prohibition Act are endowed with great evidentiary value by virtue of S. 66 (2) and entail the most serious consequences upon the persons against whom they are used. If the artificial rule against burden of proof contrary to known principles of criminal jurisprudence is to be relied upon on behalf of the prosecution, the certificates which give rise to such rule must be prepared with great care. 1962 Nag L J (Notes) 8.

—S. 66 (b) (as applied to Saurashtra) — Burden of proof.

Where the prosecution case is that the accused was in possession of prohibited liquor, the burden of proof lies on the prosecution to prove that the bottles seized contained prohibited liquor. AIR 1955 S C 123, Foll. 1956 Cri L J 775 : AIR 1956 Sau 25 (26) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

—S. 66 (b)—Person found drunk—Burden of proof—Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 103 and 106.

Positive facts must always be proved by the prosecution. But the same rule cannot apply to negative facts as regards which the rule about the burden of proof would be governed by Sec. 106, Evidence Act. The case of unauthorised possession of liquor presents points of distinction from the case of unauthorised drinking of liquor and the considerations which determine the burden of proof in the case of unauthorised possession of liquor do not apply to the case of unauthorised drinking. Consequently while the person in possession of liquor need not prove that it is an exempted liquor, a person who is proved to have drunk liquor can only escape conviction if he can show that the liquor consumed by him was exempted liquor.

8. Jurisdiction of Magistrate.

—S. 66 (1) (b) — Offence under — Jurisdiction of Magistrate — Proof as to place where offence committed—Onus.

The offence under S. 66 (1) (b) of the Bombay Prohibition Act is complete when a person 'consumes' prohibited intoxicant and the burden to establish that the offence took place within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate who tried the accused, is upon the prosecution.

From the fact that an accused has been found intoxicated at a particular place it cannot be presumed that he must have consumed the liquor at the very place. There is nothing like the common course of natural events as contemplated by S. 114 of the Evidence Act for a person found intoxicated at one particular place to have of necessity consumed liquor at the very same place. Nor can such onus be shifted to the accused on the ground that it being within the special knowledge of the accused as to where he consumed liquor, under S. 106 of the Evidence Act it would be for him to establish that he had consumed liquor at a place where it was not an offence to consume. In the absence of such proof by the prosecution as to the place where the accused 'consumed' liquor the accused cannot be tried and convicted under S. 66 (1) (b) by having resort to Ss. 179, 180 and 182 of the Criminal P. C., (1963) 2 Cri L J 273 : (1962) 3 Guj L R 409 : AIR 1963 Guj 234 (236, 239) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 8, 13, 14) (DB).

—S. 66 (1) (b)—Applicability—It is the relation of one Act with the other that brings S. 180, Criminal P. C into operation and gives the jurisdiction to the Courts in both the local areas where the offence has occurred. AIR 1961 Mad 126, Expl., A I R 1959 Ker 311, Ref.

A Magistrate in whose jurisdiction an offence under S. 85 (1) of the Act has been committed, does not become empowered to try the offence under S. 66 (1) (b) of the Act also by reference to S. 180, Criminal P. —S. 66 (b)—Proof of accused drinking liquor within Court's territorial jurisdiction is necessary. A I R 1954 Sau 17 (17) (Prs 2, 3) (DB).

In order that a Magistrate may have jurisdiction to convict a person for the offence of drinking an intoxicant without a permit, it is necessary for the prosecution to prove that the intoxicant was consumed within the limits of his jurisdiction.

Where the accused is merely found drunk within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a Magistrate it would be for the prosecution to prove the place where the liquor was consumed in order to give the Magistrate jurisdiction to try the case. If the prosecution fails to prove this, the Court is not justified in drawing a presumption under S 114, Evidence Act that the accused must be considered to have taken liquor at the place where he is found, especially when there is a possibility of the accused reaching that place within a short period of time. 4 Sau L R 264 : 1952 Cri L J 737 : AIR 1952 Sau 35 (36) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

9. Punishment.

C., S. 35 — Accused tried at one trial for offences under — Conviction — Separate sentences for each offence if can be passed—Penal Code (1860), S. 71—Although separate sentences can legally be passed at the same trial on a person charged with offences punishable under S. 65 (b), S. 65 (f) and S. 66 (b) of the Act, subject to the limit as regards aggregate punishment imposed by S 71, Penal Code, ordinarily one sentence alone should be passed for the offence of manufacturing liquor under S. 65 (b) and no separate sentences should be passed for offences of possessing materials or apparatus for manufacturing liquor and for possessing liquor punishable under S. 65 (f) and S. 66 (b) of the Act. Of course if the accused is shown to be in possession of liquor not distilled by him, the act of possessing such liquor cannot be said to be covered by his act of manufacturing liquor and it would not only be legal but also proper to pass separate sentences in such cases. SECTION 67

—S. 67 — Prosecution under — Presumption under S. 103 (1)—If available—Where there is a special provision made by the legislature in the matter of a presumption to be drawn in particular prosecutions, the drawing of presumption in those prosecutions shall be regulated by the special provisions and not by the general provisions.

The provisions of sub-s. (1) of S. 103 are general and they relate to the presumption to be drawn "in prosecution under any of the provisions" of the Act. It is true that this expression would prima facie include the provisions of S. 67 or S. 67-1A; but there the legislature has specially enacted sub-s. (2) dealing expressly with prosecutions under S. 67 or S. 67-1A and hence the provisions of S. 103 (2) would apply to the prosecutions under S. 67 or S. 67-1A.

It is clear from the language of sub-s. (1) of S. 103 that the presumption contemplated by the legislature in enacting sub-s. (1) relates to an offence in respect of manufacture of an intoxicant and not in respect of an offence arising out of a contravention of S. 21 of the Act. See Prohibition — Bombay Prohibition Act

(b) of S. 21 and therefore he has committed an offence under S. 67, the prosecution must prove that charge independently of the presumption under S. 103, sub s. (2). See Prohibition — Bombay Prohibition Act (25 of 1949), S. 103 (2). 1958 Cri L J 1009 : A I R 1958 Bom 311 (DB).

SECTION 81

● ——Ss. 81 and 66 (b) — Possession of articles — Evidence Act (1872), S. 3 — Where all that was suggested by the defence was that the articles found in godowns were planted there by the police but it was not said that the godown was accessible to all and that the police might have kept the spirit there and the suggestion could not bear examination in view of the evidence, the Magistrate was justified in those circumstances in drawing the inference that these articles were in possession of the accused who was in possession of the godown and the Supreme Court would not disturb the decision. See Prohibition—Bombay Prohibition Act (25 of 1949), S. 66 (b). 1953 Cri L J 1097 : A I R 1953 S C 247.

SECTION 83

● ——S. 83—Conspiracy—Inference of.

Section 83 of the Bombay Prohibition Act provides punishment for conspiracy to commit or cause to commit an offence under the Act. But an inference of conspiracy cannot be made from the facts that five accused were found in a motor car which contained in its luggage compartment a number of foreign liquor bottles and some of the accused were blood relations. SECTION 84

——S. 84—Alteration of conviction — Criminal P. C (1898), S. 423 — The offence under S. 66 (b) is more grave than under S. 84 and before altering the conviction from one under S. 84 to one under S. 66 (b) opportunity ought to be given to the accused to meet the charge for it may be that he may have a valid defence to that charge. See Prohibition — Bombay Prohibition Act (1949), S. 66 (b). ('51) 4 Sau L R 67 (DB).

Quaere—Whether even if the burden of proof in the circumstances under S. 66 (2) shifted to the accused, that burden is discharged by reason of S. 6-A of the Act

Quaere—Whether S. 85 of the Act lays down two conditions, namely, that the accused should have been drunk and incapable of taking care of himself and also that he should have taken the drink not for a medicinal purpose, but for the purpose of being intoxicated. See Prohibition — Bombay Prohibition Act (25 of 1949) (as amended by Bombay Act 12 of 1959), S. 66 (2). (1965) 2 S C W R 538 : (1965) 3 S C R 358 : AIR 1966 S C 145.

——S. 85 (1) (3) — "Found drunk" — Admission of Consumption of liquor — Proof of intoxication — If necessary—(Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 255).

The accused came from Balaghat district which is not a prohibition district and got down from the bus at Tumsar. He was examined and the doctor opined that he had consumed liquor. He was prosecuted under Ss. 13 (b) and 85 (1) (3) of the Act. In his examination the accused said "I admit the offence. I was not creating trouble in the Ganj. I do not have any permit." The Magistrate purported to convict the accused on plea of guilty.

Held, that the accused intended to say that he was not intoxicated; that it was not enough to prove that accused had consumed liquor; that there should have been proof that he was intoxicated and that he could not be convicted under S. 85 (1) (3) (b). 1961 Nag L J (Notes) 13 (Bom).

——S. 85 (1)—Ingredients of offence.

The accused was found in a state of intoxication and his mouth was smelling of liquor; his eyes were red and pupils were dilated and his gait was staggering. None of the witnesses stated that the accused was abusive or that he behaved in a disorderly manner or that he was incapable of taking care of himself.

Held, that he could not be convicted under S. 85 (1), Bombay Prohibition Act. 57 Bom L R 541, Foll. 1961 Nag L J (Notes) 7 (Bom).

——S. 85 (1)—Accused found in drunken condition in a car going along a public road — Charge of being found in a drunken condition on a public thoroughfare or road—Essentials of the offence explained.

The fact that a man was going in a vehicle, on a public road in a drunken condition would not exempt him from the mischief of S. 85 (1) of the Prohibition Act.

The test in such a case is, not whether the vehicle was open or closed or the vehicle was accessible to public or the man was visible inside the vehicle, but whether the person who was drunk was travelling in a vehicle which was going along a public road, and as in such a case the only impediment between the person so travelling in the vehicle and the public road, would be the vehicle itself, while considering the question whether such person could be said to be on the public road, the medium which intervenes should be ignored.

For a charge under the section in such a case the prosecution need not show the incriminating condition of the accused at the time he was first seen in the car; it would be enough for a conviction under the section if the medical evidence reveals that the accused was intoxicated and overwhelmed by alcohol and that he exhibited a number of symptoms which clearly pointed to his having been in an intoxicated condition and incapable of taking care of himself even though he was sitting in his own sedan car. Cr R A No. 670 of 1955 decided on 16-8-1955 (Bom), Foll. (1960) 62 Bom L R 853 : 1960 Nag L J 728 : I L R (1960) Bom 951.

——S. 85 (1), Cls. (1) and (2) — Offence under — Proof of drinking of prohibited liquor not necessary —Separate sentences.

The question whether an accused person has taken prohibited liquor or permitted liquor is irrelevant for an offence under S. 85 (1) or S. 85 (1) (2). If it is shown that an accused person was drunk and incapable of taking care of himself and also that he behaved in a disorderly manner under the influence of drink, then the requirements of S. 85 are satisfied. I L R (1955) Bom 924, Foll.

Where the Magistrate finds that the accused was found drunk and was incapable of taking care of himself and also that he behaved in a disorderly manner under the influence of drink, his acquitting the accused on the ground that it was not shown by the prosecution that the accused had taken prohibited liquor is erroneous and must be set aside.

Further, it is not necessary to impose two separate sentences in respect of both these offences. Since the two offences arise out of the same incident it would be proper to impose only one sentence. 1956 Cri L J 584 : A I R 1956 Bom 279 (279, 280) (Prs 2, 4) (DB).

——S. 85 (1)—Drinking permitted liquor.

A person would commit an offence under S. 85 (1), Bombay Prohibition Act, even if he drinks permitted liquor, if he is found in a public place drunk and incapable of taking care of himself and the word 'drunk' means 'overcome by alcoholic liquor or intoxicated'. ILR (1955) Bom 924, Foll. 1956 Cri L J 505 (1) : AIR 1956 Bom 270 (270) (Pr 2) (DB).

——Ss. 85 (1), Cls (1) and (3), 2 (12) — 'Drunk' — Meaning of—Proof of drinking prohibited liquor not necessary for conviction.

The expression 'drunk' in S. 85 (1) (3) is not synonymous with the expression 'to drink' defined in S. 2 (12) of the Act. The expression 'drunk' in S. 85 (1) (3) must be given its plain natural meaning which it has in the English language, viz, as overcome by alcoholic liquor or intoxicated. An offence under S. 85 (1) is committed by a person drinking permitted liquor, if he is drunk and incapable of taking care of himself or if he behaves in a disorderly manner or if he is intoxicated. I L R (1955) Bom 924, Rel. on.

Where, therefore, the Magistrate finds that the condition of the accused was such that he was unable to take care of himself, his order acquitting the accused of the offence under S. 85 (1), Cls. (1) and (3) on the ground that the prosecution had failed to prove that the drunkennes of the accused had arisen as a result of his having drunk prohibited liquor cannot be sustained. 1956 Cri L J 384 : A I R 1956 Bom 173 (174) (Prs 2, 3) (DB).

Where in a trial for an offence under S. 85 (2) of the Act, the prosecution do not allege that the accused has a previous conviction for the same offence and the charge does not mention such previous conviction as required by S. 221 (7), Cr. P. C. the offence committed by the accused will be punishable as a first offence with imprisonment for a term extending to three months and the case will be tried as a summons case. If, on the other hand, the accused has been previously convicted for an offence under S. 85 (2), he will be punishable with imprisonment extending to one year and the case will be a warrant case and will have to be tried as such. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 4 (1) (v) and (w). 52 Cri L J 693 : AIR 1951 Bom 332 (DB).

——S. 85 (2) — Procedure for trial of first offence—Warrant case or summons case procedure — Mention of previous conviction in charge—Cr. P. Code, Ss. 221 (7) and 255-A.

Where an accused is charged with an offence under S. 85 (2) of the Bombay Prohibition Act, as a first offence, and no previous conviction is mentioned, though a previous conviction can be mentioned in it, the proper procedure to be applied in the case is the procedure to be applied in summons cases and not that applicable to warrant cases. But if the accused has been previously convicted, he will have to be charged with the previous conviction, and the case will then have to be tried in accordance with the procedure laid down for the trial of warrant case.

Chainani, J.—The effect of Ss. 221 (7), 225-A, Cr. P. Code, read together, is that the accused is to be charged with the previous convictions at the same time when he is charged with the subsequent offence, and if he is found guilty of that offence, he will be tried on the charge of previous convictions, by reason of which he will be liable to enhanced punishment. 52 Cri L J 693 : 53 Bom L R 108 : 21 Bom Cr Cas 61 : ILR (1951) Bom 467 : AIR 1951 Bom 332 (334) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 85 (1) (3)—'Is found drunk'—Meaning of—The words mean found overcome or intoxicated by liquor.

The expression 'is found drunk' in S. 85 (1), Cl. (3) of the Bombay Prohibition Act (1949), means is found overcome or intoxicated by liquor or any intoxicating drug,

Reading S. 85 as a whole it seems that the object of the Legislature in using the words 'is found drunk' was to describe the condition of a person who was overcome or intoxicated by liquor or an intoxicating drug. When he is so overcome or intoxicated that he is incapable of taking care of himself he would also be committing an offence under Cl. (1). When he is so overcome or intoxicated as to behave in a disorderly manner he would also be committing an offence under Cl. (2). Even if he is capable of taking care of himself and does not behave in a disorderly manner he would be covered by Cl. (3) if he is overcome or intoxicated by liquor or an intoxicating drug. Cl. (3) is wide enough to cover the case of a person who is overcome or intoxicated by liquor or an intoxicating drug whether he is capable of taking care of himself or not and whether he behaves in a disorderly manner or not. The accused under the influence of drink abused and assaulted a woman on a public road and was convicted under S. 85 (1) and (2), Bombay Prohibition Act and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 10.

Held that the conviction ought to be properly under Cl. (2) and not under Cl. (1) of S. 85 of the Act. The offences mentioned in the two clauses are two different offences. Under cl. (1) accused is merely found drunk and incapable of taking care of himself, whereas under Cl. (2) he does a positive act viz., behaves in a disorderly manner under the influence of drink. Hence the conviction under cl. (1) must be set aside.

The failure of the Magistrate to put to him any specific questions under S. 342 to explain the possession of the still and the various other articles found in the premises occupied by him cannot be said to have caused any prejudice to the appellant. An employee of the appellant in the premises cannot be said to be in possession of things belonging to his master unless they were left in his custody. Keki Bejonji v. ——S. 103 (1)—Presumption under—Applicability to prosecution under S. 67—Special and general provisions — Application of — S. 21—Scope of.

Where there is a special provision made by the Legislature in the matter of a presumption to be drawn in particular prosecutions, the drawing of presumption in those prosecutions shall be regulated by the special provision and not by the general provision.

The provisions of sub-s. (1) of S. 103 are general and they relate to the presumption to be drawn 'in prosecution under any of the provisions' of the Act. It is true that this expression would prima facie include the provisions of S. 67 or 67-1A: but then the Legislature has especially enacted sub-s. (2) dealing expressly with prosecutions under S. 67 or S. 67-1A and hence the provisions of S. 103 (2) would apply to the prosecutions under S. 67 or 67-1A.

It is clear from the language of sub-s. (1) of S. 103 that the presumption contemplated by the Legislature in enacting sub-s. (1) relates to an offence in respect of the manufacture of an intoxicant and not in respect of an offence arising out of a contravention of S. 21 of the Act. 59 Bom L R 734 : (1958) Cr L J 1009 : ILR (1958) Bom 565 : AIR 1958 Bom 311 (313) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Ss. 103 (2), 67—Offence under S. 21 (b)—Presumption under S. 103 (2) not available—Duty of prosecution.

The language of sub-s. (2) of S. 103 which admits of no ambiguity would show that in enacting the sub-section, the Legislature intended to legislate about the presumption in respect of an offence arising out of altering or attempting to alter any denatured spirit in contravention of clause (a) of S. 21 but not in respect of an offence committed by being found in possession of any denatured spirit in contravention of Clause (b) of S. 21. Accordingly the presumption under sub-s. (2) of S. 103 would not be available to the prosecution in the latter cases.

Where, therefore, the charge is that the accused has in his possession any denatured spirit in contravention of clause (b) of S. 21 and that therefore he has committed an offence under S. 67, the prosecution must prove that charge independently of the presumption under S. 103, sub-s. (2).

The procedure to be ordinarily followed by Presidency Magistrates in regard to the recording of evidence. is mentioned in S. 362 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 116 of the Bombay Prohibition Act, however, makes it clear that the procedure mentioned in Chapter XXII of the Cr. P. Code, in so far as it relates to case in which an appeal lies has to be followed even by Presidency Magistrates in the trial of cases under the Prohibition Act irrespective of whether the Magistrate intended initially to impose an appealable sentence or not. The Presidency Magistrate not having recorded 'the substance of the evidence' the case of the accused must be held to have been prejudiced by the irregular procedure, as in the absence of an adequate record of the substance of the evidence, it is not possible for the High Court in appeal to decide whether the conviction of the accused was justified. 61 Bom L R 684 : ILR (1959) Bom 1598 : 1960 Cr L J 324 : AIR 1960 Bom 107 (108, 109) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 9) (DB).

The procedure which is to be followed in cases under the Bombay Prohibition Act in a trial in the year 1957 is not the procedure laid down in S. 264 of the Criminal Procedure Code as it was when the Bombay Prohibition Act was passed but the procedure of the section as substituted by the amending Parliamentary Act, 26 of 1955. It is clear, from the provisions of S. 116 that the Magistrate who tries a case under the Prohibition Act has merely to apply the same procedure which is applicable at the time of the trial to 'summary cases in which an appeal lies.' 61 Bom L R 684:: ILR (1959) Bom 1598 : 1960 Cr L J 324 : AIR 1960 Bom 107 (109) (Pt D) (Pr 8) (DB).

Offences punishable under the Bombay Prohibition Act can be tried by any Magistrate who is competent to try them under the second schedule to Criminal P. C. whether he is empowered under S. 260 of the Code to try cases in a summary manner or not.

The power to try a case and the manner in which it is to be tried are two different matters. Section 116 deals only with the second matter, i. e., about the mode of trial and it does not curtail the ordinary powers of Magistrates to take cognisance of and try offences, but, on the other hand, it authorises all Magistrates to follow the summary procedure while trying offences under the Act. 52 Bom L R 321 : 51 Cr L J 1303 : ILR (1950) Bom 428 : 1950 Bom Cri C 172 : AIR 1950 Bom 273 (273, 274) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 4) (DB).

Section 129-A is not ultra vires Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution on the ground that the collection of blood for the test under that section is acquisition of property without payment of compensation. Looking to the provisions of the Bombay Prohibition Act in general and S. 129-A in particular, it cannot be said that the ownership of the blood is transferred to the State or that the right to possession of that blood is similarly transferred.

Further, looking at the scope and effect of the Bombay Prohibition Act it is not law relating to acquisition but it is law relating to intoxicating liquor. The object of introducing S. 129-A was to provide for the procedure with a view to effectuate the policy of prohibition. The power given by S. 129-A is only in respect of offences under the Act. The presumptions which may arise as a result of the blood test also arise only in respect of the provisions of this Act. They have no operation generally or to offences which fall outside the Act. These provisions are only ancillary to the legislative power of the State Legislature to make a law relating to the matters in Entry 8 in List II (State List) of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution. The ancillary provisions cannot be considered separately from the enactment and they do not fall under another head of legislation. Therefore, even if it is assumed that the taking of blood is acquisition, it would not be hit by Art. 31 of the Constitution. The collection of blood of a person for test under S. 129-A cannot be said to fall within the specific aspects of personal liberty protected under Art. 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. The validity of the provision of that section has to be examined in the light of the general right to personal liberty as is covered by Art. 21 of the Constitution. Article 21 itself does not give an absolute right to personal liberty. It does not say that no person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty under any circumstances. On the contrary, the Article presupposes that such deprivation of life or personal liberty as in accordance with procedure established by law is not protected by Art. 21. The function of deciding as to whether a certain procedure established by law which results in the deprivation of life or personal liberty is reasonable or not is not of the Court, since it is an exclusively legislative function. Therefore, even on the assumption that the provision of S. 129-A is unreasonable, it is not for the Court to decide that question.

The Bombay Prohibition Act is brought on the statute book to effectuate the policy of Prohibition. The taking of blood is empowered to be done only by a registered medical practitioner. It is thus under the protective eye of the law. It is intended to help the scientific determination of intoxication and the results of the test may as well prove innocence as the guilt of the person. Since the procedure for such extraction of blood is established by law, any deprivation of liberty on account of a person being compelled to go before a medical officer for that purpose cannot be said to be ultra vires, Article 21 of the Constitution. 63 Bom L R 87 and A I R 1950 S C 27, Relied on. 66 Bom L R 230 : 1964 Mah L J 360 : I L R (1964) Bom 404 : 1964 (2) Cri L J 523 : A I R 1964 Bom 253 (260 to 262) (Pt C) (Prs 8, 9) (DB).

Section 129-B gives to the accused an unqualified right to have the Chemical Examiner summoned and examined as a witness, but it is elementary that in a criminal trial, the primary duty of the Court is to find out whether on the evidence led by the prosecution, the charge can be said to have been brought home to the accused. If the evidence led by the prosecution is such as could sustain the conviction, the failure of the accused to challenge that evidence may conceivably affect his defence. If, on the other hand, the prosecution evidence falls short of that standard of proof which is required by law, the bridge cannot be gulfed by calling in aid the supposed failure of the accused to challenge that evidence. 1962 Nag L J 616 : 64 Bom L R 303 : 1962 (2) Cri L J 466 : I L R (1962) Bom 472 : A I R 1962 Bom 229 (234) (Pt C) (Pr 13) (DB).

——S. 146-A—Does not violate Art. 14 of Constitution.

Under the Bombay Prohibition Act certain responsibilities have been thrust upon certain officers and certain corresponding powers have also been conferred for enabling them to carry out those responsibilities. The position of an officer or a person entrusted with the responsibilities of carrying out the duties under the Bombay Prohibition Act is not the same as the position of an ordinary citizen. A person, who is entrusted with the responsibilities of carrying on the provisions of the Bombay Prohibition Act, would not be ordinarily responsible for what he has done in good faith. His powers are statutory and his action would be liable to be impugned only when that action is either in excess of his powers or in abuse of the powers conferred on him. In case of excessive use or abuse of powers, he may make himself liable either for an action in tort or for a criminal prosecution. If however it is established that he has done these acts under colour of the authority or in the discharge of his rights then it is necessary to prescribe a time limit for bringing the erring officer to book so as to protect him from vexatious and frivolous actions and prosecutions. It is this policy which underlies the provisions contained in S. 146-A of the Bombay Prohibition Act. The classification between those entrusted with certain responsibilities under the statute and those who have no such responsibilities but who are ordinary citizens is clear and reasonable in view of the fact that special responsibilities have been thrust upon one class whereas there is no such responsibility upon the other class. The differentia on which this classification is based is quite clear and easily intelligible. That being the case, the classification on which the rule of limitation in S. 146-A of the Bombay Prohibition Act has been based cannot be attacked as being violative of the principle laid down under Art. 14 of the Constitution of India.

Once it is held that it is open to the Legislature to provide a period of limitation during which actions or prosecutions must be started against a group of persons, then it is entirely in the discretion of the Legislature to put down the period of limitation. Merely because, under S. 161 of the Bombay Police Act the period of limitation is mentioned as six months and under S. 146-A of the Bombay Prohibition Act, it has been laid down as four months, the second legislation cannot be considered to be offending against the principle of equality before the law. Further, the reason why the Legislature, in this particular case, must have laid down a smaller period of limitation than provided in S. 161 of the Bombay Police Act, appears to be apparent in the very nature of the duties entrusted to the persons under the Prohibition Act. In the very nature of things the offences under the Bombay Prohibition Act are bound to be more numerous than the offences under ordinary law. There may be many more cases where raids would be effected and houses searched. Some of these raids may be carried on, on the basis of suspicion engendered by the information given to the police officers. It would not be correct to allow the sword of prosecution or action against such persons hanging for a long time. That seems to be the reason behind putting down the period at four months under S. 146-A of the Bombay Prohibition Act. 66 Bom L R 476 : 1964 Mah L J 561 : I L R (1964) Bom 691.

The doctor who took the blood out of the body of the accused did not say that he had handed over the phial to the Police Constable. Police Constable No. 494 was examined. Held, that there was no clear proof that the report received in Court was the report on the analysis of the blood taken out by the doctor on the particular day from the body of the accused (See Prohibition — Bombay Prohibition Act (25 of 1949), S. 66(1)(b). 1961 Nag L J (Notes) 47 (Bom).

——S. 1—Policy of Act — Duty of Court — Prohibition Acts—Policy held constitutional — See Interpretation of Statutes. 52 Cri L J 1140 : AIR 1951 Nag 58 (FB).

——S. 1—Validity of the Act—Government of India Act (1935) List II Item 31 & List 1, Items 19, 34—Constitution of India, Art. 372 (1).

In view of the wide meaning which one must attribute to the term 'intoxicating liquors' in Item 31 of the Second list in Sch. 7 to the Government of India Act, 1935, it must be taken that the entire subject of the control, including the prohibition of its use could be legislated upon by the provincial legislature. The provincial legislature must be taken to be possessed of such plenary powers of legislation on this topic as the Imperial Parliament itself. The C. P. & Berar Prohibition Act, 1938, was, therefore, validly enacted by the Legislature. Further it cannot be challenged on the ground of repugnancy to items

19 & 34 of List as a close examination of the provisions shows that the entire subject is related to intoxicating liquors and the effect of items Nos. 19 & 44 of the first list is merely incidental. The Prohibition Act is continued in force unaffected after the Constitution under Art. 372 (1) except in so far as its validity could be brought into question by reason of the non obstante clause in Art. 13 (1). Case law referred, Sheoshankar v. State of Govt. of Madhya Pradesh, 52 Cri L J 1140 : ILR (1951) Nag 646 : AIR 1951 Nag 58 (73) (Pt G) (Prs 105, 110, 111) (FB).

● —S. 1—Validity — Whether infringes Art. 19 (1) (f) — Property — Meaning — Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (f).

What the Constitution safeguards is a right to property or to follow a trade. It does not guarantee that what is regarded as property or what is regarded as an object of trade shall for ever be continued to be so regarded. The legislature having come to the conclusion that the consumption of intoxicating liquor is not in the public interest its conclusion is not open to question before a Court of law. From this conclusion, it follows that intoxicating liquor must be regarded as a noxious object. It therefore ceases to be a legitimate object of 'property' or a legitimate object of commerce. What has been rendered contraband cannot be the object of 'property.' The general right to property or to carry on any activity is not unreasonably restricted merely because a particular commodity is excepted from its purview in the public interest. Liquor is not an innocuous article and regulation or prohibition of its consumption by the C. P. & Berar Act, 1938 therefore, does not infringe the provisions of Art. 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. Sheoshankar v. State Govt. of Madhya Pradesh. 52 Cri L J 1140 : ILR (1951) Nag 646 : AIR 1951 Nag 58 (63, 65, 84) (Pt J) (Prs 17, 41, 175) (FB).

● —Ss. 1 (3) & 1A—Validity — Whether amount to territorial discrimination or constitute delegation of legislative power.

Section 1 (2) of the Prohibition Act makes it clear that it is enacted not for any part of Province but for the whole of it. The provisions contained in subsection (3) of S. 1 and S. 1A cannot therefore be regarded as discriminatory but are only instances of conditional legislation. It is well settled that a legislature may delegate the power to determine the conditions or contingencies under which a statute shall be operative even though such conditions may be determined by the Government.

Moreover, it stands to reason that when a measure of social reform such as the Prohibition Act, 1938 which, on the one hand, denudes the State of a large revenue and on the other, imposes additional duties and expenses for the purposes of preventing and penalising the evasion of the law, it should be applied stage by stage and in the light of the experience gained. For this reason, power must be conferred upon someone to determine the "conditions and circumstances" in which the measure would be applied. The conferral of such power by the legislature upon Govt. is neither delegation of legislative power nor discrimination and so, the impugned provisions are perfectly valid. Sheoshankar v. State Govt. of Madhya Pradesh. 52 Cri L J 1140 : ILB (1951) Nag 646 : AIR 1951 Nag 58 (85) (Pt K) (Pr 182) (FB).

● —Ss. 1-A and 1(3)—Validity—The provisions contained in sub-s. (3) of S. 1 and S. 1-A cannot be regarded as discriminatory but are instances of only conditional legislation. The conferral of power to determine the condition and circumstances in which the measure should be applied does not amount to territorial discrimination or constitute delegation of legislative power — See Prohibition—C. —S. 6 (1) (a) and (g) — Contraband articles found in compound—Offence.

Where contraband articles were found in the compound of the house of the accused and not from the house itself and the accused was convicted under S. 6 (1) (a) and (g) of the Prohibition Act:

Held, that compound is a place which is accessible to other persons than the accused and if any contraband articles were found in the compound it could not be held that those articles were in exclusive use of the accused. 1960 Nag L J (Notes) 91 (Bom).

—S. 6 (1) (j)—For conviction under S. 6 (1) (j) of the Act, it is essential to prove that liquor was consumed in the prohibited area—Mere smelling of person's mouth of liquor is not sufficient for the conviction — Intoxication means impairing physical or mental faculties. 1963 M P L J (Notes) 226.

—S. 6 (1) (a) — Utensils and articles merely smelling liquor—Presumption—Conviction on mere smell —Legality.

The accused persons were alleged to possess liquor and when the police party entered the house after breaking open the doors, some liquid was found flowing inside the house and there was much smell of liquor.

Held, that merely from the smell of the instruments and utensils, it could not be possible to say that the articles seized contained liquor or that the accused were in possession of the liquor. 1959 M P L J (Notes) 135.

—S. 6 (1)—State of intoxication—Meaning.

The expression "a state of intoxication" denotes that as a result of his consumption of some liquor a man's physical or mental faculties have been appreciably and materially impaired in the conduct of the ordinary affairs or acts of daily life.

When the accused was convicted under S. 6 (1) of the C. P. and Bear Prohibition Act only on the basis that he was found in a state of intoxication only on the evidence of the doctor who had deposed that "his breath smelt of liquor, pupils were moderately dilated, speech was slurring to a little degree but his gait was steady and he was not intoxicated."

Held, that the accused was not guilty. 1957 M P L J (Notes) 190.

● —Ss. 6 (1), Proviso, 29 (2) and 32 (a)—Validity—Whether discriminatory within Art. 14 (1) of the Constitution—Constitution of India, Art. 14 (1).

Per Mangalmurti and Mudholkar JJ.: The Court will not pronounce the law itself as discriminatory even though it lends itself to the practice of discrimination unless it is clear that in the guise of conferral of discretion upon an authority arbitrary power is given to it with the sole or dominant intention that it be used for favouring or oppressing a particular class, community, race or other group. 321 U S 1, Rel. on.

There is no reason for saying that Ss. 6 (1), Proviso, 29(2) and 32(a) are made with an ulterior object of favouring or oppressing particular class community or group. Section 29(2) in particular which enables the Provincial Government to exempt any person or class of persons from all or any of the provisions of the Act or of the rules made thereunder recognises the principle that persons differently situated where the difference in situation is real may have to be exempted from the operation of the Act. The mere conferring of power of exemption does not itself create inequality and hence neither the proviso to S. 6(1) nor S. 29 (2) is rendered void by Art. 14(1) of the Constitution. Similarly Cl. (a) of S. 32 is not void because of the power it confers upon certain officers to put in special class those who obtain his consent by way of the permit issued thereunder.

Per Hidayatullah J.:—By reason of the inequality which underlies Rr. 7 and 7-A these rules and S. 29(2), which enables the Provincial Government to enact such rules are void under the present Constitution. SECTION 13

——S. 13 (a)—Applicability—Search — Non-compliance with S. 40 – Police carrying out search assaulted —Offence—S. 332, Penal Code.

Section 13 (a) would apply only when the person who is assaulted or obstructed is exercising powers under the Act. The source of authority of the police officers to make a search is S. 40 of the Act. One of the requirements of S. 40 is that before an officer competent to make a search without a warrant proceeds to make a search, he must record the grounds for his belief that he has reason to believe that an offence in respect of any liquor punishable under Chap. III has been committed and that the delay occasioned by obtaining a search warrant under S. 38 will prevent the execution thereof.

The provision in this regard contained in S. 40 is evidently enacted for protecting persons from vexatious searches. Non-compliance with such a provision would render a search illegal. Since the search made by a Police Officer without complying with S. 40 is illegal, it cannot be said to be one made by him in the exercise of his powers under the Prohibition Act. If he is assaulted or obstructed in carrying out such search the person or persons assaulting him or obstructing him cannot be held guilty under S. 13 (a), C. P. and Berar Prohibition Act or S. 322, Penal Code. 1956 Nag L J 745 : 1956 M P L J 169 : 1957 Cr L J 1298 (2) : AIR 1957 Nag 93 (93, 94) (Prs 5, 6).

——S. 24 — Confiscation of property of innocent person—(Justice, equity and good conscience).

The section confers a discretion on the Court concerned to order confiscation of such articles which has to be exercised judicially. From this it would follow that the Court has to consider all the circumstances present in the case and make such order as would accord with justice, equity and good conscience. Surely, confiscation of an article belonging to an innocent person would not accord with justice, equity and good conscience. 1957 Nag L J 120.

——S. 24 — Scope — Construction of — (Civil P. C. (1908), Pre)—(Interpretation of Statutes).

No doubt, the language of S. 24 is very wide but, it would not be right to give that language a wider meaning than is required for the purposes of giving effect to the provisions of the Act. It would not be in consonance with the well-established principles of construction of statutes to construe that provision in such a way as to affect the proprietary rights of innocent persons. 1957 Nag L J 120.

——Ss. 24 and 25 (2) Proviso—Confiscation — Right of party to show that he was not connected with the offence — (Justice, equity and good conscience) — Natural justice).

Under the proviso to sub-s. (2) of S. 25 where any article seized appears to be liable to confiscation under S. 24, but the person who committed the offence under the Prohibition Act in connection therewith is not known or cannot be found, it is incumbent on the authority making the order of confiscation to hear the person who claims any right thereto, record evidence adduced on behalf of suoh person and adjudicate on his rights. In principle, there is no reason why even when the perpetrator of an offence is known, the actual owner of a property should not be in a like position to have his claims examined when he has nothing to do with the offence. Indeed, it would be contrary to the principles of natural justice to deprive a person of his rights to property without his being heard and without proper adjudication being made upon his claim. 1957 Nag L J 120.

——S. 25 (2) Proviso—Confiscation—Right of party to show that he was not connected with the offence.

Under the proviso to sub-s. (2) of S. 25 where an article seized appears to be liable to confiscation under S. 24, but the person who committed the offence under the Prohibition Act in connection therewith is not known or cannot be found, it is incumbent on the authority making the order of confiscation to hear the person who claims any right thereto, record evidence adduced on behalf of such person and adjudicate upon his rights. 1957 Nag L J 120.

SECTION 28-H

——Ss. 28-H, 28-A and 6—Manufacture of medicinal preparation is outside operation of S. 6.

Section 28-H only affects the sale of 'regulated tinctures'. The control in S. 28-H is applied at the stage of sale and not of manufacture and cannot be read to embrace the latter. The only consequences which ensue when a tincture is notified as a 'regulated tincture' are mentioned in that and the next section. Indeed, by S. 28-A the manufacture of medicinal preparations is placed outside the operation of S. 6, and there is thus no prohibition of the manufacture of genuine medicinal preparations, and there cannot be, after 'Balsara's case', AIR 1951 S C 138.

The Prohibition Act does not, therefore, seek to regulate the manufacture of genuine medicinal preparations and does not confer on the State Government the power to do so.

There is no authority or provision of law which enables the executive to ban the manufacture of genuine drugs prepared in conformity with the terms of the licence under the Drugs Act. While the Act desires the control of regulated tinctures at the stage of consumption and sale, the Executive cannot apply the control at a stage prior to sale and consumption by forbidding even the manufacture of genuine medicinal products.

While the two notifications issued under the authority of Ss. 28-H and 28-I of the Prohibition Act are not void because they regulate sale and consumption of medicinal products with a view to preventing their misuse by addicts, the same cannot be said of the three memoranda issued subsequently.

In these three memoranda it was stated that the petitioner who held licence to import rectified spirit, must manufacture only twenty tinctures of which a list was given. Considering that out of 60 tinctures only 20 were to be manufactured, these orders amounted to an interference, without the authority of law, with the rights of pharmaceutical works to manufacture standard drugs under their licence.

Courts are not required to consider whether the prohibition of the manufacture of tinctures is a reasonable restriction or not, because the Legislature has not authorised the Executive to prohibit manufacture. It has only authorised the executive to regulate sales and has prohibited consumption.

The executive control of manufacture in excess of the Drugs Act and the Prohibition Act is tantamount to adding one more Section to Part III-A of the Prohibition Act. This is not to regulate manufacture but to stop it altogether. ILR (1956) Nag 157 : AIR 1956 Nag 1 (6) (Pt C) (Prs 29, 30, 31, 32) (DB).

——S. 28-H—Condition of permit—Validity.

Condition 2-A reiterating S. 28-H and the system of permits cannot be said to be illegal. ILR (1956) Nag 157 : AIR 1956 Nag 1 (8) (Pt H) (Pr 49) (DB).

SECTION 29

■ ——Ss. 29 (2) and 32 — Validity — Discrimination between persons — Constitution of India, Art. 14 — The conferring of the power of execution under S. 29 (2) does not itself create inequality and hence neither the Proviso to S. 6 (1) nor S. 29 (2) is rendered void by Art. 14 of the Constitution. See Prohibition—C. P. and Berar Prohibition Act (1938), S. 6 (1), Proviso. 52 Cri L J 1140 : AIR 1951 Nag 58 (FB).

■ —Ss. 29 (2), 32 (a)—Validity—Whether amount to delegation of legislative power.

The power delegated by Ss. 29 (2) and 32 (a) is not a legislative power. It is merely a power to determine the circumstances in which the law shall be applied or to what areas its operation shall be extended or the particular class of persons to whom it shall be applied. The sections are not therefore invalid on the ground that they amount to delegation of legislative power. AIR 1945 P C 48, Rel. on; AIR 1951 S C 69, Ref. Sheoshankar v. State Govt. of Madhya Pradesh, 52 Cri L J 1140 : ILR (1951) Nag 646 : AIR 1951 Nag 58 (89) (Pt O) (Pr 210) (FB).

——S. 30—Limiting supply of rectified spirit.

If the right of the petitioner to carry on the business of manufacturing standard and genuine medicines is not taken away, that business cannot be stopped or, in other words, destroyed by the indirect method of limiting unduly the supply of the main ingredient. S. 28-A of the Prohibition Act excepts the preparation of medicinal products from the operation of S. 6 and thereby ensures the right to carry on the business.

Section 33 provides that conditions may be imposed. Rule 5 of the Central Provinces and Berar Rectified Spirit Rules, 1942, says that a bona fide manufacturer of medicinal preparation shall be entitled to India-made rectified spirit and lays down certain conditions. These conditions do not give a power to cut down arbitrarily the quantity to nothing. No doubt, no manufacturer can claim to obtain all the spirit he says he needs. The need must be made out.

The extent to which this can go must depend upon the supply, the need disclosed and the nature and extent of the business. But unless there is a good ground for cutting short the supply, it must normally be allowed. The Legislature has left the discretion to the executive and to its good sense. The Deputy Commissioner while exercising that discretion must have regard to the facts and act reasonably and justly.

That the licensing authorities have discretion in the matter is true enough, but such discretion must be reasonably exercised.

A supply of six bottles of spirit a day held could not be said to be very generous since the manufacture was thereby limited to a dozen pint bottles of medicines per day, where the drugs which the petitioner manufactured. were aquae, essences, extracts, liquors, liniments, spirits, syrups, and tinctures all containing rectified spirit. The order fixing 500 gallons as the quantity when petitioner demanded 25,000 gallons, held must be declared arbitrary and unwarranted. The quantity was ordered to be refixed. ILR (1956) Nag 157 : AIR 1956 Nag 1 (7, 8) (Pt E) (Prs 37, 38, 41, 42) (DB).

——S. 30 — Permit for importing rectified spirit — Subsequent reduction of quota—Validity.

Where a condition in a permit granted to import rectified spirit lays down that the maximum quota of rectified spirit fixed for the period of the permit may be reduced at any time, the condition cannot be examined apart from the facts on which it may be exercised in any given case. There may be a hundred reasons for cutting down the quota; but whatever the reason, it must be one permitted by the Prohibition Act and the Rules. It must also be fair and just. ILR (1956) Nag 157 : AIR 1956 Nag 1 (8) (Pt F) (Pr 43) (DB).

However well-intentioned the move, the Executive ought never to forget that every seizure of private property by Government agency must be justifiable in law. The C. P. and Berar Prohibition Act, 1938 and M. P. Prohibition (Amendment) Act, 1953 and the Rules, etc., thereunder, do not sanction the seizure of rectified spirit, imported on a valid permit after payment of the prescribed fee, unless there is some breach of the Acts or Rules.

Seizure made when there was no breach of licence conditions or provisions of Act or Rules is a flagrant invasion of private property, wholly unjustified either in law or in fact. ILR (1956) Nag 157 : AIR 1956 Nag 1 (5) (Pt A) (Pr 26) (DB).

——S. 68 (2) (m), R. 5 — Application for licence in form MF II rejected by Deputy Commissioner—Appeal dismissed by Director of Excise and Prohibition without giving hearing—Legality.

Rule 5 of the Rules framed by the Madhya Pradesh Government on 31-5-1938 under S. 68 (2) (m) of the C. P. and Berar Prohibition Act in terms provides that the appellate authority may either admit the appeal or after calling for the record and giving the appellant an opportunity to be heard, may summarily reject it provided that the appellate authority shall not be bound to call for the record where the appeal is time-barred or does not lie. R. 5 conferred a right on the person preferring the appeal to be heard before the appeal is disposed of. The order dismissing the appeal not barred by time, without giving a hearing to the dealer-appellant, was therefore liable to be set aside. 1960 Nag L J (Notes) 6.

——S. 68 (2) (f)—Regulating manufacture of medicinal liquor.

Section 30 of the Prohibition Act requires that a licence must be taken out. If the manufacture of genuine medicines is not banned then under the powers granted by S. 68 (2) (f) the quantity cannot be limited. It is obvious enough that the right to manufacture genuine medicines cannot be taken away indirectly by restricting the quantity.

Section 28-A which has been enacted after the decision in 'Balsara's case', AIR 1951 S C 318 cannot be rendered otiose by action under S. 68 (2) (f). The word 'regulate' in the latter section must be given a meaning consistent with S. 28-A and 'Balsara's case'. When the authorities restrict the quantity for manufacturing purposes the authorities may be called upon to justify their action. ILR (1956) Nag 157 : AIR 1956 Nag 1 (8) (Pt G) (Prs 46, 47, 48) (DB).

The co-existence of all the symptoms which have been spoken to by P. —— S. 3 (2) (a), (1) (a)—Articles found in house of accused — Accused will be presumed to have committed offence under S. 3 (1) (a).

The possession referred to in S. 3 (2) (a) refers to physical possession as distinguished from legal possession. Where the articles were found in the house of the accused, prima facie he was in possession of those articles. Hence S. 3 (2) (a) raised a presumption that he was guilty of an offence under S. 3 (1) (a) unless he accounted for his possession satisfactorily. SECTION 2

——S. 2 (a) — Where a woman cannnot prevent her husband from keeping the contraband article in the house a Court will not be justified in presuming that everything found in the house is invariably in the joint possession of the house holder and his wife, as it is the mere knowledge of the presence in the house of the offending article is insufficient to raise the presumption against her. See Prohibition — Kerala Prohibition Act (T. C. Act 1950), S. 8 (1) (a). 1964 Mad L J (Cri) 615 (Ker).

——S. 4(2)(a)—Presumption as to possession of illicit liquor—Presumption normally attaches to head of family — Exception to this normal rule.

The presumption of possession of contraband liquor attaches itself to the head of the family as normally it is his will that prevails in the household. He can wield the authority to see that an article either remains in the house if he so desires or is removed from the house if he does not want it there. If, however, the nominal head of the family is an old man and the effective control over the household is exercised by someone else such as an adult son then there is little justification in holding him responsible for no reason other than that theoretically, he still remains the head of the family. (1963) K L T 661, Foll. 1964 Ker L J 901 : 1964 Ker L T 683:1964 Mad L J (Cri) 615: ILR (1964) 2 Ker 662.

——S. 4 (2) (a) — Possession of husband of illicit liquor — It is not necessarily possession of his wife.

Per Anna Chandy, J. — According to the common course of human conduct, the woman of the house cannot prevent the contraband liquor from being kept in the house, if her husband insists that it should be. If that be so, a Court will not be justified in presuming that everything found in a house is invariably in the joint possession of the householder and his wife. The mere knowledge of the presence in the house of the offending article is insufficient to raise the presumption against the wife.

Per Govinda Menon, J. — The question whether a particular person, be it husband or wife, is in possession of contraband has to be decided on the facts and circumstances of each particular case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in which case it could be stated that the wife is not in possession of the incriminating article. Circumstances there might be in a particular case from which it could easily be inferred that the wife is also in possession along with her husband and in such a case the presumption under S. 4 (2) (a) of the Act would arise. 1964 Ker L J 901 : 1964 Ker L T 683:1964 Mad L J (Cri) 615 : ILR (1964) 2 Ker 662.

——S. 8 — Possession of illicit liquor — It need not be exclusive.

Possession of the conraband liquor need not be exclusive for it to amount to an offence under the Prohibition Act. A person can be found guilty of possession even if he is shown to have been in possession of the contraband jointly with others. (1963) Ker L T 661, Foll. 1964 Ker L J 901 : 1964 Ker L T 683 : 1964 Mad L J (Cri) 615 : ILR (1964) 2 Ker 662.

——S. 8 (1) (a) and (2) (a) — Contraband recovered from a house — Women of the house whether guilty of possession of those articles — Presumption to be drawn — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114.

Per Anna Chandy, J. — The presumption that articles in a person's house are in his possession is a presumption under S. 114 of the Evidence Act which permits a Court "to presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to facts of the particular case." It has to be presumed that the head of the family is responsible for the contraband found in the house because according to common course of human conduct the head of the family can, if he does not desire its presence in his house, secure its removal irrespective of the wishes of the other members of the household. Would it also be likely, according to the common course of human conduct, that the woman of the house can prevent the contraband from being kept in the house if her husband insists that it should be ? In most cases the answer must be in the negative. If that be so, a Court will not be justified in presuming that everything found in a house is invariably in the joint possession of the householder and his wife. Knowing that the contraband is present in the house is not the same thing as possessing it. If the contraband was recovered from a room under her custody or from a box containing her own things then there might have been some justification in calling upon the wife to explain its presence. As it is, the mere knowledge of the presence in the house of the offending article is insufficient to raise the presumption against her.

Per Govinda Menon, J. — The question whether a particular person, be it husband or wife is in possession of contraband has to be decided on the facts and circumstances of each particular case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in which case it would be stated that the wife is not in possession of the incriminating article. Circumstances there might be in a particular case from which it could easily be inferred that the wife is also in possession along with her husband and in such a case the presumption under S. 8 (2) (a) of the Act would arise. 1964 Ker L J 901 : 1964 Ker L T 683 : (1964) 2 Ker L R 280 : ILR (1964) 2 Ker 662 : (1964) Mad L J (Cri) 615 (Ker).

However well-intentioned the move, the executive ought never to forget that every seizure of private property by governmental agency must be justifiable in law. The C P. and Berar Prohibition Act, 1938 and M. P. Prohibition (Amendment) Act, 1953 and the Rules thereunder, do not sanction the seizure of rectified spirit imported on a valid permit after payment of the prescribed fee unless there is some breach of the Act or Rules. Seizure made when there was no breach of licence conditions or provisions of Act or Rules is a flagrant invasion of private property, wholly unjustified either in law or in fact. See C. —MADRAS PROHIBITION ACT (10 of 1937)

——Applicability — Has no operation beyond the territorial limits of the State of Madras.

The Madras Prohibition Act (10 of 1937) extends only to the State of Madras and it is obvious that any act of omission or commission which constitutes an offence under the Madras Prohibition Act should be committed within the limits of the State of Madras. The Act has no operation beyond the territorial limits of the State of Madras. Prosecution under the Madras Prohibition Act in respect of an offence committed within the boundary limits of the State of Kerala and outside the limits of the State of Madras would be incompetent. The fact that the same act is made an offence under corresponding provision of the Travancore-Cochin Prohibition Act on the same pattern as the Madras Act cannot alter this position. 1965 Mad L J (Cri) 822 : 78 Mad L W 694 : (1965) 2 M L J 379.

See Prohibition — Madras Prohibition Act (1937), S. 4 (1) (a). 1961 Ker L J 1154 : 1961 Ker L T 992.

——S. 3 (19) and S. 4 (1) (a) — Transporting liquor — What amounts to.

While a person carrying contraband liquor could definitely be said to be in 'possession' of the contraband, such mere possession cannot by itself lead to any inference of the offence of transporting such liquor. Possession of the contraband and transporting it are two distinct offences and the latter attracts a minimum sentence of imprisonment under the Act. A person may be in possession of liquor without transporting it; he may be transporting it without being in possession as in cases where the causes to be moved from place to place without his accompanying it; and finally he may be both in possession of the contraband and may be engaging himself in its transport when of course he may be convicted for both the distinct offences. The purpose of the transport cannot determine the offence. The transport need not be for commercial purpose and even transport for personal consumption will amount to the offence of transporting. Though the quantity of the liquor carried may be relevant it is not decisive. Nor could the distance between one place and another where the accused is apprehended furnish a basis of distinction. Where an accused is taking contraband with knowledge that he is taking it from one place to another, and is physically in possession, the mere fact that he is ultimately going to consume it himself or the fact that the quantity is small, will not afford any principle on which he could be convicted for the offence of possession only and not for transporting. ——Ss. 3 (9), 4, 16 (1), 18, 23 and Forms III-A; III-B and III-C — Validity — Constitution of India, Art. 9 (1) (f).

The provisions of the Madras Prohibition Act, 1937, except S. 23 (2), in so far as they relate to medicinal preparations are regulatory and reasonable in character and do not contravene the provisions of Art. 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution and are valid.

A statute relating to prohibition of intoxicating liquors can validly regulate the manufacture, sale and consumption of allied products like medicinal preparations, not for the purpose of interfering with the rights of citizens to acquire, hold or dispose of them; but for preventing them from being diverted from their true purpose and utilised for defeating the provisions of the law relating to prohibition. Since impugned provisions can be regarded as a proper regulation of medicinal preparations as their object is not to prevent their user as medicine but to prevent intoxicating liquors being passed off under the lable of medicinal preparations, they must be held to be valid as being incidental to the enforcement of prohibition. A I R 1951 S C 318; A I R 1951 Bom 210; A I R 1933 P C 16; (1912) 57 Law Ed. 184; (1919) 64 Law Ed. 260; (1924) 69 Law Ed 1054, Ref. to.

In enacting a prohibition law with reference to intoxicating liquor the legislature intended to take out bona fide medicinal preparations out of the operation of S. 4 and introduced for that purpose a system of licensing and when the Constitution came into force there was both the enactment and the Notifications under the Act all in operation as part of one scheme of prohibition and regulation.

Section 18 of the Act and the licences issued thereunder which are reasonable, cannot be held to be void because of the inclusion of medicinal preparations in the definitions of "liquor" under S. 3 (9).

Section 23 (2) which authorises the Government to cancel or suspend a licence without assigning any reasons therefor, is unconstitutional and void as the exercise of a fundamental right cannot be made to depend on the unfettered discretion of executive authorities. (1953) 2 Mad L J 724 : 1953 Mad W N 909 : A I R 1954 Mad 643 (646, 647, 648, 649, 650) (Pt A) (Prs 11, 16, 22, 23, 27) (DB).

——Ss. 3 (1) and 4 (1) (h) — Licensee reducing bulk from bigger bottles to smaller bottles in course of business — Offence of bottling under S. 4 (1) (h) if committed.

The process of bottling as contemplated by S. 3 (1) obviously is applicable to firms who deal in brandy and also to persons who manufacture large quantities and then divide them into smaller quantities in order to facilitate the distribution and disposal of the quantities manufactured by them. It is too much straining of the language contained in the definition in S. 3 (1) to say that a chemist who is permitted to sell liquor by itself in quantities not exceeding two ounces is bottling or re-bottling. It would be legitimate act on the part of the licensee to keep liquor in smaller bottles to facilitate his trade as a chemist so long as he acts within the directions of his licence. Hence, where he reduces the bulk from bigger bottles to smaller bottles in the course of business and trade he commits no offence under S. 4 (1) (h). 64 Mad L W 663 : 1951 Mad W N 595 : 1951 Mad W N (Cri) 171 : (1951) 2 Mad L J 195 : 1952 Cri L J 48 : A I R 1951 Mad 996 (996) (Pr 1).

——Ss. 3 (a) and 4 (1) (a) — Varnish containing denatured spirit comes within definition of liquor — Its possession by a carpenter for legitimate use is not however an offence — Principle of de minimis non curat lex applies. See Prohibition—Madras Prohibition Act (1937), S. 4(1) (a). 51 Cri L J 452 (1) : A I R 1950 Mad 145.

——S. 3 (9)—'Asavas' and 'Aristas' are 'liquor'—Scope of Notification under S. 16.

The prosecution case itself was that seized articles are 'Aristas' and 'Asavas' manufactured by a reputed firm. The Chemical Examiner who is examined as P. W. 5 in this case, was not sure whether the 'Asavas' and 'Aristas' concerned in this case contain self-generated spirit. In short, the prosecution has not satisfactorily established that the 'Asavas' and 'Aristas' do not fall within the scope of Notification, No. 941. So long as one is not in a position to say that the 'Asavas' and 'Aristas' concerned in this case are not purely 'Asavas' and 'Aristas' containing self-generated spirit, the accused are entitled to the benefit of the exemption found in clause (a) of the aforesaid Notification. ——S. 4—Scope—Section is not discriminatory and is not invalid—(Constitution of India, Art. 14).

The fact that certain actions are made offences and are visited with penal consequences, while other actions are not, has never been understood to contravene the rule of equal protection of the laws. It is also obvious that the same procedure cannot be made applicable for every offence. There is no discrimination made against persons accused of offences under the Madras Prohibition Act. There is no difference in procedure, because the procedure as laid down under the Code of Criminal Procedure will apply to the trial of offences under the Prohibition Act. The enactment of a special presumption under S. 4 (2) of the Act in certain circumstances does not offend Article 14 of the Constitution in any manner. Section 4 (2) of the Prohibition Act is neither invalid nor unconstitutional on any ground. ILR (1955) Mad 887 : 1954 Mad W N 575 : (1954) 2 Mad L J 475 : 1954 Cri L J 1521 : A I R 1954 Mad 993 (998) (Pt D) (Pr 20) (DB).

2. Sub-section (1).

—S. 4 (1) (a) — Transport of liquor and possession of liquor — Distinction — Accused proceeding with small quantity of liquor on his person — Held to be guilty of transporting liquor.

While a person may possess without transporting and one may equally transport without possession, a person may possess and transport, in which case he will be committing both the offences. It cannot be said that the purpose of the transport determines the offence, for a Court is bound by the terms of the enactment, and the legislature has made no such distinction. A person who takes liquor from one place to another, not for sale to some one else but for his own consumption at some ultimate destination, is to be considered, as engaged in 'transport' of the contraband. The legislature has not laid it down that the transport must be for commercial purposes or that it is transport for sale alone which is punishable, and not transport for personal consumption. Again, the quantity of liquor carried may be relevant, but it cannot be decisive. For, here again, the legislature has not laid it down that the offence of transport can be committed only if the contraband is appreciable in quantity, or only if it exceeds a particular quantity. The distance of the ultimate destination, whatever it might be from the place at which the offender is apprehended, again, may not furnish any true basis for distinction. Where it is clear that a person is taking contraband, with the knowledge that he is taking it from one place to another, and he is physically in possession, the mere fact that he is ultimately going to consume it himself, or the fact that the quantity is not considerable, will not afford any principle on which he can be convicted for possession alone, and acquitted as regards the charge of transport. 1958 Mad W N (Cri) (SC) 97, Rel. on; AIR 1938 Bom 43, Not foll.

The accused was apprehended at about 10.30 p. m. on 6.5.1963 on the southern bund of Panchanthangi while he was proceeding along that bund. He was actually carrying a bottle containing 4 drams of arrack, tucked up in the clothes of his waist.

Held, that there was no justification for holding that the accused was not engaged in 'transport' of the contraband. The purpose with which he was so engaged was really immaterial, But the quantity was small, and presumably he was intending to consume the liquor himself, and was not engaged in trafficking in the commodity. Had he been stationary at the time of arrest, or had he consumed the liquor immediately before arrest, he would have been liable for other offences alone, which would involve no minimum punishment. These were special circumstances extenuating the character of the offence, though they did not affect the legal propriety of the conviction for the offence of transport. 1965 Mad L J (Cr) 114 : (1965) 1 Mad L J 156.

—S. 4 (1) (a) — Possession — Possession connotes something more than mere knowledge of presence of contraband article — It has to be inferred from circumstances of case. (1965) 78 Mad L W 226.

—Ss. 4 (1) (a) and 5 — Spirit or preparation containing spirit—Person in possession of — Rendering or attempting to render it fit for human consumption — No knowledge or reason to believe — Conviction for possession of liquor only sustainable.

The petitioner was not detected in rendering or attempting to render fit for humman consumption, the spirit or preparation containing spirit. The latter part of S. 5 of the Madras Prohibition Act requires that the person in possession of the preparation so rendered potable must know or have reason to believe that such an attempt had been made. In the absence of any evidence on this aspect, no inference to that effect can be drawn from mere possession of the preparation. The conviction under S. 5 of the Act cannot be sustained; it can only be under S. 4 (1) (a) of the Act namely possession of liquor or an intoxicating ing drug. 1964 Mad L J (Cri) 210 : (1964) 1 Mad L J 280.

—Ss. 4 (1) and 16 — Tincture ginger beris being a preparation which comes within the exempted categories its consumption under medical prescription is not an offence—Accused need not prove that he purchased the stuff from a source authorized to sell the same—Sale of such stuff without permit by a chemist may be some other offence but the accused commits no offence so long as he takes the exempted tincture under a medical prescription. (1964) Mad L J (Cri) 209 : (1964) 1 Mad L J 292.

—Ss. 4 (1) (j) and 16—Consuming liquor specified among the exempted category—If an offence.

Under S. 16 of the Madras Prohibition Act the Government has the power to exempt certain categories of preparations containing alcohol, even in large proportions, from the operation of the Madras Prohibition Act. Hence it will not be an offence under S. 4 (1) (j) of the Act to consume a stuff in the exempted category. Though it may be that the sale of even such an exempted stuff is licensed, its consumption will not be an offence under S. 4 (1) (j) of the Act and an accused is under no duty to prove that he obtained the stuff from a source authorised to sell the same. 1964 Mad L J (Cri) 209 : (1964) 1 Mad L J 292.

After the enactment of the Madras Prohibition Supplementary Act (11 of 1941), the Hemp Drug Rules including R. 23 framed under the Indian Abkari Act, are not in force. Hence, the possession of 1/16 tola of Ganja after that enactment, is an offence, under S. 4 (1) (a), Madras Prohibition Act. Hence where some of the bottles of medicine exempted under the Act are found to contain more spirits the dealer will not be liable to conviction under S. 4 (1) (a). 1951 Mad W N 381 : 1951 Mad W N (Cri) 109 : 64 Mad W N 477 : (1951) 1 Mad L J 698 : 52 Cri L J 1058 : AIR 1951 Mad 883 (2) (884) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

——S. 4 (1) (j)—Consumption of intoxicating drug—Burden of proof—Mere breath smell—If sufficient to base conviction.

In the absence of any other evidence an inference cannot possibly be drawn from the mere breath smell of the accused that he had consumed arrack. The burden is on the prosecution to prove that alcohol of which the accused was smelling is such that it came within the category of prohibited drugs. Where the doctor who examined the accused stated that the accused was smelling of arrack but in cross-examination said that if B. G. Phos was taken there was possibility for the smell to come if that tonic contained sufficient percentage of alcohol and further stated that he did not examine the stomach contents of the accused, or his blood or urine because he was convinced that the smell was of arrack :

Held, that in the absence of examination of stomach contents or the blood or the urine, sufficient doubt was created as to what the doctor deposed was correct and it was not safe to base conviction on mere suspicion. (1957) Mad L J (Cri) 623 : (1957) 2 An W R 413.

——Ss. 4 (1) (a) and 34—Conviction solely based on evidence of officer who conducted search—Legality.

The evidence of the prosecutor may or may not be reliable. All the same, it cannot be denied that it will be extremely unsafe and risky to convict an accused on the strength of the evidence of the prosecutor. This is particularly so in respect of offences under the Prohibition Act. The necessity of procuring the attendance of neighbours to the place of search, to witness the search and to attest the search list, cannot be dipensed with. The prosecution cannot disregard this very necessary and wholesome provision and ask the Court to accept the prosecutor's evidence alone as sufficient proof of the truth of the search. ——S. 4 (1) (j) — Offence under — Nature of proof before conviction.

For proper conviction of a person under S. 4 (1) (j), for consumption of illicit liquor, the prosecution has to discharge the burden of proof that the liquor consumed by him was prohibited and it was not of some unprohibited variety. The evidence of the Doctor that he was unable to state categorically whether the offender had consumed prohibited liquor, or otherwise, particularly when he examined an alleged drunkard sometime afterwards, would only prove that the accused had consumed alcohol ; but would not exclude some other mode of proof by the prosecution that the alcohol consumed was of prohibited variety, if the prosecution relies upon the evidence of the constable who smelt the breath of the accused and detected the smell of attack; it must show that it was possible for a trained individual to distinguish that smell from smell of any other alcoholic preparation and that the constable had received such a training. 77 Mad L W 710 : 1965 (2) Cri L J 370 : A I R 1965 Mad 414 (414) (Prs 1, 2, 3).

In a case under S. 4 (1) (b), the contention that the officer who conducted the raid was the sole witness to the facts, the alleged Mahazar witnesses having turned hostile to the prosecution, would be a circumstance of some weight in a case where the person engaged in illicit distillation had not been apprehended on the spot. But where the accused was bodily apprehended, and taken to the police station he is unable to deny that he was apprehended, taken to the police station and charge-sheeted, though he would deny that he had been engaged in illicit distillation. In that case the contention raised is not acceptable. 1964 Mad L J (Cr) 664 (Mad).

It is the duty of the prosecution in a charge of an offence under S. 4 (1) (j) of the Madras Prohibition Act to prove that prohibited alcohol had been consumed by the accused persons and that duty does not cease by merely proving that certain symptoms which could be attributed to consumption of alcohol were present in the person of the offenders. 1960 M L J (Cri) 761 and (1960) 2 M L J 449, Foll. Where the accused persons were examined by the Doctor on a requisition from the Police and were actually brought to the Doctor by the Police they must be presumed to have been in 'Police custody' at the time and an alleged admission to the Doctor 'Sapitten' in reply to the Doctor's question "Sarayam suppittaya?" — is inadmissible in evidence to prove consumption of prohibited liquor by the accused persons. Held, that it was no doubt permissible to draw an inference, under S. 114 of the Evidence Act, from certain external features and circumstances, like the label and smell, the cork being intact and so forth, that the contents were prohibited liquor. But when a challenge was made by an accused that the contents were not prohibited liquor and that no presumption ought to be drawn from the external features, it might then be necessary, in order to obviate all doubts at all stages of the case, to have the contents analysed. The reasons should be such as would justify that in the particular circumstances the presumption could be safely drawn about the contents being prohibited liquor.

Held, further that in destroying the contents the Magistrate acted not only indiscreetly but took upon himself the role of a prosecution witness, which the Court ought not to do. The Magistrate clearly acted in contravention of R. 375 of the Criminal Rules of Practice in having the contents of the bottles destroyed, even before he delivered his judgment. 1962 Mad L J (Cr) 415 : (1962) 2 Mad L J 95.

Possession of preparations known purely as asawas and aristas containing self-generating spirit is exempted by Notification No. 941 dated 3.12.1952 from operation of the Act and hence it is not an offence under S. 4 (1) (a).

——S. 4 (1) (j) — Conviction for consumption of liquor—Symptoms held not sufficient to prove guilt.

The smell and the dilation of pupil might be explained on the basis of taking alcohol of the exempted category. ——Ss. 4 and 41-A — Offence of consuming prohibited alcohol—How established—Evidence of doctor not authorised under S. 41-A—Admissibility.

Section 41-A of the Madras Prohibition Act is intended to compel person taken to a doctor to submit for examination and any resistance to such examination entails the penalties provided for in that regard. The police should take the person suspected of an offence under Prohibition Act to a doctor authorised under S. 41-A of the Act. But the evidence of a doctor, not authorised under S. 41-A of the Act, but who examined the accused does not become inadmissible merely because he is not authorised under S. 41-A of the Act.

In a prosecution under S. 4 (1) of the Act it is the duty of the prosecution to prove that the smell detected was that of a liquor that came within the category of prohibited alcohols as smell, etc, can be explained on the basis of taking alcohol of the exempted category as well. (1960) 2 Mad L J 449 : 1960 Mad L J (Cri) 762.

——S. 4 (1) (j) — Charge of consuming prohibited alcohol—Proof and onus.

Where the signs found on the medical evidence were : breath smelling of alcohol, congestion of the eyes, dilation and sluggish reaction to light of pupils but speech and gait were normal, the prosecution cannot be said to have discharged the onus of proving that the accused had consumed prohibited alcohol. ——S. 4 (1) (j)—Consumption of liquor — Burden of proof—Practicable metbod.

Where an accused is charged with having consumed liquor and thus having committed an offence under S. 4 (1) (j) of the Madras Prohibition Act it is for the prosecution, affirmatively and satisfactorily; to establish the charge. Cr. App. No. 42 of 1953 (SC), Foll.

The unmistakable alcoholic breath is an indubitable symptom that alcohol has been consumed. In regard to the consumption of liquor the only practicable method in India now open to the prosecuting agency is to find out whether a subject's breath smells of alcohol and taking into consideration that the smell of alcohol might be stimulated by consumption of other articles like old sugar, the doctor should not only be content with noting that the accused smells of liquor but also note whether the unmistakable characteristic odour is that of arrack or toddy or other distinctive grain alcohol. It will only be fair to the accused if the doctor considers that his breath is smelling of alcohol, to give him an opportunity to explain whether it was due to his having taken any medicated permissible preparation containing alcohol like arishta or asava. The information given by the accused must be considered with an open mind by the doctor and he should make a note of the fact in the certificate whether he considers that explanation plausible or not. AIR 1955 N U C (Mad) 3213.

——S. 4 (1) (a)—Possession of arrack—Proof — (Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 56 and 57).

A Court can take judicial notice of what arrack is. Arrack undoubtedly contains a good percentage of alcohol. It is enough that it is proved that it is arrack. It will certainly fall within the definition of liquor in the Act. Once it is proved that the accused was in possession of arrack he would be guilty under S. 4 (1) (a). No further proof is necessary to show that arrack contains alcohol. AIR 1955 N U C (Mad) 1568.

——S. 4 (1) (a)—Prosecution for consuming liquor—Burden of proof—Inference of guilt — When permissible from proof of smell alone.

In a prosecution for consuming arrack it is the duty of the prosecution to prove that the smell can come only from arrack if the inference is to be drawn about consuming liquor from the smell alone. The other symptoms like red eyes, talking at random, et cetera also must be proved to be due only to the effect of liquor. Where the evidence of the doctor shows that even if old sugar juice was taken, it may smell like arrack and the prosecution has not conclusively proved the smell to be that of arrack, a conviction and sentence will be unsustainable. ——S. 4 (i) (a)— "Possession" — Meaning and implication — Possession by one of joint family — Presumption as to — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 114; Ill. (a)) — (Words and Phrases).

The word 'possession' implies a physical capacity to deal with the thing as we like to the exclusion of every one and a determination to exercise that physical power on one's own behalf. It implies dominion and consciousness in the mind of the person having dominion over an object that he has it and that he can exercise it. Possession must be conscious and intelligent possession and not merely the physical presence of the accused in proximity or even in close proximity to the object.

In the case of a family living jointly in the same house the head of the family is presumed to be in possession of any illicit article found in the house. The presumption is rebuttable and the weight attached to it must vary according to circumstances. It can be easily rebutted by showing that the room or receptacle in question was in the particular and exclusive possession of one member of the joint family. Similarly, where two or more persons are charged with joint illegal possession it is incumbent on the State to prove (a) that each of the accused had either physical or constructive possession of the property or (b) that one or more of them had possession thereof either physical or constructive on behalf of themselves and the other accused to the knowledge of the latter. Case law Ref. (1953) 1 Mad L J 175 : 1953 Mad W N 300 : 1953 Cri L J 1048 : AIR 1953 Mad 534 (535, 536) (Prs 7, 11, 12).

——S. 4 (1) (a)—'Possession"—Proof — Statement by accused to Prohibition Inspector — Whether admissible in evidence — Brandy bottles in vehicle exclusively in the possession of accused—Whether accused guilty of possession of liquor.

The Prohibition Sub-Inspector is not a police officer within the meaning of Ss. 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act and a statement made to him by the accused is not inadmissible in evidence.

A head of a household or the owner of a vehicle is liable for liquor bottles, etc., found inside the house or vehicle exclusively in his possession unless he proves that he was not responsible for their presence there and that somebody else introduced them there.

The petitioner was the owner of the van, which was exclusively his and brandy bottles were found in a bag kept by his side and close to where he alone sat. He gave a statement to the Prohibition Inspector that he was taking those brandy bottles for being given as medicine to his wife during her expected confinement.

Held, the statement was admissible in evidence and that even apart from the statement the evidence was sufficient to prove the possession by the petitioner of the brandy bottles and he was therefore guilty of an offence under S. 4 (1) (a) of the Madras Prohibition Act. 1952 Mad W N 57 : 1952 Mad W N (Cri) 5 : (1952) 1 Mad L J 69 : 1952 Cri L J 640 : AIR 1952 Mad 299 (299, 300) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

4. Examinaion of panchas, if necessary.

——S. 4 (1) (a) — Offence under — Search mahazar — Attesting witnesses not examined — Evidence of search officer — Whether to be relied on.

In cases like offences under S. 4 (1) (a) where a mahazar has been prepared and attested by witnesses it is desirable, to examine at least one such witness in addition to the police officer who actually seized the materials. It will be but fair from the standpoint of the accused that the prosecution places before the Court the best evidence in respect of the seizure. In the absence of any explanation as to why at least one of the attesting witnesses has not been examined, there is room for doubt whether the evidence of the Sub-Inspector can safely be acted upon. 1962 Mad L J (Cri) 415 : (1962) 2 Mad L J 95.

——S. 4 — Prohibition offence — Evidence as to search — Evidence of Prohibition officer — When sufficient to support a conviction.

There may be cases in which evidence of the Prohibition Officer (as to search) may be such as not to commend itself to Courts. In such cases witnesses of search will have to be examined to prove the search and seizure (of prohibited liquor). But ordinarily the evidence of the Sub-Inspector of Prohibition is sufficient to convict an accused without corroboration by other witnesses. AIR 1955 N U C (Mad) 5363.

——Ss. 4 (1) (a) and 34 — Seizure of articles by search officer — Failure to examine Panchayatdar to corroborate search officer—Conviction—Legality.

It is of the utmost importance that there should be a satisfactory evidence before the Courts regarding the articles seized from accused person. That is why search officers have to take Panchayatdars with them at the time of the search under the law, but the object of taking such panchayatdars will be frustrated if those panchayatdars or one of them at least, are not examined in Court to corroborate the evidence of the search officer. Failure to do so will only lead to one result, namely, giving the benefit of doubt to the accused. 1951 Mad W N 381 : 1951 Mad W N (Cri.) 109 : 64 Mad L W 477 : (1951) 1 Mad L J 698 : 52 Cri L J 1058 : AIR 1951 Mad 883 (2) (884) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

5. Proviso to sub-s. (1).

——Ss. 4 (1) (a), 11 and 16 — Madras Denatured Spirit and Methyl Alcohol Rules, 1939 — Genuine permit for spirit obtained with help of forged permit — Transportation of spirit on genuine permit — No offence.

Accused No. 1 attempted to get permits for 1,000 and 2,000 gallons of denatured spirit. He was granted a permit for 250 gallons only. Not content with it he forged a permit for 1,000 gallons, and with this forged permit he obtained another permit for 1,000 gallons. While the spirit on this permit was being transported by accused Nos. 2 to 5, it was seized and prosecution was started on various charges including one under S. 4 (1) (a) read with S. 7 (a), Madras Prohibition Act.

Held, (i) that if anyone contravened the rules framed under S. 16 in respect of denatured spirit, he is liable only under S. 11, Madras Prohibition Act, and not under S. 4 (1) (a). (ii). That the fact a genuine permit was got under false pretence would not, however, make the genuine permit a forged one or an invalid one. The only action that could be taken against those who obtained the genuine permit on false pretence was to charge them for offence of cheating or other allied offences. But it was genuine permit, and, therefore, the transport was under a genuine permit, notwithstanding its being issued under a false impression. Accused 2 to 5, therefore, could not be said to have committed any offence by violating any of the rules framed for the transport of denatured spirit. 1957 Mad W N 162 : 1957 Mad L J (Cri.) 209 : 1957 Cri L J 1424 : AIR 1957 Mad 796 (797) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6).

6. Sub-section (2) — Presumption.

——Ss. 4 (1) (a), 4 (1) (j), 4 (2) (a) — Possession of incriminating articles — Presumption — Fermented wash and liquor found in house in occupation of a lady — Conviction of lady under Ss. 4 (1) (a) and 4 (1) (j), held correct and confirmed — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114.

It is true that possession must be actual and constructive, it must be to the knowledge of the possessor who must have dominion and control over the property. But it is wholly unnecessary to inquire whether it is exclusive or not. Since a person can be in possession jointly with others that person must be held guilty even if he is found to be in joint possession. If from the facts of a particular case it could be stated that incriminating articles were found in a house in the occupation of a particular person who had the power and control then that person can be considered to be in possession : AIR 1953 S C 247, Rel. on.

Where, in prosecution under Ss. 4 (1) (a) and 4 (1) (j) of the Madras Prohibition Act, large quantities of fermented wash and liquor are found in the house admittedly in the occupation of a lady in absence of her husband, knowledge of the incriminating articles can reasonably be attributed to her, her dominion and control cannot be denied, because her husband though having another wife living in another house is the head of the family. The articles can be presumed to be in the possession and control of the lady accused, and if that be so, the presumption under S. 4 (2) (a) of the Prohibition Act, arises and her conviction and sentence are correct. 1964 Mad L J (Cri) 217 : 1963 Ker L T 659 : 1963 Ker L J 577 : ILR (1963) 2 Ker 415.

——S. 4 (2) — Constitutional validity—If repugnant to Evidence Act—(Government of India Act (1935), S. 107) — (Constitution of India, Art. 254).

What facts should be established affirmatively before the Court can be called upon to hold that an accused is guilty of any offence will depend upon the nature of the particular offence. In some cases, the establishment of one fact necessarily leads to the inference of other facts. There is no reason why a statute should not prescribe the ingredients which have to be established by the prosecution before the prosecution can obtain a verdict of guilty of the offence with which an accused is charged. Such a provision would not conflict with the general rules of burden of proof laid down in the Evidence Act. It is not correct to say that S. 4 (2) of the Act completely absolves the prosecution from doing anything more than filing a charge-sheet. It is not as if once a person is accused of an offence under the Prohibition Act it is for the accused to prove that he has not committed the offence. What S. 4 (2) does lay down is that in certain cases, if the prosecution proves possession of liquor or intoxicating drug or other articles or materials, it shall not be necessary for the prosecution to prove anything more. The proof of one fact is taken as proof of the offence. The accused, however, is given every opportunity of showing that a contrary conclusion must be arrived at, that is a conclusion contrary to the conclusion sought to be drawn by the prosecution.

The presumption laid down in S. 4 (2) of the Prohibition Act, is not repugnant to the Evidence Act, because it adds a presumption to the presumptions contained in the Evidence Act. The Evidence Act gives instances where the Court may presume certain things and instances where the Court shall presume certain things. But it has never been understood that the presumptions contained in the Evidence Act are exhaustive and no other statute can lay down other presumptions.

Section 4 (2) of the Prohibition Act, is not repugnant to any provision of the Evidence Act. Case-law Ref. 1954 Mad W N 575 : (1954) 2 M L J 475 : 1954 Cri L J 1521 : ILR (1955) Mad 887 : AIR 1954 Mad 993 (995, 996, 997) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 10, 17) (DB).

——Ss. 4 (2) and 53—In proper case accused can be discharged—S. 4 (2) is not inconsistent with procedure laid down in Cr. P. Code—(Cr. P. Code (1898), Ss 253 (1), 1 (2) and 5 (2))—(Constitution of India, Art. 21).

Section 4 (2) does not prevent a Magistrate in a proper case to discharge the accused if he finds that the prosecution have not established what they have to establish under the provisions relating to the offence with which the accused has been charged.

Even if, for any reason, it is possible to hold that the Prohibition Act prescribes a procedure slightly different from the procedure laid down in the Code of Criminal Procedure such procedure would not be, on that account, invalid. 1954 Mad W N 575 : (1954) 2 M L J 475 : 1954 Cri L J 1521 : ILR (1955) Mad 887 : AIR 1954 Mad 993 (998) (Pt C) (Pr 18) (DB).

——S. 4—Prosecution for possession of illicit arrack —Conviction on the evidence of the Police Officer alone as to seizure — When witnesses should have been available and mahazar should have been prepared—Propriety.

Where the only evidence for the prosecution is that of the Sub-Inspector of Police who seized the contraband and the time and place where the alleged seizure took place was such that there should have been several persons available to witness the seizure, but no such mahazar for the seizure was prepared. The accused in a prosecution under the Prohibition Act should at least be entitled to the benefit of the doubt regarding the genuineness of the alleged seizure. ILR (1964) 2 Mad 933 : (1965) 1 Mad L J 381.

——S. 4 (1) (a)—Sentence — Duty of Court to award deterrent and severe sentence.

A sentence of two months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 cannot be considered excessive in the case of a conviction under S. 4 (1) (a) of the Madras Prohibition Act. for having been found in possession for sale to others of six bottles of arrack at about 8 p. m. in a public road. Having regard to the deep-rooted evils of drink and the length of time in which prohibition has come to be the statute of the State, Courts which have to enforce the Act systematically and fearlessly and even severely cannot treat with leniency the sale of illicit liquor as contradistinguished from the consumption of liquor by addicts. ——S. 4 (1) (j) — Prosecution for possession of ganja —Investigating Officer conducting prosecution — Validity.

Disobedience of the mandatory provisions of S. 495 (4) of the Code of Criminal Procedure will render the entire proceedings void. Where in a prosecution under S. 4 (1) (j) of the Madras Prohibition Act the investigating officer conducts the prosecution the procedure being prohibited by the provisions of S. 495 (4) of the Cr. P. SECTION 4-A ——S. 4-A—Sentence—Madras Probation of Offenders Act—Applies to offences under S. 4-A, Madras Prohibition Act—Accused admitting offence under S. 4-A Prohibition Act and acquitted under S. 4 (1) of the Prohibition Act — Held, the Magistrate was not justified without finding out the antecedents or the circumstances in which the offence was committed, in releasing him under S. 4 (1) of the Probation of Offenders Act. See Madras Probation of Offenders Act (3 of 1937), S. 4 (1). 1957 Cri L J 954 : AIR 1957 Andh. Pra 532.

Where the charge-sheet and the examination of the accused revealed an offence under S. 4-A but the accused was convicted under S. 4 (1) (j), that however would not vitiate the trial. Whether the accused is charged under S. 4-A or under S. 4 (1) (j) it does not make any difference. S. 4-A is in a sense a graver offence, viz., that of being in a state of intoxication whereas S. 4 (1) (j) is a lesser offence, viz., the buying of liquor or any intoxicating drug. —S. 4-A—Intoxication—Meaning of — Smelling of liquor is not intoxication.

Intoxication implies excessive drinking of liquor bringing about drunkenness. Merely smelling of alcohol does not amount to being in a state of intoxication within the meaning of S. 4-A. Something more is necessary and that is the accused must be in a state of drunkenness. 1954 Mad W N 653 : (1954) 2 Mad L J (Andhra) 10 : 1954 Cri L J 1529 : AIR 1954 Andhra 4 (5) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 4-A—State of intoxication—Question of fact—Private car is not a public place within S. 4-A.

Even after consuming alcohol it would be possible that a man did not reach the stage of intoxication. Stage of intoxication is in itself a question of fact and has to be determined in the light of the particular circumstances and the state of the particular habits and health of the person said to be intoxicated.

Private car, because it was found running on a public road, is not a public place within the meaning of S. 4-A. 1962 Mad L J (Cr) 415 : (1962) 2 Mad L J 93.

——S. 4-A—Intoxication — Meaning — Symptoms — (Words and Phrases—Intoxication).

While the Legislature has made intoxication in a public place a punishable offence, it has not defined what intoxication means. In the absence of any statutory definition, the Court has to adopt its ordinary etymological meaning, namely, a condition produced by excessive use of alcoholic stimulants, as defined in Dorland's American Medical Dictionary.

An accused was found with the following symptoms : (1) smelling of arrack in breath ; (2) redness of the eye and dilation of pupil; (3) tongue clear and dry; (4) speech incoherent; and (5) staggering gait.

Held, that the accused was in a state of intoxication. 1956 Mad W N 657 : (1956) 2 Mad L J 273 : ILR (1957) Mad 66 : 1957 Cri L J 976 : AIR 1957 Mad 546 (547, 548) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 3, 4) (DB).

——S. 4-A—Prosecution must prove that smell came only from I. SECTION 5

——Ss. 5 and 29 — Non-compliance with provisions of S. 29—Effect of—Sentence under S. 5—Mitigating factor — Minute quantity of liquor.

Non-compliance with the formalities in S. 29 cannot prevent the discovery of a fact during the search from being used for basing a conviction.

The minute quantity of liquor found with the accused and the absence of any reason to hold that this small quantity came out of a much larger stock are grounds which can be considered in the context of mitigation of the sentence. (1962) 2 Mad L J 100 : 1962 Mad L J (Cri) 420.

——Ss. 5 and 16 (1) — Applicability — Rendering varnish potable and fit for human consumption as illicit liquor — Offence committed in 1959, after amendment of Rules relating to the Manufacture Import, Use and Sale of Varnish (1952) — If punishable under S. 5 or under S. 16 (2) — Amendment of rule in 1959—Effect of.

Held, on facts that the accused was clearly guilty of an offence under S. of the Act and punishable as such, because after the deletion of R. 10 of the Rules relating to varnish in 1959, the rendering or attempting to render any spirit, or preparation containing spirit which has been denatured, fit for human consumption, is not a breach of the Rules under S. 16 of the Act, but is an offence punishable directly under S. 5 of the Act. ——S. 5—Addition of lime juice and sugar to denatured spirt in exclusive possession of accused — Conviction.

Where sugar and lime juice were found to have been put in the denatured spirit in exclusive possession of the accused.

Held, that accused must be held to have put these articles himself only in an attempt to denature the denatured spirit and make it fit for human consumption. He must, therefore be held guilty under S. 5. 1951 Mad W N 296 (1): 1951 Mad W N (Cri) 88 (1) : (1951) 64 Mad L W 512 : (1951) 1 Mad L J 576.

——S. 5—Applicability — Denatured spirit containing sugar, and lemon juice seized from accused — Sufficiency to convict accused—Attempt to "renature" spirit to render it fit for human consumption.

In a case where the certificate of the analyst showed that the denatured spirit seized from the possession of the accused contained sugar and lemon juice and that an attempt had been made to "renature" it, an offence under S. 5 of the Madras Prohibition Act is proved. To "renature" means to restore to its original nature, that is the nature of spirits fit for human consumption, as against "denature" which means to render spirits fit for human consumption unfit for such consumption. Sugar and lime juice are such well-known articles of human consumption that they must have been put into the denatured spirit by the accused only in an attempt to renature the denatured spirit and make it fit for human consumption. An attempt to render them fit for human consumption will do, however unsuccessful, for a conviction under S. 5 of the Madras Prohibition Act. (1951) 64 Mad L W 512 : 5 A I Cr D 850 : (1951) 1 Mad L J 576.

——S. 11—Madras Denatured Spirit and Methyl Alcohol Rules, 1939—Genuine permit for spirit obtained with help of forged permit — Transportation of spirit on genuine permit — No offence. See Madras Prohibition Act (10 of 1937), S. 4 (1) (a). 1957 Cri L J 1424 : AIR 1957 Mad 796.

——Ss. 13, 14 — 'Shall be liable to confiscation'—Meaning of—Vehicles used for committing an affence under the Act — Knowledge of the owner of the vehicle — Necessity of, for confiscation.

Reading Ss. 13 and 14 (1) together, it is clear that it is not obligatory on the part of a Magistrate to confiscate a vehicle used to carry the liquor drug, etc. While S. 13 confers a power upon the Magistrate to confiscate, S. 14 provides for passing of an order of confiscation. The expression "shall be liable to confiscation" in S. 13 only means "is liable to be consfiscated". Under S. 14, the Magistrate has to consider whether confiscation should be ordered or not. Under that section it is only when it is established that the owner of the vehicle had knowledge or had reason to believe that it was going to be used for the purpose of committing an offence, the Magistrate could direct it to be confiscated. If a person committing an offence against the Act is the owner of the vehicle no question of knowledge arises. But if the offender is not the owner of the vehicle, it would not be proper to pass an order of confiscation without proof that the owner had knowledge or had reason to believe that the vehicle was going to be put to such a use. AIR 1955 NUC (Andhra) 1523.

——Ss. 13, 14, 16—Offence not against Act but against rules — Confiscation of property — Jurisdiction—(Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 517).

In view of the specific provisions in Ss. 13 and 14, Madras Prohibition Act, it is not open to a Magistrate to invoke the powers of confiscation under S. 517, Criminal P. C. Though the general principle is that a valid rule made under an enactment has the same force as a provision in a statute and a breach of the rule might in a sense be considered as a contravention of the enactment itself, this would depend upon the language used in the particular statute. When there has been an infringement of the provision of a rule which specifically provides for a particular punishment, the same cannot be treated also as an offence under the Act so as to enable the Court to impose upon the accused the punishments provided for offences against the Act as distinguished from those provided for the offence against the rules.

On a proper construction of the provisions of the Madras Prohibition Act, the expression 'the offence committed against the Act, in Ss. 13 and 14 cannot comprehend the contravention of a notification issued under S. 16. The Act has drawn a clear distinction between the offences in regard to liquor and intoxicating drugs pure and simple in respect of which a prohibition was being enforced and those preparations containing alcohol used for medicinal and toilet or industrial purposes in regard to which a restriction only was being enacted. Therefore, a breach of the rule is not an offence against the Act :within the meaning of Ss. 13 and 14 of the Prohibition Act. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 5946 (DB).

——S. 13—Liable to confiscation—Meaning of.

The term "liable to confiscation" imports not that confiscation is automatic but that Court may impose it as an additional punishment in suitable cases exercising a sound discretion. A I R 1955 N U C (Mad) 3920.

The offender not the owner—No knowledge to the owner—Order of confiscation not proper. See Madras Prohibition Act (10 of 1937), S. 13. AIR 1955 NUC (Andhra) 1523.

——S. 20 — Scope — Citizens of Portuguese Settlements in India residing in Madras State — Right to issue of liquor permits—Excluding citizens of Portuguese and French Settlements in India from category of foreign nationals — Validity — Constitution of India (1950), Art. 14 — Scope.

Portuguese Settlement in India though geographically situated in India must be treated as part of the territory of Portugal. Foreign nationals would include nationals of every foreign country and it is for the Government of the country concerned to decide who belonged to a particular nationality. It is not open to the Madras State Government to classify citizens of Portuguese Settlements in India resident in Madras State, along with Indian citizens for purposes of issue of liquor permits under the Madras Prohibition Act. The only classification which will not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution would be classification between Indian citizens on the one hand and foreign nationals on the other. Any other classification would be discriminatory. It is not open to the State Government to exclude the citizens of the French and Portuguese Settlements in India from the general category of foreign nationals on the ground that the grant of permits to them might lead to abuse. A Portuguese subject born at Sholapur of parents both of whom were born in Goa and residing at Madras is therefore entitled to the grant of a permit as a foreign national. 65 Mad L W 744 : 1952 Mad W N 619 : (1952) 2 Mad L J 237 : AIR 1952 Mad 734 (735) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

C. — Procedure to be followed is that under S. 251-A and not under S. 252 — Latter not more advantgeous—Accused has no vested rignt in procedure. AIR 1957 Mad 292, Overruled.

Chapter V of the Madras Prohibition Act is only complementary and supplementary to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code in Ch. XIV. Therefore, a police officer investigating into a prohibition offence does so under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, supplemented by the special provisions of the Madras Prohibition Act and the report of Police Officer investigating a prohibition offence will, fall not under S. 48 of the Madras Prohibition Act, but under S. 173, Criminal P. C. Such a report gives jurisdiction to a competent Magistrate to conduct an enquiry under S. 251-A, Criminal P. C. AIR 1957 Mad 292, Overruled.

Further, no material prejudice is caused to the accused by the fact that in such a case the procedure prescribed by S. 251-A, Criminal P. C. and not that under S. 252, Criminal P. C., is followed. The latter procedure is not more advantageous to the accused. On the other hand, the procedure under S. 251-A confers two inestimable advantages on him, viz., his being put in possession of all documents giving him a complete picture of the case against him before he embarks upon the task of meeting it and secondly, his having to be acquitted if the prosecution is unable to prove the case against him and which once again means that unlike a discharge it cannot be comparatively easily interfered with. AIR 1957 SC 927 and AIR 1958 Andh Pra 301, Rel. on.

It is well settled that the accused has no vested right in any course of procedure. Therefore, neither Art. 14 nor Art. 20 of the Constitution can be invoked, if a trial is held under a procedure different from what obtained at the time of the commission of the offence or by a court different from that which had competence at the time. 1960 Mad W N 317 : 1962 Mad L J (Cri) 331 : (1962) 1 Mad L J 434 : ILR (1961) Mad 70.

——Ss. 28 to 32—Validity — If repugnant to existing law (Govt. of India Act (1935), S. 107) — Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 96 and 98)—(Constitution of India, Arts. 246 and 254).

All the provisions of the Prohibition Act deal primarily with Provincial subjects, namely, intoxicating liquors and narcotic drugs. It is true that violations of the provisions of the Act have been made criminal offences. But such offences would certainly be covered by item 37 of List II, and they have been expressly excluded from item 1 of the Concurrent List. The ancillary matters laying down the procedure for trial of such offences and the enactment of certain presumptions which would apply in the course of such trial would be covered completely by item 2 of List II. Consequently, none of the impugned provisions namely Ss. 28 to 32 of the Act including S. 4 (2) of the Prohibition Act, is invalid, on the ground that they are repugnant to the provisions of an existing Indian Law in respect of a subject covered by the concurrent list, e. g., Criminal P. C.

Moreover the Code of Criminal Procedure has not completely occupied the field of criminal procedure in the matter of search warrants. In other words, a provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure to the effect that no such warrants shall be issued by any one except under Ss. 96 and 98 of that Code cannot be implied. Indeed, if there had been such a provision, there might have been room for the contention that in the face of such express prohibition no provincial legislature could provide for the issue of search warrants in a manner other than that provided by the Criminal P. C. (1954) 2 Mad L J 475 : 1954 Mad W N 575 : 1954 Cri L J 1521 : ILR (1955) Mad 887 : AIR 1954 Mad 993 (1000) (Pt E) (Prs 25, 29) (DB).

Section 32 is a safeguard which the statute has provided and it is necessary to enjoin upon the police officers, who make searches and recover fermented wash and the like, that the statutory provision should be complied with. The circumstance that it had been held in a particular case that the omission to comply with this provision did not vitiate the trial, should not be treated as authority for making the statutory provision a dead letter. 1962 Mad L J (Cr) 410 : (1962) 2 Mad L J 90.

Even assuming that the report in terms of the amended S. 32 was not sent, that would not by itself vitiate the trial and the conviction of the accused. For, the real question is not whether a matter is expressed positively or is stated in negative terms but whether disregard of a particular provision amounts to substantial denial of a trial as contemplated by the Code and understood by the comprehensive expression 'natural justice.' 1959 Mad W N 469 ; 1959 Cr L J 1189 : AIR 1959 Mad 450 (452) (Pt B) (Prs 10, 11).

It will be extremely unsafe and risky to convict an accused solely on the strength of the evidence of the prosecutor, particularly so in respect of offences under the Prohibition Act. Every search contemplated by S. 34 of the Act should be conducted in the presence of two or more respectable persons of the locality in which the search is to be conducted.

A contention that a case under the Prohibition Act has to be initiated by a Police or Prohibition Officer in the manner indicated in S. 48, Prohibition Act, that the report of a Prohibition Officer was more in the nature of a charge-sheet rather than a complaint, and that, therefore, the position of a Prohibition Officer should be equated to that of a Police Officer for the purpose of S. 48 cannot prevail because a Prohibition Officer shall be deemed to be a Police Officer only for the purpose of S. 125, Evidence Act, which means he will be treated as a Police Officer, only for a limitted purpose. He cannot be regarded as a Police Officer for other purposes. 1957 Cr L J 1388 : 1956 Andh L T 392 : 1956 An W R 642 : AIR 1957 Andh-Pra 977 (977) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

A Police Officer investigating into a prohibition offence does so under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, supplemented by the special provisions of the Prohibition Act. The Criminal Procedure Code covers all crimes and is not intended to meet special problems arising under the Prohibition Act.

Chapter V of the Prohibition Act is only complementary and supplementary to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code in Chapter XIV. Chapter V of the Prohibition Act has been enacted because the investigating agency can consist of two distinct agencies viz., the Police agency or the revenue and excise agency. It is only recently that the separate prohibition agency has been abolished and investigation has been entrusted to the Police. The prohibition agency cannot be made into a Police agency under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Code contemplates only investigating Police Officers and Station House Officers. So a non-police prohibition officer can investigate only under the Prohibition Act. But the converse is not true. When a Police Officer investigates, he investigates only under the provisions of the Code.

Hence the report of a Police Officer investigating a prohibition offence will fall not under S. 48 of the Madras Prohibition Act but under S. 173 of the Code —(1956) Mad W N 923, Dissented from. 1960 M W N 317 : ILR (1961) Mad 70 : 1962 Mad L J (Cri) 331 : (1962) 1 Mad L J 434.

The word "complaint" in S. 48 of the Madras Prohibition Act is wider and should be construed in a general sense and the restricted definition given in the Criminal Procedure Code should not be made applicable. On this construction the word "complaint" in S. 48 of the Prohibition Act will include a report by a Police Officer also. 1960 Mad W N 317 : ILR (1961) Mad 70 : 1962 Mad L J (Cri) 331 : (1962) 1 Mad L J 434.

——S. 16, Explanation — Wash not sent to Chemical Examiner—No illegality.

Mixture of water and saccharine when in the process of vinous alcoholic fermentation or in which such fermentation has ceased would constitute wash for illicit distillation. Therefore, when the Madras Act 8 of 1958 was enacted to plug as many loopholes as possible in the working of the Prohibition Act, the framers of the Act included this mixture of water and saccharine material as coming within the term 'wash' provided the stage at which it was, when it was in the process of vinous or alcoholic fermentation or in which such fermentation has ceased. On that conclusion, it follows that there is no necessity to send the sample of every kind of wash seized to the Chemical Examiner in order to find out whether it was only a mixture of water and saccharine materials, etc. The Prohibition Officers can legitimately be considered as experts and their evidence regarding wash may be accepted as expert testimony and it is only when they feel baffled, the aid of the Chemical Examiner need be resorted to. 1959 Mad W N 469 : 1959 Cri L J 1189 : AIR 1959 Mad 450 (453) (Pt C) (Pr 12).

——Ss. 31 and 32 — Procedure for effecting a search — Irregularity in conducting the search — If vitiates conviction under S. 4 (1), (a), (b), (g) and (k).

Section 31 of the Mysore Prohibition Act lays down the procedure for the issue of a search warrant. Section 32 is an exception to S. 31 and that contemplates that under certain conditions power is given to police officers to search without a warrant. The provisions of Ss. 31 and 32 are made having true regard to the circumstances : (1) apprehension of the articles, etc., from which illicitly distilled liquor is manufactured as well as the persons manufacturing the same; (2) to safeguard the rights and interests of individual citizen. SECTION 41 ——Ss. 41, 45 and 51 — Validity — If offend Art. 14 of Constitution.

The procedural differences resulting from Ss. 41, 45 and S. 51, Mysore Prohibition Act are the outcome of changes in law. They are not designed to produce inequality. The two procedures are substantially same. What the legislature wanted was that whenever a responsible police officer had an opportunity to investigate into a case and file a charge-sheet, then it would be sufficient if the Magistrate examines the records prepared by him and questions the accused and hears argument on behalf of the prosecution and the accused before he makes up his mind to frame charge or discharge the accused. But in the case of a private complaint in which the accused generally had not the benefit of an earlier investigation by any responsible officer, then it was thought proper that the Courts should examine the matter with care, right from the beginning. Whether one adopts one procedure or the other it made no difference in the standard of proof required or in the tests to be applied in appreciating the evidence. Article 14 does not take note of trivial differences in procedure incapable of producing any injustice. 1959 Cri L J 496 : 36 Mys L J 124 : I L R (1957) Mys 418 : 1958 Mad L J (Cr) 329 : AIR 1959 Mys 100 (101) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

On a reading of Ss. 51, 16 and 56 of the Mysore Prohibition Act, it is absolutely clear that the power of the police to investigate under Chapter XIV of the Cr. P. Code is preserved in full. Hence the Police Officer has a right to investigate into the offence under the Mysore Prohibition Act under Chapter XIV of the Cr. P. Code and can also send a final report under S. 173 (1), Cr. P. Code which is better known as charge-sheet. Once he files a charge-sheet under S. 173 (1), Cr. P. Code, provisions of S. 251-A are attracted and there is nothing wrong in the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case under that section. SECTION 1 ——Ss. 1 (3), 129 and Sch. A — Applicability to area which formerly formed part of Madras State — Act applied and not Madras Prohibition Act, 10 of 1937.

Since 12-4-1962, Mysore Prohibition Act (17 of 1962) is the only law of prohibition in force in the entire State of Mysore including the area which formerly formed part of the Madras State. This is in virtue of the repeal of Madras Prohibition Act, 10 of 1937 by S. 129 read with Sch. A of Mysore Act of 1962. The mention of Madras Act 10 of 1938 in Sch. A is a clerical error for Act 10 of 1937. Madras Act 10 of 1938 was an amending Act and was already repealed by the Madras Repealing and Amending Act 14 of 1951. It cannot, therefore, be said that the same Act (Madras Act 10 of 1938) was repealed again in 1962. According to the principles of interpretations of Statutes, the Court has got every power to rectify such an error. (1962) 40 Mys L J 768; A I R 1953 Cal 733; A I R 1962 Punj 337, Disting. See Constitution of India, Art. 311. 1962 Mys L J (Sup) 498 (DB).

——S. 59 (b)—If arrack is liquor—Scope of S. 2 (19).

What section 2 (19) of the Mysore Prohibition Act does is to define liquor, and what the definition does is to give an inclusive definition. It opens with the words 'liquor includes' and not with the words 'liquor means.' So it is obvious that every substance which is liquor according to the natural import or meaning of the word 'liquor' is undoubtedly liquor. Spirits of wine, denatured spirits, wine, beer and toddy are also included in the definition and become liquor for the purpose of the Act not because if there had been no inclusion of those substances in the definition they would not have been liquor but obviously by way of super-abundant caution. Liquor, according to the natural import of that word, according to the Concise Oxford Dictionary means 'liquid' (fermented or distilled, for drinking (malt, ale, beer, porter, etc.) The question is whether arrack is one such liquid. So whether the definition contained in S. 2 (19) included arrack within the definition as it included spirits of wine and other substances or not, if arrack is liquor as ordinarily understood, such non-inclusion would not denude it of its character as liquor if really, it is. Since it is clear that it is liquor as already explained, it was not necessary for the State Government, to make any notification declaring arrack to be liquor for the purpose of the Act notwithstanding arrack being clearly liquor even otherwise. (1965) Mad L J (Cri) 864 : (1965) 2 Law Rep 492 : (1965) 1 Mys L J 310.

——S. 59 (b) — Conviction for an offence under— Burden of proving that alcohol consumed was of prohibited variety.

It is not obligatory to get the blood and urine of the accused examined unless the prosecution wants to rely on the presumption under S. 85 (3) of the Mysore Prohibition Act. Section 16 of the Mysore Prohibition Act cannot be regarded as being in the nature of an exception to the general provisions contained in S. 12 and of other sections in Chapter III of the Act. Section 16 must be regarded as merely declaring that the articles specified in that section are outside the pale of the Prohibition Act. Therefore the burden of proving that the alcohol consumed by the accused was a prohibited liquor, rests on the prosecution. (1965) Mad L J (Cri) 855 : (1965) 2 Law Rep 374 (Mys).

——S. 59 (1)—If sentence of imprisonment compulsory.

It is obvious from the provisions of clause (1) of S. 59 of the Mysore Prohibition Act that for a first offence under that section a sentence of imprisonment is not always obligatory and that each case must depend upon its own facts in regard to the question whether a sentence of imprisonment must needs be awarded or whether a sentence of fine is enough. (1965) Mad L J (Cri) 403 : (1965) 1 Mys L J 104.

——Ss. 86 and 109—Scope and meaning.

The Registered Medical Practitioner referred to in clause (a) of S. 86 of the Mysore Prohibition Act must be a person who has an authorisation from the Government of the nature referred to in S. 109 (1). Clause (b) of S. 86, however, appears to make a distinction between a Registered Medical Practitioner working in the hospital or dispensary maintained by State Government or a local authority and any other Registered Medical Practitioner, with reference to the latter of whom alone an authorisation by the State Government appears to be necessary. It would appear that the importance of an authorisation by the State Government in favour of a Medical Practitioner lies in the fact that it may be regarded as the foundation of the power or special power of investigation provided in S. 109 of the Act. It should, however, be remembered that any defect in the investigation, in the absence of a specific provision in the statute expressly prohibiting a Court from taking cognisance of an offence in the event of there being such defect in the investigation, will not affect the jurisdiction of a Court. SCHEDULE A—ITEM NO. 3 ——Schedule A — Item No. 3—Error in mentioning Madras Act (10 of 1938), instead of Act (10 of 1937)— Power of Court to correct — Interpretation of Statues —Repeal, amendment and consolidation.

Following the principle laid down in AIR 1952 S C 324; that when an Act has been amended in such a way as to incorporate itself or a part of itself into the earlier Act, then the rule of construction is that the earlier Act must thereafter be read and construed 'except where that would lead to repugnancy, inconsistency or absurdity' as if the altered words had been written into the earlier Act with pen and ink and the old words scored out so that thereafter there is no need to refer to the amending Act at all. In view of this legal position, there was no need for the Legislature to include Madras Act 10 of 1938 in the Schedule. Even otherwise Madras Act 10 of 1938 was formally repealed by Act 14 of 1951.

Held, Madras Act 10 of 1938 having been repealed in 1951 it would be illogical to hold that the Mysore Legislature repealed it again in 1962, instead of repealing Madras Act 10 of 1937 which it was necessary to repeal for the purpose of promulgating in the entire State as an amended and consolidated uniform enactment on the subject of prohibition. The error in Item No. 3 of the Schedule A is a clerical error and the Court has got every power to rectify such an error. (1964) Mad L J (Cr) 4 : (1962) 40 Mys L J 982.

PREAMBLE

——Pre.—Validity.

The operation of the proviso to Art. 304 (b) is not attracted to the T. C. Prohibition Act, regard being had to the true nature and scope of the Act. The proviso will apply only if the Act imposes restrictions on the freedom of trade, commerce and intercourse as declared in Art. 301 of the Constitution. This Act in its pith and substance prohibits only the use and consumption of intoxicating liquors. It concerns itself only with the enforcement of prohibition and this subject is within the competence of the State Legislature: Vide Entry 8 in list II, schedule VII. The protection afforded by Art. 301 is confined to such activities as may be regarded as lawful trading activities. It does not extend to an activity in respect of anything which is extra commercium. Liquor is not a legitimate article of trade and freedom of trade in liquor is not protected by Art. 301. An Act which restricts or even prohibits trade in liquor, therefore need not satisfy the procedural requirements of Art. 304 for its validity. (1961) Mad L J (Cr) 58 : 1960 Ker L J 842 : (1960) 2 Ker L R 56 : 1960 Ker L T 753 : I L R (1960) Ker 916 : 1961 (1) Cr L J 70 : AIR 1961 Ker 8 (13) (Pt C) (Pr 33) (FB).

The presumption that the head of the family or the husband is responsible for the incriminating articles recovered from the house occupied jointly by him and others is rebuttable. S. 27 of the Indian Penal Code, cannot be applied to a case where the possession is not proved to be "on account" of the accused. The fiction that the husband and wife are one and the same person cannot also be extended. A mental element such as intention or consciousness or knowledge must be established before the possession of illicit liquor can be said to constitute an offence under the Act. As the husband is not proved to have been in conscious possession of the illicit liquor, his conviction must necessarily fail.

In a case under S. 8 (1) of the T. C. Prohibition Act, the onus of proving the guilt of the accused rests on the prosecution. Section 106 of the Evidence Act does not come into play here. It does not affect the onus of proving the guilt of the accused. In this case so long as the prosecution has not succeeded in proving that the illicit liquor kept inside the box of which the key was with his wife was with his knowledge certainly the husband cannot be called upon to explain that possession. (1962) Mad L J (Cr) 29 : 1961 Ker L J 696 : (1961) 2 Ker L R 197 : 1961 Ker L T 584 : I L R (1961) 2 Ker 510.

——S. 8 (1) (a), (b) and (g) — Illicit manufacture of liquor — Attestors of search mahazer won over by accused—Effect on prosecution evidence.

The accused persons were found illicitly manufacturing arrack when a search was made of their house. The evidence of the excise officers who conducted the search was sought to be corroborated by the testimony of two independent witnesses who had attested the search mahazar. The attestors had been won over by the accused at the trial stage. In view of their admission that they had attested the mahazar no great weight could be attached to their statement that they attested the mahazar at a different place and on the next day.

Held, that such a change of attitude on the part of the independent attestors could not by itself destroy the effect of the prosecution evidence. The conviction of the accused persons under S. 8 (1) (a), (b) and (g) was justified. (1960) 1 Ker L R 580 : 1960 Ker L T 704.

The offence with which the respondent was charged was for being in possession of 8 edangazhis of fermented wash fit for illicit distillation. The offence would, therefore, be one under S. 8 (1) (g) of the Travancore-Cochin Prohibition Act (1950) and not under S. 8 (1) (a) which applies only to possession of liquor. An offence under S. 8 (1) (g) is punishable with imprisonment which may extend to two years and is therefore triable only as a warrant case. Where a warrant case is tried as a summons case and the accused is acquitted the order cannot be sustained. The order of acquittal in such case is not in accordance with law. In a summons case when the accused pleads not guilty, the Magistrate shall proceed under S. 244 by examining the witnesses. The proper course would be to examine the witnesses and then proceed with the case under S. 245. The acquittal under S. 245 without examining the witnesses, who are actually present is, in any view unsustainable. (1960) Mad L J (Cr) 378 : (1960) 1 Ker L R 372 : 1960 Ker L J 375 : 1960 Ker L T 479.

——S. 8 (1)—Conviction under—Prosecution relying solely on evidence of officers conducting search—Witnesses attesting search mahazar turning hostile—Cunviction cannot be sustained.

Though the contention that the rejection of the evidence of the Excise Officers who conduct searches on the ground that they are interested in the case would lead to miscarriage of justice, specially in a case where the officers had conducted the search in the presence of neighbours, the fact that due to the intervention of the accused the witness subsequently turned hostile is not without force. However, any possible prejudice to the prosecution would not justify the non-enforcement of the salutary provisions of the Act introduced with a view to safeguarding the liberty of the citizens of the land.

Moreover, unless shown to be biassed, persons who give evidence before Court that they have not witnessed the search but simply signed the search list at the instance of the officers, cannot be presumed to be speaking falsehood. In such cases conviction cannot be sustained. AIR 1959 Ker 98, Followed. (1960) 1 Ker L R 169 : 1960 Ker L T 271 : 1960 Ker L J 228: I L R (1960) Ker 427.

——S. 8 (1) (a)—Offence under—Evidence given by Officers of department — Independent corroboration —Necessity.

It is incorrect to say that, in every case under the Prohibition Act, there should be independent evidence to corroborate the officers of the Department. Where the seizure of arrack was made on the road without search of any premises, it is not essential that there should be independent evidence to corroborate the Officers. Each case has to be decided on the evidence in the case. AIR 1959 Ker 98 and 1959 Ker L R 665, Dist. 1959 Ker L J 1045.

——S. 37 — Scope — Searching house of accused by officer competent to act under S. 37 but not authorised by Government to act under S. 38 — Legality — Failure to record reasons—Effect.

The failure to record the reasons will not indicate that the search was not one made under S. 37 of T. C. Prohibition Act. When the officer was competent to act under S. 37, there is no justification for presuming that the search was under S. 38 and then invalidating his action on the ground that he was not authorised by the Government to act under that section. Moreover S. 38 deals with entry and inspection and does not appear to contemplate the seizure of contraband and as such the officer's action in entering the house and seizing the articles can only have been under S. 37. So far as the alleged illegality of the search is concerned, namely the failure to record reasons, it is sufficient to say that even assuming that the search was illegal the seizure of the articles is not vitiated. It may be that where the provisions of S. 37 are contravened the search could be resisted by the person whose premises are sought to be searched. It may also be that because of the illegality of the search the Court may be inclined to examine carefully the evidence regarding the seizure. But, beyond these two consequences, no further consequence ensues. (1965) Mad L J (Cr) 341 : 1964 Ker L J 193 : 1964 Ker L T 177 : (1964) 2 Ker L R 455 : ILR (1964) 1 Ker 330.

Section 18 of the General Clauses Act can be attracted only if the subordinate is lawfully performing the duties of the Excise Inspector at the time and as the Excise Inspector cannot delegate his powers and appoint his subordinate to exercise his functions the subordinate cannot be said to be lawfuly performing his duty. The effect of the Excise Inspector putting the Preventive Officer-in-charge of the duties is only to put him in charge of administrative matters. The Preventive Officer who was only put in temporary charge of the functions of the Excise Inspector was not competent to effect the search. SECTION 61-A ——S. 61-A—Scope and ambit—Accused found in an intoxicated condition and behaving riotously in a public place—Conviction under S. 8 (1) (j) of Prohibition Act and and S. 51 of the Police Act—Order of Magistrate to pay an amount out of the fine to the Officer who 'detected' the offence—Legality.

The case against the accused was that he was found in an intoxicated condition and behaving riotously in a public place. The offence comes squarely within the purview of S. 51 of the Police Act and since it happened in a prohibition area S. 9 of the Prohibition Act can also be included, but S. 8 (1) (j) does not come into the picture as there was no case that he consumed or brought the liquor in a prohibition area. Section 61-A of the Act contemplates the payment of a portion of the fine levied under Ss. 8, 10, 12 or 17 of the Act only and not under S. 9. When a man is found in a state of intoxication in public place, the offence is made out and no question of detection arises at all. In such a case an order for payment of the amount forthwith to the officer is passed without jurisdiction. Sction 61-A only enables the Magistrate who tries the case to make a direction that any portion not exceeding one half of the fine which may be levied be paid to the Police and Prohibition Officers who may have assisted in the detection of the offence and he is bound to send the amount to be paid to the District Collector who is the authority to distribute it among such of the Officers aforesaid as may be chosen by him and in such proportion as he thinks fit. SECTION 9

——S. 9—State of intoxication—Meaning.

The word "intoxication" applies only to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors or drugs. And the state of intoxication may be taken to be practically equivalent to a state of drunkenness, so that the person intoxicated was incapable of knowing the consequences of his action.

Where the certificate of the Medical Officer stated that the accused was in a state of drunkenness for the following reasons, viz. smell of brandy from nose, redness of the eyes, very rapid pulse, and tremors of his hands.

Held that these findings were absolutely insufficient to hold that the accused was in a state of intoxication. :1952 Ker L T 159 : 1952 Cri L J 1905 : ILR (1951) Tra-Co 755 : AIR 1952 Trav-Co 239 (242) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 3).

● ——S. 2 (a) — Compulsory deposit—Fund at credit of retired servant is also compulsory deposit — Not liable to attachment nor can it be assigned or charged — No receiver can be appointed. See Civil P. C., Ss. 51 and 63 (k) and (i). AIR 1952 S C 227.

● —Ss. 2 (a), 3 (1)—Compulsory deposit—Fund at credit of retired servant — Not liable to attachment — No receiver can be appointed—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 60 (k).

The definition in S. 2 (a), Provident Funds Act, makes it clear that the provident fund amount not paid to the subscriber after the date of his retirement is also a compulsory deposit. Such a deposit cannot be assigned or charged and is not liable to attachment under S. 3(1) of the Provident Funds Act. It is exempt from attachment and sale also under S. 60 (k), Civil P. C. Normally no execution can lie against such a sum nor can a receiver be appointed for collecting the money.

The prohibition against the assignment or the attachment of such compulsory deposits is based on grounds of public policy. Where the interdiction is absolute, to allow a judgment creditor to get at the fund indirectly by means of the appointment of a receiver would be to circumvent the statute and frustrate the very object of the legislation. ——S. 2 (e) — Insurance amount — (Rules framed by Government for working of Provident Funds maintained by District Boards — Rules 3, 5, 6, 7, 10, 12, 13).

Before it can be held that the insured amount is an increment accruing on the subscriptions or contributions forming part of the Provident Fund, it must be established that the said sums are invested as forming part of the Provident Fund. Though the rules are made to help a subscriber to insure his life and to facilitate payment of premiums they treat the premiums paid only as advances to the subscriber. The insured amount minus the amount necessary to cover the advances made towards the premiums is not part of it. In this view the entire amount standing to the credit of a subscriber in the Provident Fund account and that part of the insured amount sufficient to recoup the advances made from and out of the Provident Fund towards the premiums would be the absolute property of the nominee and in regard to the balance of the Provident Fund, the nominee would succeed to such right as he would be entitled under personal law. 1955 Andhra W R 710: 1955 Andh L T (Cri) 658 : ILR (1956) Andh Pra 360 : AIR 1957 Andh Pra 887 (889) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

● ——S. 3 — Provident Fund — Rules providing that on adjudication of subscriber as insolvent, amount standing to his credit shall be liable to be forfeited to the Fund — Validity of — (Contract Act (1872), Ss. 17 and 23).

Where a rule of Provident Fund Rules provides that on the adjudication of the subscriber as an insolvent, the amount standing to his credit in the Fund shall be liable to be forfeited to the Fund, such condition or agreement is invalid. A man may give (in India only by will) property or its income to a donee with a condition that the donee's interest will cease on bankruptcy and the property will in that event go to another; if insolvency supervenes, the property will not vest in the Official Receiver. If there is no gift over on the cesser of the donee's interest, the property will revert to the donee and will vest in the Official Receiver on the donee's insolvency. But a person cannot enter into any arrangement or agreement by which his own title will cease in the event of bankruptcy for it would then be a fraud perpetrated on the Insolvency law. The prohibition against the assignment or the attachment of compulsory deposit is based on grounds of public policy. ——Ss. 3 and 2—Vesting of money after subscriber's death—No liability to pay debt of subscriber.

The position of all compulsory deposits mentioned in S. 3 (1) and defined in S. 2 (a) is that the sum standing to the credit of the subscriber or depositor at the time of his decease shall vest in the dependant subject to any deduction authorized by the Act and subject to the right of an assignee under an assignment made before the commencement of this Act. The second condition as to the vesting being subject to the rights of the assignee under an assignment made before the commencement of the Act, is not to apply in case the dependant is the widow or child of the subscriber or depositor.

But whether the vesting is to be subject to the rights of an assignee under the assignment made before the commencement of the Act or not, the money so vested is in every case free from any debt or liability incurred by the deceased or incurred by the dependant before the death of the subscriber or depositor. 1955 A M L J 81 : AIR 1956 Ajmer 7 (7) (Pr 3).

——S. 3 (1)—Direction in decree to send amount to subscriber's wife amounts to assignment.

The direction in the decree of a Court to the Railway Administration to send a portion of the amount from the provident fund due to subscriber amounts to an assignment of that portion. Such a direction is not binding on the Railway Administration because it contravenes the provisions of S. 3 (1) of the Provident Funds Act. AIR 1952 S C 227, Rel. on; AIR 1938 Oudh 48, Held no longer good law. AIR 1953 All 1 (3, 4) (Pt B) (Prs 16, 18) (DB).

——S. 3 (2) and 4 (1) (a) — Railway Provident Fund —Fund vesting in dependant on death of subscriber —Right of Administrator General to receive fund—Constitution of India, Art. 226.

An Administrator General who is administering the estate of the deceased subscriber to a Railway Provident Fund has no right to receive the provident fund from the Railway authorities as it vests in the dependants under S. 3 (2) and does not form part of the estate of the deceased. Even a letter of authority from the guardian of the minor dependant of the subscriber would not constitute the Administrator General into a person 'authorised by law' to receive the payment on behalf of the minor as required by S. 4 (1) (a). Letters of Administration can govern the payment of the Provident Fund money only when the Provident Fund does not vest in a dependant under S. 3 (2) and is not payable to a dependant or a person authorised by law to receive payment under S. 4 (1) (a) of the Act. Even a nomination made, while the dependent is alive, would be against the provisions of sub-section (2) of S. 3 and would be invalid, AIR 1924 Sind 57 Dist. The remedy of the Administrator General, if any, is not by a writ of mandamus but in a regular court. 1951 All W R (HC) 559 : 1951 All L J 672 : ILR (1953) 2 All 323 : AIR 1951 All 815 (815, 816) (Prs 1 to 3) (DB).

——S. 3 — Railway Provident Fund — Payment of amount in manner suggested by subscriber — Effect —Civil P. C. (1908), S. 60 (1) (k) O. 21, Rr. 52 and 58—Contract Act (1872), S. 50.

It is well settled that as soon as the compulsory deposit is paid on to the subscriber, the amount so paid out ceases to be a compulsory deposit in a Provident Fund. It is also well settled that under S. 50 of the Contract Act payment of a debt may be made not only in cash but also in any other manner sanctioned or prescribed by the creditor.

Where a subscriber to the Railway Provident Fund desired payment of his deposit in the Provident Fund, in Sterling and also desired that remittance be made to him by a Bank draft in a named Bank in England and under the law, the only legal method of such remittance was to send the amount to the Reserve Bank of India for payment to the Bank in England. Illustration (d) to S. 50, Contract Act, read with the section itself justified the conclusion that by sending the cheques for the amount to the Reserve Bank of India, in performance of the manner of payment prescribed by the subscriber, the debt was discharged and the money must be deemed to have been paid out to the subscriber and such a sum of money looses all immunity from attachment.

Further, as the sum was deemed to have been paid to the subscriber and as such ceased to be the part of the compulsory deposit, the Union Government had no locus standi to object to the attachment of the sum in execution of a decree against the subscriber. A receiver in execution of a decree cannot be appointed of a Provident Fund amount which stood at the credit of the deceased judgment debtor at the time of his death; such amount vests in the dependents and ceases to be part of the assets of deceased judgment-debtor. ——S. 3—Extension of the Act to non-governmental or quasi-governmental institution can be made only in the manner laid down in S. 8—Even the principles underlying the provisions cannot be extended in any other manner —:Suit by wife of a deceased bank-employee for provident fund of the husband — Act not extended by notification to bank — Wife can claim the amount only as 'heir' to her husband and not as his dependent —Succession certificate necessary for obtaining the decree. See Provident Funds Act (1925), S. 8. AIR 1964 Mad 108 (DB).

● ——S. 3 (1)—Immunity from attachment — Extent of — Compulsory deposit paid over to the subscriber or depositor — If loses its character as such — Subscriber or depositor becoming insolvent — If the amount vests in the Official Assignee of Receiver in insolvency.

Section 3 (1) of the Provident Funds Act is intended to protect compulsory deposits only so long as they remained deposited in the fund. The immunity from attachment under S. 3 (1) of the Act does not attach to moneys paid over to the subscriber or depositor from his Provident Fund. When it is paid over to the person entitled to receive it, it ceases to retain its character as Provident Fund and becomes part of the person's ordinary money. Money belonging to one can be said to be in deposit only with another person or authority and not in the hands of the very person to whom it belongs. ——S. 3 (2) and S. 2 (a) — Railway Provident Fund standing to credit of subscriber — Decree against his wife prior to his death for joint debts of herself and deceased subscriber — Fund is immune from liability of attachment.

The railway provident fund, so long as it stands to the credit of the subscriber, is immune from the liability of attachment for the decree-debt incurred by him and his wife, the dependent of the subscriber, prior to his death. The addition of the words 'until the happening of some specified contingency' to the definition of the term 'compulsory deposit' in S. 2 (a) does not affect the protection extended to the provident fund after it becomes payable on the happening of the specified contingency, while it still stands to the credit of the subscriber. ——S. 3—Death of nominee of subscriber to fund — Heirs of nominee whether can obtain succession certificate — Succession Act (1925), S. 372.

The nominee of a subscriber to a provident fund has nothing more than a right to receive the amount; he does not get an absolute title to it. Under S. 3, Provident Funds Act, the amount standing to the credit of a subscriber at the time of his death can vest only in his dependent and not in the nominee. It follows, therefore, that upon the death of the nominee, whether before or after the death of the subscriber, the right of the nominee to recieve the amount cannot pass to his personal heirs. Hence if the nominee dies before the subscriber the nomination in his favour actually becomes null and void. In such circumstances, the personal heirs of the nominee have no locus standi in obtaining a succession certificate: AIR 1949 Sind 38, Rel. on; AIR 1929 Sind 158; AIR 1940 Cal 395 and AIR 1949 Nag 85, Ref. 1950 Nag L J 401 : ILR (1951) Nag 407 : AIR 1950 Nag 244 (246) (Pt C) (Pr 6).

——S. 3—Attachment of Provident Fund money — Prohibition — If absolute — Criminal Law Amendment Ordinance (1944), Ss. 3, 4, 5.

Under S. 3 of the Provident Funds Act there is an absolute interdiction to the attachment of a compulsory deposit in any Government or Railway Provident Fund account. The power of attachment of property under Ss. 3, 4, 5 of the Criminal Law Amendment Ordinance (1944) must be construed subject to the provisions of S. 3 of Provident Funds Act. Attachment creates no charge or lien upon the attached property but prevents and avoids private alienations and that is the meaning and effect of an attachment both under S. 3 (1) of the Provident Funds Act and Ss. 3, 4 and 5 of Ordinance No. 38 of 1944. ——S. 5 — Rights of a nominee under a nomination which was also a will.

Though a nominee under S. 5 of the Provident Funds Act merely acquires a right to receive the money and does not become the owner of it, where the nomination also amounts to a will under which the nominee is the legatee, the nominee would become entitled to the money on the death of the subscriber. AIR 1951 Ajmer 42 (44) (Pt B) (Prs 11, 12).

——S. 5—Provident Fund—Nomination under rules governing fund — Held the provident fund amount did not vest as absolute property in the nominee on the death of the subscriber.

Under Rule 23 of the Employees' Provident Fund Rules of the Central Bank of India an employee who was a subscriber of the fund nominated his wife. The Rule in question provided that each member may nominate in writing any person to whom the amount standing to the credit of such member shall be paid, in the event of his death while in the service of the Bank or before his claim on the Fund shall have been discharged and may from time to time change such nomination in writing.

Held, that the provident fund amount in the hands of the wife after the death of the subscriber, was liable for attachment for a debt due by him. The nominee under the Rules did not become the owner of the amount payable to her on the death of the subscriber. The nomination by itself conferred no right on the nominee, during the life time of the subscriber and only gave a bare right to collect the amount on the subscriber's death. A receiver of moneys was not the owner of the moneys. Hence the provident fund amount was not the absolute property of the nominee on the death of the subscriber. AIR 1961 Kerala 126 (FB), Rel. on. ILR (1963) 1 Ker 493: AIR 1964 Ker 197 (198) (Prs 2, 3).

——S. 5 — Scope — Nature of interest taken by nominee — Death of nominee during lifetime of subscriber—Effect.

Section 5 merely wipes out all the personal and other law for the time being in force and also sets at naught any other disposition by the subscriber, whether testamentary or otherwise, creating a right in the nominee to receive the money from the Government or the other holder of the provident fund. The nomination confers this right on the nominee absolutely. This does not make the nominee the owner of the fund. So long as the nomination stands, the nominee is required only to prove that he is the person nominated by the subscriber and he can then receive the amount without any conditions being imposed on him.

The nomination is in its nature testamentary and being ambulatory the death of the nominee in the lifetime of the subscriber defeats the nomination, so that on the death of the member his legal personal representative is entitled to the property and not the legal representative of the nominee. ——S. 7—Scope and applicability.

Section 7, Provident Funds Act, affords protection to the officers acting bona fide under that Act. No suit or action lies against any officer for any action taken by him bona fide under any provision of Provident Funds Act. Where the suit is not directed against any officer for any action taken by him under any of the provisions of that Act but is a claim against the Government for a sum which the plaintiff considers is due to him under the rules which govern his conditions of service such a suit is not within the ambit of S. 7, Provident Funds Act. —S. 7—Local Boards Provident Fund Rules made under Madras Local Boards Act, 1928, R. 22—Retired employee of District Board— His provident fund amount cannot be witheld or transferred to deposit account for deduction of amount found due under liability incurred by subscriber — Suit for recovery of amount is not barred. See Provident Funds Act (19 of 1925), S. 6. AIR 1963 Orissa 181 (DB).

—Ss. 8 and 2 (e)—(Rules framed by Government for working of Provident Funds maintained by District Boards, Rr. 3, 5, 6, 7, 10, 12, 13)—Insurance amount — The rules are made to help a subscriber to insure his life and to facilitate payment of premium and they treat the premium paid only as advances to the subscriber. The insured amount minus the amount necessary to cover the advances made towards the premium is not part of it. See Provident Funds Act (1925), S. 2 (e). AIR 1957 Andh Pra 887 (DB).

—Ss. 8, 3 and 2 (c)—Extension of the Act to non-Governmental or quasi-Governmental institution can be made only in the manner laid down in S. 8—Even the principles underlying the provisions cannot be extended in any other manner—Suit by wife of a deceased bank employee for provident fund of her husband—Act not extended by notification to bank—Wife can claim the amount only as 'heir' to her husband and not as his dependent—Succession certificate necessary for obtaining the decree.

Provisions of Provident Funds Act can be extended to quasi-Governmental or other institutions which are not Governmental, only in the manner indicated in S. 8 of the Act. The manner of extension of the provisions being indicated, extension of the principles of the provisions as distinguished from the provisions themselves, will not be consistent with the special mode of extension provided by the section.

In a suit by the wife of a deceased bank employee for recovery of the amount at the credit of the employee the trial Court, assuming that though the Act was not made applicable to the bank by a notification of the Government, the statutory principles underlying the provisions were, nonetheless applicable, rejected the prayer by the Bank that plaintiff ought to produce Succession Certificate on the ground that the plaintiff was not suing as a mere heir but also as a dependent. The Bank appealed :

Held, that in the absence of a notification extending the provisions of the Act to the bank, the statutory principles could not be extended to the fund. The plaintiff could not therefore claim the amount in her capacity as a dependent as defined in the Act. As an heir of her husband she was obliged to produce a succession certificate in order to obtain a decree in her favour. (1965) 2 Lab L J 50 : AIR 1964 Mad 108 (109, 110) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 7) (DB).

PROVIDENT FUNDS RULES

—Construction—Rule providing that, in case of dismissal, contributor shall be paid his own contribution—Meaning of "dismissal".

A Provident Fund Rule of a Co-operative Bank provided: 'In case the contributor is dismissed from his service and in the bank he shall be paid his own contribution up to the date of his dismissal together with interest calculated thereon for the whole number of years preceding his dismissal, but shall forfeit all other benefits from the fund'.

Held, that the meaning of the expression 'dismissal' in the rule has to be read in the light of the employee's service conditions as determined by the relevant bye-laws and if under the bye-laws the bank were not bound to assign reasons for effecting a dismissal, a termination of service so brought about would also be 'dismissal' within the Provident Fund Rules, and the employee would therefore be entitled to his own contribution and interest thereon. PROVINCES AND STATES (ABSORPTION OF ENCLAVES) ORDER (1950)

——Cls. 3, 5 and 8—Scope and effect — Surrender of area from Madras to Mysore after commission of offence and institution of case but before charge-sheet — Jurisdiction of Mysore Magistrate to try charge.

An offence was committed on 21st May 1949, in Kote Shirur, which then formed part of the Madras State, and the case was originally instituted in the Magistrate of Coondapur in South Canara District, Madras. At the time of the charge-sheet, the place became part of the Mysore State by reason of the surrender of the area by the Madras State to Mysore State under the Provinces and States (Absorption of Enclaves) Order, 1950. The accused objected to the Magistrate of Coondapur proceeding with the case, which was upheld. The police then placed a charge-sheet before the Magistrate of Sagar in Mysore within whose jurisdiction the area surrendered fell and was absorbed, but the Magistrate declined to entertain it on the ground that the proper Court was Court in Coondapur and not the Court in Mysore.

Held : (on a reference by the District Magistrate), that the combined effect of Cls. 3, 5 and 8 of the Absorption of Enclaves Order, 1950, was to vest the Magistrate of Sagar in Mysore with jurisdiction to deal with the cases relating to offences alleged to have been committed in the surrendered area even prior to the Order, and therefore the Magistrate of Sagar in Mysore was competent to proceed with the case and acted erroneously in declining to entertain the case. The question whether the act complained of was punishable according to the law of Mysore, if the law in Madras, on the date of the commission of the offence was different was not a factor in determining the forum for trial the only point being one of jurisdiction. CLAUSE 8 ——Cl. 8 — Scope and effect of — Village outside Mysore becoming part of Mysore by absorption under order,— Laws of Mysore — Application of — Special notification—Necessity—Mysore Agricultural Relief Act—Operation of, in absorbed area.

Under Cl. 8 of the Provinces and States Absorption of Enclaves) Order, 1950 all laws in force in the absorbing unit at the time are automatically extended to the absorbed territory or enclave from the time of the absorption and becomes the law in force in that area. It is not necessary that a specific notification extending a specific law or specific laws should be issued or published. Where an enclave outside Mysore is absorbed and made part of Mysore under the order, the Mysore Agriculturists Relief Act becomes extended to the absorbed enclave which becomes part of Mysore thenceforward and the Act can be applied to residents of that locality as if the Act has been in force there; it cannot be objected that the Act has not been specifically extended to the area or village by notification specially issued. 31 Mys LJ 135 : AIR 1952 Mys 2 (2, 3) (Prs 3, 4, 5).

——Cl. 8, Proviso—Suit properly filed at L in Punjab —Subsequent transfer of village to Pepsu — Jurisdiction of District Judge in Pepsu to entertain appeal from decree.

Held, that once the suit had been so instituted in a Court of competent jurisdiction at L, that Court had jurisdiction to continue the proceedings in the suit and to dispose of it. Subsequent transfer of the territory to Pepsu could not divest that Court of jurisdiction in that suit. An appeal from that Court did not lie to the Court of a District Judge in Pepsu so the appeal in the case was not competent in the Court of District Judge at B. S. 16, Civil P. C. had no application in the circumstances.

(2) that even consideration of the proviso to Cl. 8 of the Enclaves Order did not help the party because it did not confer jurisdiction upon the Courts in Pepsu to hear appeals from the Courts in the neighbouring State of Punjab. See Civil P. C. (1908), S. 16. AIR 1955 N U C (Pepsu) 3997.

——R. 22—Removal from service.

Though where the appointing authority under special Rules is the High Court and it is the High Court at Madras that can terminate or discharge a person from service in compliance with the provisions of R. 22 of the General Rules, still under Art. 310 of the Constitution, the Governor can certainly remove the person but he can do so after complying with the provisions of Art. 311 of the Constitution. PROVINCIAL DEBT LAWS (TEMPORARY VALIDATION) ORDINANCE (11 of 1945)

See under Debt Laws.

PROVINCIAL INSOLVENCY ACT (5 of 1920)

——S. 1—Object of Act.

The preference to be shown to the diligent creditor cannot be carried further than the advantages provided for under the Provincial Insolvency Act. The insolvency law has a twofold purpose to serve. One is to give relief to the debtor from the harassment of his creditors whose claims he is unable to meet and the other is to prevent a scramble among the creditors to get at the assets of the debtor promoting fraud and collusion between the creditor and debtor and facilitating the vicious principle of each one for himself and provide a machinery by which all creditors are equitably satisfied. AIR 1956 Mad 157 (159) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

——S. 1 — Sale of insolvent's property by Official Receiver — Notice to petitioning creditor not given — Effect — Setting aside sale—Offer of higher price by petitioning creditor—If valid ground.

A sale made by the Official Receiver without notice of the same to the petitioning creditor resulting in a low price has to be set aside especially where the petitioning creditor comes forward with an offer of nearly 50 per cent. more than the price for which the sale had been made and the sale has not been fair or just.

It cannot be held that because there was no fraud or illegality or irregularity in the conduct of the sale by the Official Receiver the sale was not liable to be set aside.

Difference between a sale in execution of a decree and a sale by an Official Receiver discussed. (1953) 2 M L J 411 : AIR 1954 Mad 79 (80) (Pr 4).

——S. 1 — Annulment of insolvency on ground of adjudication being result of collusion between petitioning creditor and debtor — Effect on declaration obtained by Official Receiver that sale deed and mortgage-deed by insolvent were not binding—Death of debtor — Heirs — Suit by for recovery of lands covered by sale deed and mortgage deed — Competency.

Where the insolvency was annulled on the ground that there was collusion between the alleged petitioning creditor and the insolvent, the fraud vitiates all transactions and when once the fraudulent decree has been set aside, it is as if there has been no decree at all. In the collusive proceedings that culminated in the adjudication of the debtor, there is no real controversy between the parties and there was nothing which the Court decided. The proceedings before the Court were a make-believe and a sham fight. Such being the case the annulment of the adjudication would result in this, namely, that all transactions that have taken place and all proceedings that would have been gone through during the pendency of the insolvency would be completly wiped off. If that is so, then the decision by which the sale and the mortgage deeds executed by the debtor were declared invalid also became null and void, with the result that the documents remain in the same position as they had been but for the insolvency.

By the circumstance that the insolvency proceedings have been annulled all actions done and all proceedings taken during such period also get annulled and the proceedings by which the deeds have been declared void have also got annulled.

In any event the heirs of the debtor cannot take advantage of a decision obtained by the Official Receiver declaring the sale and mortgage deeds not valid and binding. They have not succeeded to the rights of the Official Receiver, because the Official Receiver represents not only the insolvent but also the creditors.

Accordingly the heirs of the debtor (after his death) have no subsisting cause of action against persons in possession of lands under the sale-deed and usufructuary mortgage deed executed by the insolvent though the deeds have been declared to be not binding in proceedings during the pendency of the insolvency. Such a suit is not maintainable. 1952 Mad W N 836 : 65 Mad L W 1107 : (1952) 2 M L J 823 : AIR 1953 Mad 620 (621, 622) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Ss. 2 (1) (d) and 28 (2) — Money standing to the credit of insolvent in provident fund vests in in Official Receiver — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 60).

It cannot be said that the 'property' mentioned in the Insolvency Act must be such that the insolvent has an absolute and unconditional present disposing power over the same. The word 'property' includes even property which may belong to or is vested in another but over which the insolvent has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit. This part of the definition of 'property' has reference obviously to powers of appointment and the power of a Hindu father who is the managing member of a joint family. The fact that on the date of the adjudication the insolvent could not transfer the property does not militate against the view that he has a vested interest in the same.

According to the Provident Fund Rules of a company every member was allowed to contribute any sum not exceeding one twelfth of his earnings and such amounts were credited in the name of each member in an account called 'A' account. An equal amount was paid by the company and was called 'B' account. An increased contribution was payable by the company in certain events and this was called 'C' account. The management of the fund vested in the trustees. The membership was voluntary and there was no transfer of the ownership of the Fund. The monies of the Fund might be invested by the trustees but the subscriber did not divest himself of control over the Fund. A subscriber became insolvent.

Held, that a subscriber had a present interest in the Fund though the moneys might become payable to him, or his nominee or heirs only in the future. Even where there was a declaration about the nominee who was to receive payment after the subscriber's death, the fund would still be the property of the subscriber in the hands of the nominee for the satisfaction of his debts, as there was no present gift to take effect immediately. The subscribers had an interest in the moneys which could vest in the Official Receiver on their adjudication. Hence the right, title and interest of the insolvent in the moneys standing to his credit in A and C Accounts respectively would vest in the Official Receiver. AIR 1951 Pat 488, Reversed. ——S. 2 (2)—Exemptions under Civil P.C.—If apply to attachment and sale by Official Receiver.

In view of Ss. 2 (2) and 5 (1) in the matter of attachment and sale of insolvent's properties, the provisions applicable under the Act must be regarded as materially the same as those of the Civil Procedure Code.

The exemptions contained in S. 60, Civil P. C., are based on reasonable and equitable grounds and considarations and they are applicable to the proceedings by way of attachment and sale taken out by the Official Receiver in the exercise of powers vested in him under the Provincial Insolvency Act. ——S. 2 (1) (d) — "Property" — Present disposing power.

The definition of "property" in S. 2 (1) (d) appears to be modelled on S. 60 (1), Civil P. C. Unless the insolvent has got a present disposing power, which he may exercise for his own benefit, over a property, it will not be considered to be one coming within this definition. AIR 1950 Cal 487 (488) (Pt A) (Pr 8).

——S. 2 (1) (f)—"Any transfer"—What amounts to "transfer"—Held, that the surrender deed executed by the insolvent though clothed as a relinquishment amounted to transfer of property within the meaning of S. 2 (1) (f). See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 53. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 3144.

——Ss. 2 (d), 28 (2), 56 (3), Proviso — Property — Meaning of—Provident Fund.

Whatever the nature of the property may be the insolvent should have an interest in present to dispose of the same, and not such an interest which may depend upon the fulfilment of certain conditions or contingencies. The definition of the term "property" as used in the Act contemplates that the power of disposition must be an unconditional power. It is only such a property that is divisible amongst the creditors of the insolvent.

Rules 17 and 18 of the Rules of the Provident Fund created by the Tinplate Company of India Ltd., for the benefit of their employees show that the members of the fund have no disposing power over the fund. They are bound by the rules and it is only on the conditions mentioned in the rules that the fund under certain circumstances becomes payable to the members concerned. That being so, the said funds are not the property of the insolvent members within the meaning of S. 2 (d) and are not divisible amongst the creditors as contemplated by S. 28 (2). By the mere act of insolvency the insolvent members cannot compel the trustees to make payment of the funds standing in the various accounts, and if the insolvents cannot do so, the receiver of the Court cannot remove the trustees from the custody of the same as enjoined by the proviso to sub-s. ——Ss. 2 (e), 9 (2) and 28 (2) and (6) —"Secured creditor"—Petition by.

The definition of the term "secured creditor" is to be understood as confined to his capacity qua the secured debt and not comprehending his capacity as regards debts for which there is no security.

A creditor to whom the insolvent debtor owes secured as well unsecured debts cannot be held to be a secured creditor qua the unsecured debts and is entitled to file a petition for insolvency without valuation of the security or its abandonment as contemplated by S. 9 (2). If this were not so the equity of redemption would operate as security for the unsecured debts due to the secured creditor, i. e., a situation which is the very opposite of what is envisaged by the Insolvency Act. The object of proceedings in insolvency is to render the assets of the insolvent as at their inception available undiminished if not augmented, for liquidation of his liabilities: (1882) 19 Ch D 105 : AIR 1940 Nag 252 : (1924) 2 Ch 199, Ref. to. SECTION 3

——Ss. 3 (1), 75—Order by subordinate Court invested with powers under S. 3—Appeal against—Whether lies to High Court.

It is the subordinate Court that is invested with jurisdiction by a notification under S. 3 and when so invested with jurisdiction, it has got the same powers as the District Court but there is no provision in S. 3 (1) which makes the Civil Judge the Court of principal civil jurisdiction when there is a District Judge for that area. No appeal therefore lies to the High Court against the orders of the Court so invested with jurisdiction. ('51) 1951 A L J 280 : 1951 All W R (H C) 471 : AIR 1952 All 423 (423) (Pr 2) (DB).

——S. 3 (1)—Notification under S. 3 investing subordinate Court with insolvency jurisdiction — Effect —Order of Assistant Judge in insolvency proceeding —Appeal—Forum—Notwithstanding the notification, the Assistant Judge will still be a Court subordinate to the District Court and therefore appeal against order passed by him in insolvency jurisdiction would lie to the District Court and not the High Court—(Saurashtra District and Subordinate Civil Court Ordinance (11 of 1948), S. 5)—(Words and Phrases — 'Concurrent jurisdiction'). See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 75 (1). AIR 1959 Bom 47 (DB).

——S. 3 (1), Proviso—Notification by limiting jurisdiction of Court to debts upto Rs. 2,000—Effect and validity.

It is permissible to the State Government under the Proviso to S. 3 (1) to restrict the jurisdiction of a Court Subordinate to the District Court by specifying the class of cases in which it will have jurisdiction. No doubt, after such investiture that Court will have jurisdiction concurrently with the District Court but this concurrent jurisdiction will only be limited to the class of cases which the notification authorised it to entertain. This is the plain meaning of the provision and, therefore, the notification, No. 1596 1212-XIX dated 16th May, 1938 limiting the jurisdiction of certain subordinate Courts to entertain petitions in which the value of the debts alleged does not exceed Rs. 2,000 cannot be regarded as ultra vires. 1958-Nag L J 83 : 60 Bom L R 505 : ILR (1959) Bom 194.

——S. 3—Creditor bank impleaded as supplementary respondent in application for adjudication of debtor —Bank wound up during pendency of insolvency application—Winding up does not oust jurisdiction of insolvency Court to adjudicate debtor an insolvent. See Banking Companies Act (1949), S. 49-B. 1961 Ker L J 658.

——S. 3—Debtor of banking company under liquidation — Application for adjudication as insolvent—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court to entertain application is not taken away by Ss. 45A and 45B of the Banking Companies Act, 1949. A question relating to the debtor of a Banking Company in liquidation does not relate to the winding up of that company as contemplated by S. 45-B. See Banking Companies Act (1949), S. 45-A. AIR 1962 Mad 75 (DB).

——S. 3—Scope—If inconsistent with S 25, Manipur (Courts) Act—Subordinate Judge—Jurisdiction to try insolvency cases — (Manipur (Courts) Act (1955) S. 25).

Both the Provincial Insolvency Act and Manipur (Courts) Act are Central Acts and one cannot prevail over the other. Under S. 3 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the State Government may invest the Subordinate Judge with concurrent jurisdiction in insolvency matters. There is thus no conflict between the provisions of the two Acts and the Subordinate Judge is quite competent to dispose of a case transferred to him by the District Judge. AIR 1960 Manipur 53 (53) (Pr 4) (DB).

SYNOPSIS

(Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 4.)

1. Scope and applicability.
2. Power and duty of insolvency Court.
3. Jurisdiction of insolvency Court.
4. Applicability of provisions of Civil P. C.
5. Gift to wife.
6. Insolvency of Hindu father or manager.
7. Transfer from transferee.
8. Applicability of Limitation Act.

1. Scope and applicability.

——S. 4—Sale of insolvent's property by Official Receiver—Insolvent can maintain application to set aside sale.

Even though the property is vested in the Official Receiver or in a trustee, the insolvent has a subsisting interest in the property. Therefore, if the properties of a debtor which are vested in a trustee by an order of insolvency Court are sold out at an undervaluation the debtor is unquestionably aggrieved by such an act. He is entitled to apply under S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to set aside the sale, on the ground of fraud. But though the debtor has interest in the properties, his interest does not permit him to meddle with the administration of the same. But the debtor can certainly complain if in selling the properties or in collecting the assets the Official Receiver or trustee acts fraudulently or illegally or in excess of the authority given to the trustee by the insolvency Court. Subject to this limitation the trustee's discretion is unfettered and the debtor has no right either to interfere or to complain against the costs of the Trustee. 44 Cal W N 665, Expl. and applied.

The application can be made even after the annulment order. Upon an annulment of the order of adjudication, the insolvency proceedings are not automatically terminated. Therefore, whenever there is a vesting order following an order of annulment insolvency proceedings do in fact continue. AIR 1943 Cal 133 and AIR 1936 Cal 573, Rel. on. AIR 1963 Cal 587 (587, 588) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 6, 7) (DB).

——S. 4 (1)—Scope—Distinction between this section and S. 45B of Banking Companies Act, 1949—While S. 4 is limited to question which may arise in any case of insolvency, S. 45B is wider and refers to questions which may relate to or arise in the course of winding up proceedings. See Banking Companies Act (1949) S. 45-B (1). AIR 1954 Orissa 139.

——S. 4 (3) — Applicability — Order for sale of property alleged to be of insolvent — Enquiry into title.

Where the insolvent opposes an order for sale of properties alleged to be belonging to him, on the ground that the properties were sold or belong to his co-sharers but does not specify the date of sale nor the names of purchasers, his opposition is frivolous and the order for sale must be deemed to be one under S. 4 (3) in which no enquiry was expedient or necessary. AIR 1928 Lah 556; AIR 1919 Cal 507; AIR 1925 Cal 932, Distinguished. 1955 B L J R 517 : AIR 1955 Pat 503 (504) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 4—Scope—Order under S. 24.

The summary enquiry under S. 24 as to whether a debtor is entitled to present a petition has nothing to do with S. 4 which ordinarily comes into play after adjudication in disputes between the debtor's estate represented by a receiver and the claims of one or all of his creditors. A I R 1938 Lah 490, Rel, on. A I R AIR 1955 Pat 413 (417) (Pt E) (Pr 14) (DB).

——S. 4—Claim application under S. 4 on attachment of property by Receiver—Application made more than 21 days after attachment—It is barred under Proviso to S. 68.

It is not obligatory on a stranger to apply to the Insolvency Court at all to establish his title to property, possession of which is taken by the Receiver; he can go to the ordinary Court to establish his title within the ordidary period of limitation. If, however, he does want a relief to be given to him against what he considers to be an improper act of the Receiver, he must comply with the provisions of S. 68 and take the consequences that follow with regard to the finality of the orders, as provided under Ss. 4 and 75 of the Act. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 68, Proviso. AIR 1963 Punj 243 (DB).

——Ss. 4 and 14—Scope and applicability —Withdrawal of insolvency petition before adjudication as a result of compromise among creditors — Order granting leave does not constitute res judicata so far as question whether compromise is beneficial to minors and binding on them — (Travancore Insolvency Act (8 of 1108), Ss. 4 and 14) — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 and O. 32, R. 7).

Section 4 applies only to decisions of questions arising in cases of insolvency and no case of insolvency can be said to have arisen when the fact of insolvency and the right to maintain the insolvency petition is disputed and no order of adjudication has been passed. An insolvency petition can be withdrawn under S. 14 only before the order of adjudication is passed. After the order of adjudication an insolvency petition cannot be withdrawn even with the leave of the Court, for the debtor has become an insolvent by the order of adjudication. Therefore, it is only an annulment of the order of adjudication and not a withdrawal of the insolvency petition that can be made after the order of adjudication. Section 14 applies only to withdrawals before adjudication. Matters which have to be considered under S. 14 cannot therefore be said to be matters arising in a case of insolvency; so S. 4 can have no application to them at all. The effect of the withdrawal of a petition is that the position of the parties would be as if no insolvency petition had been filed, and the creditors would be free to enforce their claim against the debtor subject to any discharge effected or lawful agreement made between them after the institution of the insolvency petition. A compromise in pursuance of which leave for withdrawing the insolvency petition is granted is entirely different from a composition scheme sanctioned and accepted by the Court after the order of adjudication. The composition scheme sanctioned and accepted by the Court after the order of adjudication bears the authority of the Court and is a complete answer to all the claims made against the insolvent. The compromise before the order of adjudication in pursuance of which leave is applied for and granted to withdraw the insolvency petition does not bear the authority of the Court.

An insolvency petition was withdrawn by leave of Court prior to adjudication as a result of compromise among the creditors. Neither the guardian for the minor creditors nor any counsel had certified to the Court that the compromise was beneficial to the minors. Nor had the insolvency Court considered the question whether the compromise was beneficial to minors. The minors subsequently sued for full recovery of their dues on ground that the compromise was not binding on them.

Held, that the order granting leave to withdraw the insolvency petitions did not constitute res judicata so far as the question whether the compromise was beneficial to the minors and was binding on them was concerned. Held, further, on the facts and circumstances of the case that the compromise to accept half the dues in discharge of the full debt entered into by the guardian on behalf of the minors was highly prejudicial to their interest and the guardian had not acted with reasonable care and prudence which the guardian of a minor should normally exercise in such matters. Hence, the compromise was not binding on them and they were entitled to recover the whole amount due. M. K. Muhammed Pillai v. Pariyathu Pillai Abdulkadir. I L R (1955) Trav-Co 909 : 1955 Ker L T 641 : A I R 1956 Trav-Co 27 (28, 29) (Prs 4, 5, 6) (FB).

2. Power and duty of insolvency Court.

——S. 4 (1) and (3)—Powers of Court—Sale of debtor's interest in property should be directed only when Court does not deem it expedient or necessary to decide the question of the nature referred to in S. 4 (1) — Stay of sale of debtor's interest in property held proper. AIR 1955 N U C (Ajmer) 336.

——S. 4 — Scope — Powers of Insolvency Court — Application by Receiver to set aside decree — Insolvency proceedings engineered by debtor — Provision cannot be called in aid to benefit insolvent.

Under the scheme of the Insolvency law, on adjudication, the Receiver is to take possession of the assets of the debtor, ascertain the liabilities and then make an equitable distribution of the assets among the creditors. The express language of S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act brings out the object of the Insolvency law. The powers of the Insolvency Court under the section are wide and necessarily exercisable to achieve the said object.

In the instant case, there are good reasons to believe that the entire insolvency proceedings were engineered by the debtor himself seeking to benefit by these proceedings. There are clinching circumstances to show that the Official Receiver's application to set aside the decree, if successful, would yield benefits to the insolvent, That is not the object to be achieved by S. 4 of the Act. 1965 2 Andh W R 125 : (1965) 2 Andh L T 83 : A I R 1966 Andh Pra 114 (115) (Pr 11) (DB).

——S. 4—Scope—Duty of insolvency Court.

Section 4 gives wide powers to the Court to decide all questions arising in insolvency. The Court has jurisdiction to intervene whenever the Court thinks it necessary 'for the purpose of doing complete justice.' Where there are allegations of fraud on the part of the Official Receiver in conducting sale of the insolvent's property the Court has ample powers unders S. 4 to look into the allegations, as the debtor has locus standi to bring a question before the Court for decision. A I R 1963 Cal 587 (588) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Ss. 4 and 37—Application for payment of money against stranger—Order on — Annulment of adjudication — Quondam insolvent's right to execute order as a decree — Failure to execute — Effect — Limitation.

When money is due to a person who has been adjudicated an insolvent and the Official Receiver in whom the estate of that person has become vested files a suit to realise that sum of money, it cannot be said that he is representing any of the creditors of the insolvent in realising that sum of money. After an adjudication has been annulled, it is open to the quondam insolvent to take such steps regarding his property which he could ordinarily have done unless there had been an order under S. 37 (1), clause (2), of the Provincial Insolvency Act, vesting the property in a trustee or in the Official Receiver.

An order for payment of money on an application under S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is tantamount to a decree and if after annulment of adjudication the insolvent failed to apply for execution and three years had elapsed, the Official Receiver cannot on the setting aside of the annulment seek to execute such decree. 1951 Mad W N 412 : 64 Mad L W 661 : (1951) 1 M L J 551 : A I R 1951 Mad 879 (2) (880) (Pr 3) (DB).

——S. 4 — Power of Court—Agreement between insolvent and transferee to gift part to insolvent's minor son—Transferee selling to insolvent's nephew — Receiver applying for payment of the purchase money — Proceeding cannot be treated as suit for damages which was proper remedy.

There was an agreement between the insolvent and his transferee, the mortgagee, that the latter should gift a portion of the property to the minor son of the insolvent but the transferee collusively sold a portion to the insolvent's nephew. The receiver alleged that the transaction was benami being really in favour of the son and applied for a direction that the amount of the purchase money be paid to him.

Held, that the breach of agreement by the transferee might have been the foundation of a suit for damages but that the proceedings could not be converted by the insolvency Court into a suit for damages and the Court could not treat the money as payable to the insolvent without due process of law. 1951 N L J (Notes) 196.

——S. 4—Scope—Power to direct ad interim receiver to take possession of joint family property — Resort cannot be had to S. 4 for giving the interim receiver possession of such property as that would be to override express provisions of S. 20 which permits the Court to appoint a receiver for the property of the debtor only — S. 4 cannot override express provisions of S. 20. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 20. AIR 1954 Pat 459 (DB).

——S. 4— Power of Insolvency Court to set aside auction—Sale of insolvent's property—Grounds for.

In cases arising under the Provincial Insolvency Act the provisions of Order 21, Civil P. C. have to be applied subject to what is contained inter alia in S. 4 of the Act which provides that the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice. That being so, it cannot be maintained that an Insolvency Court has no power to set aside an auction-sale on grounds not falling within Order 21 of the Code. Section 4 of the Act empowers the Court to set aside an auction sale if the Court deems it expedient or necessary for the purpose of doing complete justice. AIR 1931 Lah 733, Rel. on.

Where the sale of insolvent's property held by the Collector contravenes the provisions of S. 60 of the Act as amended by Punjab Act 3 of 1939, it is open to the Insolvency Judge to consider the objections that may arise under S. 60 and consider on the facts and circumstances of the case the question of the legality of the sale before confirming it. 54 Punj L R 121 : AIR 1952 Punj 222 (224) (Pt B) (Prs 16, 17) (DB).

——Ss. 4, 51 (3) and 56 (3)—Sale of insolvent's property after adjudication — Relief of possession by Official Receiver — Power of Court to grant relief—A Court sale of an insolvent's properties at the instance of an unsecured creditor is void. if the sale has been conducted after the order of adjudication. In such a case it is open to the Official Receiver to request the Court for an order directing the auction purchaser to put the official Receiver in possession of the property sold under S. 4 and it is open to the Court to grant such relief under S. 56 (3). AIR 1951 Trav-Co 193 (195) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

3. Jurisdiction of insolvency Court.

● ——Ss. 4, 24 and 33 — Jurisdiction and power of Insolvency Court—In view of the provisions of S. 11 of the Patiala Recovery of State Dues Act no civil Court can have jurisdiction to determine these two matters viz. determining the amount of State dues recoverable and the liability of the alleged defaulter to pay the amount—The insolvency Court, however, is not precluded by S. 11 of that Act from inquiring into the question whether the alleged debtor was really a debtor and liable to pay sums said to be payable by him. It is well settled that the Insolvency Court can, both at the time of hearing the petition for adjudication of a person as insolvent and subsequently at the stage of proof of debts, reopen the transaction on the basis of which the creditor had secured the judgment of a Court against the debtor. See Debt Laws—Patiala Recovery of State Dues Act (4 of 2002 B K.), S. 4. AIR 1964 S C 1223.

——S. 4—Property sold by official receiver — Petitioner claiming title to share and asking for sale to be set aside where claminant wants that his share should be left untouched by the sale, it is a case where he approaches the Court to determine his title and that he is competent to do under S. 4 only—Petition falls under S. 4 and is not an appeal under S. 68 —Hence no question of bar of limitation prescribed by proviso to S. 68 can arise in regard to it. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 68, Proviso. AIR 1963 Andh-Pra 296.

——S. 4—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court if exclusive—Separate suit if barred — (C. P. Code (1908), S. 9).

What S. 4 purports to do is to confer power on the Insolvency Court to decide certain questions, and where a question is decided by it then under sub-s. (2) of S. 4 its decision shall be final and binding and can no longer be challenged in any other proceeding. It does not confer exclusive jurisdiction on the Court to deal with such questions. Hence a suit by the creditors for a declaration that the property purchased by them in execution of a decree against the insolvent is not liable to attachment and sale in insolvency proceedings pending against him will not be barred if the question raised in the suit has not been decided by the Insolvency Court. 1958 Nag L J 367 : 60 Bom L R 1017 : ILR (1959) Bom 249 : AIR 1959 Bom 10 (11) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

——Ss. 4 and 54-A—Property vesting in Official Receiver on the adjustment of a person as insolvent — Receiver alone can invoke jurisdiction of Court under S. 4—Petition by individual creditor for annulment of a transfer made by the insolvent is not maintainable.

When a person has been adjudged insolvent and his entire property vests in the Official Receiver, the Receiver alone can invoke the jurisdiction of the Court under S. 4. Hence a petition by a creditor, in his own name, for a declaration that certain properties formed part of the estate of the insolvent and that the Official Receiver should be directed to take possession of the same, is incompetent : A I R 1927 P C 108 and AIR 1924 Cal 827 and AIR 1941 Cal 298 and AIR 1942 Cal 584 and A I R 1935 Mad 809 and AIR 1935 Mad 46 and AIR 1924 Mad 345 and A I R 1922 Mad 246 and AIR 1942 P C 39, Rel. on.

It is true that under S. 54-A, any creditor who has proved his debt in insolvency, can take judicial proceeding with the leave of the Court, for the annulment of transfer under S. 53 or S. 54 but it is subject to the provision that he satisfies the Court that the Receiver had been requested and he had refused to take such proceeding. Under S. 4 it is true, very wide jurisdiction has been conferred on the insolvency Court to decide questions of title, or priority of any nature whatsoever arising in the course of insolvency. But the legal position of individual creditor remains unaltered because of the basic principle that, on the adjudication, the entire property of the insolvent vested in the Official Receiver, and he alone would be competent to represent the estate and transact business in regard thereto. If the creditor initiates any such proceeding, any decision rendered therein would not bind or affect the rights of the Official Receiver in any manner. Such a decision would not operate as res judicata, as the Official Receiver, in whom the properties have vested, had not been made a party, thereto. It is because of this utter futility of any proceeding prosecuted by the individual creditor that the law enjoins that the Official Receiver alone can prosecute such proceedings. 77 Mad L W 379 : 1964 Mad W N 311 : ILR (1964) 2 Mad 592 : (1965) 1 Mad L J 128 : AIR 1964 Mad 501 (501, 502) (Prs 4, 5, 8).

——Ss. 4, 5, 28 (6) and 53—Jurisdiction of insolvency Court to issue injunction.

Though an insolvency Court will not restrain a mortgagee or other secured creditor in the exercise of his legal remedies under S. 28 of the Act, it has jurisdiction in proper cases to restrain him under O. 39, R. 1, Civil P. C., if there are substantial grounds for impeaching his title, with a view to safeguard the interests of the general body of creditors.

Observations to the contrary in A I R 1925 Mad 1051 held to be too widely stated.

Held, that the insolvency Court was justified in issuing an injunction restraining a Co-operative Bank from proceeding with the sale of insolvent's immovable properties in a proceeding under S. 57-A, Madras Co-operative Societies Act, pending an application by the Official receiver under S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, challenging the security bond in favour of the Bank which covered all the immovable properties of the insolvent. 1953 Mad W N 527 : I L R (1954) Mad 360 : (1953) 2 Mad L J 359 : AIR 1954 Mad 12 (14, 15) (Prs 11, 14, 15) (DB).

——S. 4—Powers of insolvency Court — Application by third party—Maintainability.

Section 4 ordinarily comes into play after the debtor has been adjudicated an insolvent; under S. 4 the Court can then decide any question of title or priority arising between the debtor and one or more of his creditors if it considers this to be just and necessary as well as expedient. It is, however, open to the Court not to go into all these questions, as is shown by sub-s. (3) of S. 4.

Under that sub-section the Court can sell the interest of the debtor, leaving the parties to fight out the extent of their interest in a regular suit before the ordinary Courts. But it may be that in an appropriate case the question of title may arise at a stage earlier than the order of adjudication, but such cases can only be very rare. A third party is not forced to make an application under S. 4, but there are decisions in which the claim of a third party has been considered under S. 4. AIR 1955 Pat 413 (417) (Pt B) (Pr 13) (DB).

——Ss. 4, 20 and 21 — Jurisdiction of Court to enquire into validity of claim of third party prior to adjudication.

It is incorrect to say that prior to adjudication the Court has no jurisdiction at all to get at the properties of the insolvent and to preserve them. Special provisions in that direction are contained in Ss. 20 and 21. These powers are conferred on the Court to see that the property of the insolvent is not wasted or taken out of the reach of the Court during the pendency of the insolvency petition.

Where an interim Receiver appointed under S. 20 takes possession of the property of which the insolvent is in possession in pursuance of the direction of the Court but a claim of title is preferred by a third party to such property, the insolvency Court has jurisdiction to conduct a summary inquiry as to the sustainability of the claim even prior to the passing of adjudication order. The order passed at such inquiry is not however final and conclusive as between the parties to it.

Such a final and conclusive order may still be passed under S. 4 when the receiver seeks to annul the document in favour of the third party concerned and for inclusion of the property covered by that document also among the assets of the insolvent. AIR 1953 Trav-Co 266 (266, 267) (Pr 2) (DB).

——S. 4 — Travancore Insolvency Act (8 of 1106), S. 4 (1), Proviso — Claim by Receiver—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court.

A claim by an official receiver that the properties covered by a sale-deed in favour of A, the insolvent's wife really belong to the insolvent and that B is only a benamidar for the insolvent cannot be said to arise out of the insolvency and if B expressly refuses to submit to the jurisdiction of the insolvency Court to adjudicate upon her title to the properties, the Insolvency Court cannot adjudicate upon it and the proper course would be to file a regular suit. 1951 K L T 103 : A I R 1951 Trav-Co 139 (139, 140) (Prs 2, 4) (DB).

4. Applicability of provisions of Civil P. C.

——S. 4 — General principle of res judicata is applicable to proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act — Insolvency Court exercises all the powers of a civil Court — Consequently if a question cannot be reagitated before a Civil Court, it cannot be allowed to be reagitated before the Insolvency Court—See Civil P. C (1908), S. 11. AIR 1965 All 248.

—S. 4 (3)—Order for sale of property—Applicability of O. 1. R. 10, Civil P. C.

By reason of the provision of S. 5, it is manifest that unless there is any express provision in the Act to the contrary, the procedure followed in the exercise of the original jurisdiction applies to the proceedings under the Insolvency Act. It cannot be contended that O. 1, R 10, Civil P. C. is not a rule governing the procedure of the Courts in exercise of original civil jurisdiction. As there is no express provision in the Act prescribing a procedure different from that laid down in the Civil Procedure Code, or expressly excluding the application of that procedure to proceedings under S 68 of the Act, S. 5 attracts the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. A new party may be added to an application under section 68 of the Act if the conditions laid down in O. 1, R. 10 are complied with. (1951) 1 M L J 87, Distinguished. AIR 1955 N U C (Andhra) 4816.

AIR 1962 Madh Pra 354.

—Ss. 4 and 75 (2) — Objection to attachment of property under S. 21 (2)—Court determining validity of transfer in favour of objector—Appeal lies.

Ordinarily the Insolvency Court should not inquire prior to the making of an order of adjudication whether the transfer made by the insolvent in favour of a third person is genuine or not but where the Court has determined the validity of transfer in favour of the objector, an appeal under S. 75 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act is competent and resort to S 75 (3) is not necessary. 1964 Jab L J 131 : 1962 M P L J (Notes) 285 : 1962 M P C 457 : AIR 1962 Madh Pra 354 (356) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

—Ss. 4 and 21 (2) — Attachment of property under S. 21 (2) — Objection to—Objector claiming title on alleged transfer — Decision as to validity of transfer —Proper stage.

Where an objection to attachment was made by a third party claiming interest in the property attached under S. 21 (2) of the Act and the Insolvency Court did not merely determine the question whether the certificates sought to be attached were in the possession or under the control of the insolvent at the time of their attachment but went further and held that the transfer of the same in favour of the objector was good and for valid consideration and that too without giving full opportunity to the parties to lead evidence.

Held, that the stage for determining the question of title or validity of transfer had not arrived and the decision was illegal. 1964 Jab L J 131 : 1962 M P L J (Notes) 285 : 1962 M P C 457 : AIR 1962 Madh Pra 354 (356) (Pt C) (Pr 11).

C. (1908), S. 11. A I R 1965 Mad 331 (DB).

—Ss. 4 and 5 — Insolvency Court can invoke, in appropriate cases, provisions of O. 21, Rr. 95 to 102 —Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rr. 100, 103.

The procedure prescribed by O. 21, Rr. 95 to 102, C. P.Code, can be invoked, in appropriate cases, by the insolvency Court. Consequently if an order is made under any one of these provisions it should be competent to the aggrieved party to file a suit under O. 21, R. 103, because the very terms of the provisions relating to passing summary order prescribe that such orders will be subject to the result of the suit. It is true that S. 4 clothes the insolvency Court with a power to investigate questions of title and the adjudication in those proceedings would, subject to the provisions as to appeals, etc., contained in the Act, be final between the parties. But that cannot mean that every order passed by the Insolvency Court would attract the provisions of S. 4 of the Act. Where the Insolvency Court does not purport to decide a matter under S. 4, but proceeds only under S. 5, the rules prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code would apply to its decision. 45 Mad 434, Rel, on.; 43 Mad 434, 51 Mad 567, AIR 1945 Mad 10 (F B) ; (1953) 2 M L J 359, Ref. to; A I R 1938 Nag 320, A I R 1932 All 408, ILR (1941) Nag 757, Distinguished. 77 Mad L W 636 : ILR (1965) 1 Mad 34 : AIR 1965 Mad 331 (333) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 7) (DB).

—Ss. 4, 53—Gift of property by husband in favour of his wife—Wife taking no steps for mutation in her name — Husband declared insolvent subsequently— No inference about benami character of gift transaction could be drawn merely from such non-mutation or from payment of municipal taxes and rent of the property through her husband—Transfer of Property Act (1882) S. 122 — Benami. 6. Insolvency of Hindu father or manager.

—Ss. 4, 5 and 28-A — Civil Procedure Code (5 of 1908), S. 64 — Decree obtained against father and sons after insolvency petition but before adjudication — Attachment of property effected before filing of petition — Adjudication of father — Sale of son's shares — Right of decree-holder to proceeds of sale to the exclusion of other creditors — Application by Receiver claiming sale proceeds on behalf of general body of creditors—Sustainability.

An attachment, whether before or after judgment, does not create any charge on the attached property. An attaching creditor is not a secured creditor. Hence, if an order of adjudication is made after attachment but before sale, the property vests in the Official Receiver for the benefit of the general body of creditors, and the attaching creditor is not entitled to obtain satisfaction of his decree by sale of the attached property. The order of adjudication divests the rights of the attaching creditor, and remits him to the position of an ordinary creditor. The effect of an attachment of the son's share is not to create a charge or lien in favour of the attaching creditors. But it only puts an end to the power of disposal of the father and of the Official Receiver and under S. 28-A of the Provincial Insolvency Act to dispose of son's shares. It does not preclude the Official Receiver from obtaining a declaration from the Insolvency Court that the son's shares are liable for the discharge of the debts due to the several creditors which are not illegal or immoral, and have the property sold through Court. A I R 1928 Mad 735 (FB); A I R 1931 Mad 317; A I R 1927 Mad 471 (FB) and (1943) 1 Mad L J 24, Rel. on. It is open to the Official Receiver to file an application under S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for a declaration that the shares of the sons of the insolvents are liable to discharge the debts of the creditors enumerated in his petition. A sale by Court is equally subject to the doctrine of lis pendens like a private sale, and consequently the sale of the shares during the pendency of the application of the Official Receiver cannot affect the right of the creditors on whose behalf the petition was filed by the Official Receiver. (1964) 2 An W R 435: AIR 1965 Andh Pra 52 (57, 59, 60) (Pt B) (Prs 19, 38, 39, 41).

——S. 4—Scope—Insolvency of Hindu father — Official Receiver purporting to exercise power vested in father to sell son's shares — Enquiry under S. 4 — If obligatory.

It is not obligatory on the Court in every case where, on the insolvency of a Hindu Mitakshara father, the Official Receiver purports to exercise the power vested in the father to sell the son's shares for satisfying his debts, to hold an enquiry under S. 4 of the Act. If in a proceeding under S. 4 of the Act intiated by the sons or by the creditors, the sons dispute the right of the Official Receiver to sell their shares in the family properties and the matter is decided one way or the other, the adjudication would be binding on the parties and the Official Receiver should, in administering and selling the property of the insolvant give effect to that decision. If no proceeding under S. 4 had been taken, all that the sons could claim is an opportunity to show that the sale by the Official Receiver was not binding on their interest in the property by reason of the debts of the father not being binding upon them under the rule of pious obligation. 1956 Andh W R 586 : A I R 1957 Andh Pra 609 (610) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Ss. 4, 53 and 75 — Power of Insolvency Court — Insolvent partitioning property allotting insignificant share to himself — Receiver applying for annulment — Wife and sons pleading debts to be Avyavaharik—Insolvency Court ordering annulment —District Judge upholding annulment but leaving question about binding nature of debts open — Propriety—Appeal—Competency.

The insolvent effected a partition of his property between himself and his wife and sons by which he retained an insignificant share to himself. The receiver applied for annulment under S. 53. The sons and wife of the insolvent objected on the ground that not only was the partition good but that several of the insolvent's debts were Avyavaharik and not for legal necessity. The insolvency Court decided in favour of the Receiver. In appeal the District Judge upheld the annulment but held that the question as to binding nature of debts was irrelevant and set aside the finding leaving the question for a fresh decision under S. 4. The Receiver appealed.

Held, that the question fell under S. 4, that District Judge should have decided it and that the appeal by the Receiver was competent. 1957 Nag L J (Notes) 156.

7. Transfer from transferee.

——Ss. 4 and 53—Transfer from insolvent's transferee —Right to challenge.

An alienation in favour of a transferee from the transferee of an insolvent cannot be challenged by the Official Receiver under S. 63 of the Act. It can be challenged, if at all, only under S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and in order to make the decision binding, the transferee from the transferee must be made a party to those proceedings. In such proceedings, it is open to the transferee from the transferee to plead and establish that he is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the insolvency proceedings. If he is able to establish that, the transaction in his favour will have to be upheld. 1959 Ker LJ 78: 1959 Ker L T 93: ILR (1959) Ker 803.

——S. 4—Scope—Jurisdiction — Transfer from insolvent's transferee — If such a transfer is declared invalid and not binding on the Receiver and if such a transfer is held to form only a link in the chain of a fraudulent scheme to defraud the other creditors, the insolvency Court has clearly the power to annul such transfer as not binding on the official Receiver not only under S. 53 but also if necessary by exercise of its powers under S. 4. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 53. AIR 1958 Mys 35 (DB).

8. Applicability of Limitation Act.

——S. 4—Application for mesne profits by receiver—Limitation Act does not apply—But defence of limitation is open to opponent — Limitation Act (1908), Art. 109.

Section 4 merely empowers the Insolvency Court to try matters referred to in that section. It does not in any way oust the jurisdiction of the ordinary Court, and the Insolvency Court has always the discretion instead of trying a matter under S. 4 to refer the receiver to a suit. Thus, S. 4 is merely declaratory of the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court and does not in any way alter or amend the law nor deprives the party of its rights. Therefore, an application made under S. 4 by the receiver to recover mesne profits cannot be looked upon as a suit. It may be in the nature of a suit, the same procedure might be applied to it by virtue of S. 5 as might be applied if the receiver had filed a suit, but strictly the Limitation Act would not apply to such an application. However, by reason of the receiver adopting one procedure rather than the other, that is making an application under S. 4 rather than filing a suit, the party against whom the application is made cannot be deprived of his right to plead the statute of limitation. Hence, when an application is made under S. 4, by the receiver, the Court is bound to consider all the defences that are open to the party against whom the application is made. Any defence that could be put forward by the party in a suit would be equally available to him in an application made by the receiver: A I R 1936 Mad 778 (FB), Expl. and Foll. 52 Bom L R 606: I L R (1950) Bom 678: A I R 1950 Bom 399 (399) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

1. Scope and applicability.

—S. 5 — Decree obtained against Hindu debtors and their sons — Joint properties attached before judgment-debtors adjudicated insolvents — Sons' shares sold in execution of decree and sale proceeds deposited in Court — Application by Official Receiver under Ss. 4 and 5 to make available sale proceeds for benefit of all insolvent's creditors and not only for benefit of attaching creditor — Application is maintainable and the sale proceeds in deposit in execution of A's decree be made available for distribution among all the creditors. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 4. AIR 1965 Andh-Pra 52.

—Ss. 5, 10 (2) and 43 (1) — Order of annulment under S. 43 — Debtor should follow specific remedy under S. 10 (2) — He cannot apply under S. 5 for setting aside order and for extension of time for discharge.

Where an order of annulment passed under S. 43, Provincial Insolvency Act is sought to be set aside, the aggrieved party has a specific remedy provided under S. 10 (2) and therefore he cannot invoke to his aid the provisions of S. 5 of the Insolvency Act, which make the provisions of the Civil P. C. applicable. Hence, an application under S. 5 for setting aside the order of annulment and for extension of the time for discharge is not maintainable. AIR 1926 Mad 942, held not overruled by AIR 1930 Mad 389 (FB), and is still good law. —S. 5 (1) — Exemptions under S. 60 (1) Civil P. C., apply to attachment and sale by Official Receiver under Provincial Insolvency Act in view of Ss. 2 (2) and 5 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. See Civil P. C. (1908), S. 60 (1), Proviso. AIR 1960 Andh-Pra 458.

—S. 5 — Addition of party — Provincial Insolvency Act making adequate provision as to procedure — Civil P. C. will not apply — (Civil Procedure Code (1908), O. 1, R. 10). See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 24. AIR 1957 Andh-Pra 603.

—Ss. 4, 5 — Application under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C. to Insolvency Court for redelivery, dismissed — Subsequent proceedings under O. 21, R. 103, Civil P. C. to set aside summary order and in the alternative for partition — Held, suit was maintainable and summary order did not operate as res judicata. AIR 1946 Mad 141, Dist., ILR 21 All 505 (P C), Rel. on. See Civil Procedure Code (1908), S. 11. AIR 1965 Mad 331.

—S. 5 — Scope — Insolvency Court can invoke provisions of O. 21, Rr. 95 to 103, Civil P. C. in appropriate cases.

It is true that S. 4 clothes the Insolvency Court with a power to investigate questions of title. Once the Court is held to have jurisdiction to adjudicate upon title, it must be conceded that there should be a further power in it to give effect to such adjudication. It is for that purpose that S. 5 arms the Court with all the powers of a Civil Court.

The jurisdiction conferred by Ss. 4 and 5 is distinct; the former provision will apply where the Court purports to adjudicate finally the title of a person and the latter provision arms the Court with certain powers. When, therefore, the Court merely assumes the power conferred on it under S. 5 it cannot be said that it has proceeded to decide the dispute finally under S. 4. In every case it has to be seen whether there was an adjudication within the provisions of S. 4 or whether there was merely a summary order passed under any of the powers vested in the Insolvency Court under S. 5. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 4. AIR 1965 Mad 331.

—S. 5 — Scope — Insolvency proceedings — Substitution of parties.

Under S. 5 of the Act the Court in exercising insolvency jurisdiction can follow the procedure prescribed in Civil P. C. only when there is no procedure prescribed in the Act with regard to a particular matter but not when it is provided for in the Act. Since under S. 16, Insolvency Act, a creditor who is agrieved by the conduct of the petitioning creditor can come by way of an application for being substituted and not for being added as an additional party, resort cannot be had by him to the provisions of O. 1, R. 10, Civil P. C. See Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, R. 10 (2). AIR 1951 Mad 665.

2. Joinder of parties.

—Ss. 5, 68 — Proceedings under S. 68 — Applicability of O. 1, R. 10, Civil P. C. — New party may be added to application under S. 68, if conditions of O. 1, R. 10 are complied with — It is manifest that in view of the provisions of S. 5, unless there is express provision in the Act to the contrary, procedure followed in exercise of original civil jurisdiction applies to proceedings under the Insolvency Act — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, R. 10). AIR 1955 N U C (Andhra) 4816.

—Ss. 5 and 16 — Creditor's petition — Application by another creditor to be added as a party — Maintainability.

A creditor filed an application for adjudging the petitioner an insolvent. Pending disposal of this petition the respondent herein came by way of an application under O. 1, R. 10, Civil P. C. to be added as an additional party to the petition. On the question whether the petition could be ordered :

Held, that under S. 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction can follow the procedure prescribed in the Code only when there is no procedure prescribed in the Act with regard to a particular matter but not when it is provided for in the Act. While a definite provision for substitution of a party has been made under S. 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act a creditor aggrieved by the conduct of the petitioning creditor can come only by way of the substitution petition under S. 16 of the Act and not under O. 1, R. 10 of the Civil P. C. to be added as a party.

Held further, that in the absence of any allegation or proof that the presence of the party is necessary for any effective and complete adjudication of the matters in dispute, the petition could not be allowed. 3. Applicability of O. 9, Civil P. C.

—Ss. 5 and 7 — Ex parte order of adjudication — Setting aside of — Who can apply — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 141 and O. 9, R. 13) — (Madras Provincial Insolvency Rules (1922), R. 21).

An application for setting aside an ex parte order passed by an Insolvency Court is permissible in view of O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C. read with S. 141, Civil P. C. and S. 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Under Cl. 3 of R. 21 of the rules framed under the Madras Provincial Insolvency Rules the alienees, the transfers to whom were alleged to be the acts of insolvency, are entitled to notice. The language of this rule is in a mandatory form and therefore it is obligatory on a Court to issue notice to the transferees. Disobedience of this rule does not render the order of adjudication void as it is only an irregularity which can sustain an application to set aside the ex parte order. The alienees, therefore, have a right to maintain the application under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C. to set aside the ex parte order of adjudication passed against their transferor. 1958 Andh L T 925 : (1958) 2 Andh W R 316.

4. Abatement.

●——S. 5 — Death of debtor during pendency of insolvency proceedings — Proceedings can continue for realisation and distribution of property — Provisions of Insolvency Act are to be preferred to those under O. 22, Civil P. C.—(Hyderabad Insolvency Act (8 of 1351 F.), Ss. 17 and 5)—(Civil P. C. (1908), O. 22). See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 17. A I R 1952 Hyd 80 (FB).

5. Injunction.

——S. 5 — Jurisdiction of insolvency Court to issue injunction — Though Insolvency Court will not restrain a mortgagee or other secured creditor in exercise of his legal remedies under S. 28, it has jurisdiction in proper cases to restrain him under O. 39, R. 1, if there are substantial grounds to impeach his title to safeguard interests of general body of creditors—(Civil P. C. (1908), O. 39, R. 1). See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 4. A I R 1954 Mad 12 (DB).

——S. 5—Scope—Power of Court to grant injunction against secured creditor from enforcing his remedy.

It is open to the Insolvency Court to see that the interests of the general body of creditors are not jeopardised by a secured creditor prosecuting his remedy in other proceedings. There is a discretion vested in the Court in the manner of granting injunctions. Under S. 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the Insolvency Court, since it has the same powers as a civil Court, could, under justifiable circumstances, grant an injunction preventing a creditor from selling the insolvent's property which right is disputed by the other creditors in Insolvency Court.

The observations in Official Receiver, Coimbatore v. 6. Appeal.

——S. 5 — Scope of — Order passed on application made under Ss. 53 and 54—Appeal — Maintainability of. See Debt Laws—Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938) (as amended by Madras Act 23 of 1948), S. 25-A (1) (B). 1958 Andh L T 896.

——Ss. 5 (1) and 75 — Order refusing review — Appeal.

Under the Insolvency Act an appeal is entertainable even against an order rejecting an application for review. The provisions of the Civil P. C. are made applicable to insolvency proceedings subject to the provisions of the Insolvency Act. Consequently when the right of appeal is expressly regulated by the Insolvency Act it should not be taken to be governed by the provisions of O. 47, R. 7, Civil P. C. 7. Revision.

——S. 5—Power of revision — Power of revision can be exercised by High Court only in respect of appellate order—Order of adjudication—Revision does not lie directly—Section 5 will not apply. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 75 (1). 1964 Ker L J 29.

——Ss. 5, 23, 31 and 75 — Interim protection from arrest in execution of decree against debtor pending his application for adjudication—Inherent power—Refusal to grant protection — Not revisable either under S. 115, Civil P. C. or Art. 227 of the Constitution — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 151 — Constitution of India, Art. 227.

Where the insolvency Court has declined to grant a debtor interim protection from arrest in execution of a decree against him pending his application for adjudication, the proper remedy of the debtor is to appeal under S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act and not to file a petition for revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. or under Art. 227 of the Constitution.

Even assuming that the Court has inherent power under S. 5 of the Act read with S. 151, Civil P. C. to grant such protection, the refusal by the Court to exercise its inherent power would not be revisable either under S. 115 or Art. 227 of the Constitution. Further as the Act makes complete provision for the protection of insolvent in the shape of S. 23 pending adjudication and under S. 31 after adjudication, the Court has no inherent power under S. 5 of the Act read with S. 151, Civil P. C. to order interim protection apart from the above provisions. A I R 1925 Mad 170, Not foll. 1961 Ker L J 1272.

8. Review.

——S. 5 and 10 (2) — Civil Procedure Code (5 of 1908), O. 47, R. 1 — Order passed by Insolvency Court—Power of review.

The Provincial Insolvency Act is a Special Law, and where the Act provides a specific remedy, it is not open to a party to resort to the general provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. But, where there is no specific provision in the Act, orders passed under the Provincial Insolvency Act are reviewable under O. 47, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code. Section 10 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act provides a specific remedy for the debtor in respect of whom an order of adjudication has been annulled and it gives him permission to present another petition on the same facts, provided that he satisfies the Court that he was prevented by any reasonable cause from presenting or prosecuting his application. But, in the instant case, the relief sought is to set aside the unconditional order of annulment passed by the Court on an earlier occasion without providing for the vesting of the properties of the insolvent in the Official Receiver. In such a situation, the special remedy provided by S. 10 (2) cannot be availed of by the debtor, and therefore the remedy sought by the debtor is outside the scope of S. 10 (2). Therefore, the Court was right in allowing the review application and rectifying the defect contained in the earlier order by passing a supplementary order vesting the property of the insolvent in the Official Receiver to be administered by him in accordance with the provisions of the Insolvency Act. (1947) 2 Mad L J 425 : A I R 1948 Mad 233 : 51 Mad L J 60 ; A I R 1927 Mad 175 : 61 Mad L J 719 : A I R 1932 Mad 63, Rel. on. (1962) 1 Andh W R 253 : I L R (1965) Andh Pra 61 : A I R 1963 Andh Pra 52 (53) (Prs 5, 7) (DB).

——S. 5—Powers of review — Insolvency Court can review its order.

Even though there is no specific provision in the Act conferring powers of review, the insolvency Court can review its order under S. 5 of the Act. Therefore, the petition for extending time for discharge, and for setting aside order for annulment of adjudication can be regarded as a petition to review the order under S. 5 of the Act. A I R 1948 Mad 233, Foll. (1965) 2 Mad L J 11 : 78 Mad L W 442 : A I R 1966 Mad 29 (30) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

——S. 5 — Insolvency Court — Powers of review—Insolvency Court recording compromise between petitioner-creditor and debtor and dismissing petition — Court can review its order at instance of another creditor — Any other view would mean that the interests of the general body of creditors might be irreparably jeopardised by collusion between petitioning creditor and the debtor. See Civil P. C. (1908), S. 151. A I R 1963 Mad 367.

——S. 5 (1)—Review—Powers of.

The Act does not contain a provision for the Court to review an order made by it in its insolvency jurisdiction. That does not, however, mean that the Court cannot review its order passed in insolvency matters. The result of the absence of a provision for review in the Act is only that before the Court can review its own order, the power so exercised should have been conferred on it by some provision of the Civil P. C. In other words, unless the case falls under O. 47, R. 1, the Court will have no power of review. I L R (1954) Trav-Co 1042 : 1954 Ker L T 525 : A I R 1955 Trav-Co 49 (50) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Ss. 5 (1) and 14 — Review — Error apparent on face of record.

Where the Insolvency Court strikes off the insolvency petition without adverting to S. 14, this is an error apparent on the face of the record and attracts the application of O. 47, R. 1. I L R (1954) Trav-Co 1042 : 1954 Ker L T 525 : A I R 1955 Trav-Co 49 (50) (Pt C) (Pr 6) (DB).

SYNOPSIS

(Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 6.)

1. Scope and applicability.
2. Sub-section (a) — Transfer to third person for benefit of creditors.
3. Sub-section (b) — Transfer with intent to defeat or delay creditors.
4. Sub-section (c) — Transfer void as fraudulent preference.
5. Sub-section (e)—Sale of property in execution.
6. Sub-section (f)—Petition for adjudication.
7. Sub-section (g)—Notice to creditors about suspension of business.

1. Scope and applicability.

——Ss. 6 and 9 — Minor admitted to benefits of partnership becoming major after its dissolution—He cannot be adjudicated insolvent for acts of insolvency committed by major partners. See Partnership Act (1932), S. 30 (5). AIR 1965 S C 212.

——Ss. 6, 9, 28, 24, 33, 50, 53—Debtor adjudged insolvent — Petitioning creditor applying under S. 53 for annulment of certain transfers by insolvent — Transferee cannot challenge order of adjudication on ground that petitioning creditor was not creditor of the insolvent.

So far as the effect of the order of adjudication is concerned, no one is entitled to challenge the order of adjudication except by way of an appeal under the Insolvency Act. Once an order of adjudication has come to stay beyond challenge, then in subsequent proceedings in the insolvency, it is not open to any other person to challenge the order of adjudication. When an application is made by a petitioning creditor, the creditor has to show that the debtor owes a debt to him and that he is unable to pay that debt. Such an enquiry is contemplated under S. 24 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. But once an enquiry is made and the Insolvency Court comes to a finding that the debtor has committed an act of insolvency and is liable to be adjudged an insolvent, the status of the debtor comes to be determined as an insolvent. If at any subsequent stage an occasion arises in insolvency proceedings either under S. 33 or under S. 50 that an enquiry ought to be made into the genuineness of the claim of the petitioning creditor, the fact that the adjudication order was passed on the application of the petitioning creditor, will not preclude such an enquiry. But that enquiry could not be made in an application under S. 53 of the Insolvency Act at the instance of the transferee who wanted such an enquiry to be made in order to support his contention that the adjudication order itself is bad to the limited extent to which the transferee was precluded from making such a challenge to the adjudication order. ——Ss. 6 and 53 — Effect of adjudication order — Conclusive only as regards status and not as regards grounds.

Under S. 41, Evidence Act, a judgment in rem is conclusive only as regards status and not as regards the ground on which the order is passed. An order of adjudication in insolvency is admissible to prove the legal character of the debtor as an insolvent but is inadmissible as against third parties to prove that the act on which the order was passed was an act of insolvency. Order of adjudication is not binding in proceedings under S. 53 and the Court could come to a conclusion on facts that the transfer was for consideration and not mala fide. 1959 Nag L J (Notes) 46.

——Ss. 6, 6 (i) (Bombay) and S. 6 (a) (Bombay) — Scope of — R. III-A, Cls. 9 (c) and 10 of Bombay High Court Rules—Scope and validity of—Ss. 9 (1) and 79.

Section 6 sets out the conduct or acts of a debtor which may be regarded as acts of insolvency. But the section does not purport to state at what point of time an act of insolvency shall be deemed to be committed. In each case, at what point of time an act of insolvency shall be deemed to be committed is a question to be decided on evidence.

Similarly S. 6(1) which has been added by the Bombay Act, 15 of 1939, does not purport to set out the point of time at which the act of insolvency may be committed by reason of non-compliance with the insolvency notice. It only provides that an act of insolvency may be committed by failure to comply with the insolvency notice. The Bombay High Court was competent to frame rules under S. 79 to prescribe a point of time, at which an act of insolvency may be deemed to be committed by failure to comply with the notice. By Cl. (10) of R. III-A framed by the High Court that point of time is the disposal of the application where an application for setting aside the insolvency notice has been made.

In framing Cls. 9(c) and 10 of R. III-A, therefore, the Bombay High Court did not purport to extend the time prescribed by S. 9(1)(c) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The Court in exercise of its rule-making authority enacted a provision for ascertaining the point of time from which the period for the fulfilment of the condition prescribed in the section is to be calculated and in this view no provision of the Act is violated by framing Cls. 9(c) and 10 of R. III-A. Both the clauses are thus intra vires the High Court. 59 Bom L R 96 : I L R (1957) Bom 295 : A I R 1958 Bom 164 (166) (Prs 5, 6) (DB).

——Ss. 6 and 7—Person heavily indebted executing partition with brothers and sisters—Major portion of properties allotted to wives of debtor and his brothers in lieu of streedhanam alleged to have been brought by them — Property allotted to debtor not shown to be sufficient to pay off his debts—His failure to make attempt to pay any of several debts also indicating his incapacity to pay — Contention of debtor that he had not committed any act of insolvency is not sustainable—Order adjudicating him insolvent is correct. 1961 Ker L T 648 : (1962) 32 Com Cas 438 : 1961 Ker L J 658.

——Ss. 6, 9—Scope of inquiry — Petition by creditor for adjudging debtor insolvent—Court is not required to finally adjudge amount due by debtor to him but only to see whether debt owed by debtor exceeds Rs. 500. 1961 Jab L J 193 : 1961 M P L J 708 : 1960 M P C 682 : A I R 1961 Madh Pra 15 (18) (Pt D) (Pr 16) (DB).

——Ss. 6, 27 and 53 — Transfer by insolvent challenged—Burden of proof.

Per Shiv Dayal, J.: The burden of proof in insolvency proceedings is not upon the transferee but is on the official receiver or the creditor who challenges the transfer, but it is competent for the Court to draw the inference of intention from the totality of circumstances. The burden on the petitioning creditor is discharged as soon as it is shown that the property stood in the name of the debtor. It is then for the transferee to show that he was the real owner and the debtor was only a benamidar. ——Ss. 6, 9, 54 — Transfer executed with a view to defeat claims of creditors—It is an act of insolvency affording cause of action to file a petition under S. 9. 1963 Mys L J (Supp) 266 : AIR 1963 Mys 257 (261) (Pt C) (Pr 16).

——Ss. 6, 53 and 54 — Distinction between—Scope of inquiries under.

Even if the Court has to go into question of the genuineness or otherwise of the transfers made by the debtor firm, it has to go into the question only for the purpose of finding out whether prima facie the creditor had the right to present an application under S. 9. It is clear that the scope of an enquiry into the acts of insolvency as contemplated by S. 6 is wholly different from the scope of an enquiry for the purpose of an annulment or avoidance of certain transfers under Ss. 53 and 54.

The annulment proceedings under Ss. 53 and 54 are in the nature of suits in the matter of pleadings, framing of issues, taking of evidence and the giving of judgment and decree, whereas the decision that a transfer is an act of insolvancy must in the nature of the case and at the stage at which it has to be given be based only on inconclusive material ; the incidental determination of the question that the debtor firm has committed an act of insolvency for the purpose of deciding whether adjudication should be ordered or not cannot be regarded as a final determination with regard to the transfers for purposes of annulment proceedings under Ss. 53 and 54. AIR 1955 Pat 413 (416) (Pt A) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Ss. 6 and 9 — Act of insolvency within three months.

Even if a debtor has enough property by the sale of which his debts could be liquidated, that circumstance would not render the petition for his insolvency unsustainable or make it liable to be dismissed. The cause of action of a creditor, to whom is owing an unsecured debt or a balance in a secured debt with insufficient security on its being valued or given up, of Rs. 500 or more is complete on the commission of an act of insolvency by the debtor. The debtor may avoid his adjudication if under S. 25 he is able to pay the debts and pays them within a reasonable time. Except for this purpose the existence or extent of other assets has no relevance. Insolvency need not be and most often is not pauperism. If a person is not able to meet his liabilities as and when they become due, out of his funds, he is not solvent though he may have enough assets by converting which into cash he may be able to liquidate his liabilities. If a debt of the requisite description and quantum exists and there is an act of insolvency, the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court can be invoked. But adjudication is not inevitable and can be averted as aforesaid because no creditor can as of right claim that the debtor must necessarily be adjudged insolvent. An act of insolvency is not an offence or crime on proof of which a sentence in the shape of adjudication must follow. ILR (1954) T C 93 : AIR 1954 Trav-Co 419 (423) (Pt E) (Pr 13) (DB).

——S. 6 — Adjudication on basis of debt for which debtor was not liable to petitioning creditor — Validity.

An insolvency proceeding is essentially a proceeding 'in personam' and only personal debts due by the insolvent can be proved therein. When the debtor was not personally liable for the debt due to the petitioning creditor and when there is no evidence of any other debt being in existence when the sale deed (alleged to be an act of insolvency) in favour of the vendee was executed, it can on no account be treated as an act of insolvency — See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 35. AIR 1952 Trav-Co 234 (DB).

3. Sub-section (b) — Transfer with intent to defeat or delay creditors.

——S. 6 (b) — "To defeat or delay his creditors" — Transfer substantially for benefit of some of creditors — Transfer is not made with intent to defeat or delay creditors as a whole. AIR 1955 N U C (Ajmer) 774.

——Ss. 6 (b), 9 (1) (c) and 53—Application by creditor for insolvency under S. 6 (b) — Debtor declared insolvent — Application by Official Receiver under S. 53 to annul alienation in favour of purchaser — Purchaser can show his bona fides — Decision under S. 6 does not act as res judicata—Court is not, under S. 6, to consider good faith or consideration paid by purchaser — Any finding recorded at that stage cannot, therefore, debar purchaser from pleading these facts when the transfer in his favour is sought to be annuled : AIR 1956 All 68, Overruled. 1963 All L J 623 : AIR 1965 All 80 (82) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

——S. 6 (b) and (c)—Transfer with intent to defeat or delay creditors — Determination — Possession of assets far more than liabilities — Only a portion of property mortgaged — No fraudulent preference made — Debtor commits no act of insolvency.

A transfer by the debtor of his property may be act of insolvency upon either of two grounds (1) where the necessary consequence of the transfer is to produce insolvency or (2) where the debtor transfers a portion only of his property but is shown to have done so with the intention of defeating or delaying his creditors. Intention to delay or defeat the creditors or the intention to give preference to the creditors are mental acts which can only be determined from surrounding circumstances. Another test is whether the alleged insolvent is in a position to pay his debt and whether the property which has been transferred bears such a proportion to the whole property that the remaining or the residue of the property is still sufficient from the point of view of an ordinary businessman to meet the debts of the creditors who remain unsatisfied.

Where a creditor filed a petition for declaration of the debtor as insolvent alleging that he had dishonoured three hundis executed in petitioner's favour and had mortgaged some of his property in favour of another person and it was found that the assets possessed by the debtor were far more than the liabilities and there was no fraudulent preference in executing the mortgages.

Held, that the debtor had committed no act of insolvency. 1963 All L J 28.

——Ss. 6 (b) and 27 — Firm possessing no property — No allegation against one partner of a fraudulent transfer or any other act of insolvency — Allegation of fraudulent transfer only against the other partner — The transfer as an act of insolvency is sufficient only to declare that partner as also the firm as insolvents — The first partner against whom there is no allegation cannot be adjudged an insolvent as a partner of the firm. 1962 All L J 1101 : 1963 All W R (H C) 30.

——Ss. 6 (b) and 9 (1) (c) — Gift — Deed registered within three months before petition though executed beyond that period — Can be treated as act of insolvency — Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 123 — Registration Act (1908), Ss. 47 and 60 — See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 9 (1) (c). 1962 All L J 1101.

——S. 6 (b) — Transfer in favour of one creditor — Registration after three weeks — Date of transfer — Date of registration is the date of transfer as transfer does not become effective till the document was registered — It cannot be antedated by operation of S. 47 of the Registration Act, for the purposes of S. 54 of the Insolvency Act. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 54. AIR 1957 Andh-Pra 535.

——Ss. 6 (b), 53 and 54 — Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court.

The debtor was adjudged an insolvent on the ground that he had mortgaged his property to D and thereby committed an act of insolvency under S. 6 (b), Provincial Insolvency Act. Court found that the transfer in favour of D amounted to a fraudulent preference. One of the other creditors applied for annulment of the transfer in favour of D, under Ss. 53 and 54. It was contended that the finding in the adjudication order was binding and could not be reagitated under the garb of application under Ss. 53 and 54 and that the Insolvency Court had no jurisdiction to go into the matter.

Held, that it was within the competence of the Insolvency Court to find whether the transaction was without consideration and not in good faith and whether it was a fraudulent preference. AIR 1947 Nag 161, Foll.; AIR 1943 P C 190; (1943) 2 Mad L J 160; (1878) 10 Ch D 3 and AIR 1956 All 68, Dist. 1959 Nag L J (Notes) 74.

——S. 6 (b)—Applicability—'Creditors'.

In order that a creditor may file an insolvency petition against a debtor on the ground that he has committed an act of insolvency by transferring his property it must be shown that the transfer was made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the debtor generally and not some particular creditor or creditors. AIR 1934 Rang 242 and AIR 1937 Lah 495, Rel. on.

Held, on facts that the transfers were made with intent to defeat or delay not only the petitioning creditors but the entire body of the creditors of the debtor and hence an act of insolvency was committed by him. AIR 1958 Cal 319 (320) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

——S. 6 (b) and (c)—Certificate of fitness of case for appeal to Supreme Court — Question only of academic importance at particular stage—Case not fit for appeal to Supreme Court.

At the stage of adjudication of a person as insolvent neither the Insolvency Court nor the Appellate Court is required to say what the effect of adjudication order would be on the annulment proceedings and it is unnecessary for the transferees to take an appeal to the Supreme Court from the decision of the High Court in appeal on such a point at that stage. High Court will not grant a certificate of fitness under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution in such a case. AIR 1961 Madh-Pra 172 (DB).

——Ss. 6 (b), 53 — Transfer with intent to delay or defeat creditors alleged as act of insolvency — Court is competent to determine nature of transfer in the order of adjudication.

Per Shiv Dayal, J. — If a transfer of property with intent to defeat or delay the creditors is alleged as constituting an act of insolvency the Court is competent to determine the alleged nature of the transfer in the order of adjudication and cannot postpone its decision to the stage when the same is sought to be annulled under S. 53. The scope of inquiry under S. 6 (b) is quite different from that under S. 53. It is the intention and conduct of the debtor, in making the transfer, which determines whether it constitutes or not an act of insolvency. But on an application for avoidance of a transfer under S. 53 what is to be established is want of good faith of the transferee. How far the order of adjudication would be binding on the transferee in annulment proceedings is to be seen at the proper stage. 1961 Jab L J 193 : 1961 M P L J 708 : 1960 MP C 682 : AIR 1961 Madh Pra 15 (19, 20) (Pt F) (Prs 18, 19, 23) (DB).

——S. 6 (b) and 53—Fraudulent transfer—Fraudulent transfer coming under S 6 (b) is one voidable under S. 53, T. P. Act independently of insolvency of transferor and one that is voidable under S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act — (Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 53). AIR 1955 N U C (Mad) 3169.

——Ss. 6 (b), 53 and 54—Act of Insolvency.

When a transaction is impeached as fraudulent under S. 53 or S. 54 of the Insolvency Act, one way of escape is to plead and prove that the alienations were effected on account of pressure exerted upon the alienor by the creditors. If the debtor was not a free agent, but was forced to enter into a transaction, then that cannot be impeached on the ground of the debtor's intention to prefer some, or defeat other creditors. It is not impossible to peep into the mind of man and ascertain his intention. The subjective state of mind of the transferor is what is material and that has to be inferred from the attendant circumstances. Where the circumstances of a case leave no room for doubt that the transactions were resorted to by the debtor with a view to defeat his creditors that would be an act of insolvency.

Held, on a consideration of the documents in the case that they constituted an act of insolvency. ILR (1954) T C 93 : AIR 1954 Trav-Co 419 (422) (Pt D) (Pr 11) (DB).

4. Sub-section (c)—Transfer void as fraudulent preference.

—— S. 6 (c) and (b)—Transfer with intent to defeat or delay creditors — Determination — Possession of assets for more than liabilities—Only a portion of property mortgaged—No fraudulent preference made ——Ss. 6 (c), 54 — Fraudulent preference alleged as act of insolvency—Court if competent to determine.

Per A H. Khan, J. — If fraudulent preference is alleged as an act of insolvency, the Court is competent to determine the question under S. 6. The determination of the question cannot be postponed till the proceedings have reached the stage under S. 54. At the time of determining whether any transfer amounts to a fraudulent preference under S. 6 (c), the Court does not declare the transfer as void nor does it annul the transfer. The stage of annulment comes later on when a receiver is appointed. AIR 1958 S C 1, Dist. 1961 Jab L J 193 : 1961 M P L J 708 : 1960 M P C 682 : AIR 1961 Madh Pra 15 (17) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Ss. 6 (c), 54—Fraudulent preference—What constitute—Impugned transfer itself creating a debt — Cannot constitute fraudulent preference.

Per Shiv Dayal, J. — The very word 'preference' envisages at least two creditors and a preference to one of them. If the very act of the impugned transfer such as a mortgage creates a debt, the transferee no doubt becomes a creditor by virtue thereof but it cannot be said to be a fraudulent preference for the transferee (as a creditor) to others. 1961 Jab L J 193 : 1961 M P L J 708 : 1960 M P C 682 : AIR 1961 Madh Pra 15(19) (Pt E) (Pr 17) (DB).

——S. 6 (e)—Applicability—Confirmation of sale not necessary for applicability of S. 6 (e).

——S. 6 (e) — Scope —Validity — Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, S. 9 (e).

Fact that under S 6 (e) attached property of the debtor has to be sold in execution of a decree for payment of money before the act can be considered an act of insolvency while under S. 9 (e) of the Presidency-Towns Insolvency Act mere continuation of attachment for 21 days is sufficient to constitute an act of insolvency it does not amount to discrimination and a denial of equality before the law and benefit of equal laws to persons in or carrying on business within the Presidency Towns. ——S. 6 (e) — Sale subsequently set aside — If act of insolvency.

——S. 6 (e) — Decree for payment of money — Property sold under personal decree passed under O. 34, R. 6 — It is not necessary to examine nature of previous liability.

The debt in execution of which the property of the debtor was sold was under a decree passed under O. 34, R. 6, Civil P. C. in which it was expressly mentioned that the debtor was personally liable for the amount.

Held, that it was not necessary to examine the nature of the previous liability under the original debt; that it was not open to controversy that the debtor was personally liable to pay and that the provisions of S. 6(e). ——S 6 (e)—Petition — Unequal partition between father and sons — Father getting small share and more liabilities —Transaction is transfer.

Ordinarily a partition is only a change in the mode of enjoyment of property. Hence it property has been allotted as a result of a fair partition the transaction may not be characterised as a transfer. But if the partition is unequal as where it has the effect of depriving the father of his due share by giving him a small share and saddling him with greater burden of the family debts the transaction is in effect a transfer pro tanto by the father of his own interest in the joint family and the transaction must come within the purview of S. 6 (b), Provincial Insolvency Act. 6 Lah 1, Dist.; AIR 1930 Nag 215, Ref. 1952 Nag L J (Notes) 121 (DB).

6. Sub-section (f)—Petition for adjudication.

——Ss. 6 (f), 9 and 10 — Scope — Petition for adjudication by debtor — Provisions of S. 10 should be complied with — Advantage of S. 6 (f) not available to a debtor.

The question whether the debtor is entitled to present the petition for adjudicating him as insolvent should be decided by taking into consideration the conditions laid down in S. 10 and not by referring to S. 6. The advantage of S. 6 (f) may be taken only by a creditor if he presents an application under S. 9 of the Act. A debtor cannot urge that he has committed an act of insolvency by presenting an application for insolvency and therefore he is entitled to present the application. 1960 Raj L W 623.

7. Sub-section (g) — Notice to creditors about suspension of business.

——S. 6 (g) — Notice of suspension of payment of debts may be given to any one of the creditors. AIR 1935 Mad 589 (2), Foll. AIR 1955 NUC (Ajmer) 774.

——S. 6 (g) — Allegation that debtor had suspended payment of debts — It is not act of insolvency — Act of insolvency under S. 6 (g) cannot be established by evidence when it was not pleaded in petition — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, Rr. 2, 17.

Where the act of insolvency committed by the debtor alleged was not the act of insolvency specified in S. 6 (g) no inquiry can be held into the question whether such act of insolvency was committed by the debtor. Where the allegation made by the petitioning creditor was that the debtor had suspended payment of his debts and was not paying them as they became due, this allegation even if established, cannot constitute an act of insolvency so as to render the debtor liable to be adjudicated as insolvent. Mere suspension of payment of debts does not constitute an act of insolvency. It is necessary in order to constitute an act of insolvency within S. 6 (g) that the debtor should give notice to any of his creditors that he has suspended payment of his debts. Notice by the debtor to any of his creditors is a necessary constituent of an act of insolvency under this head. Where that has not been alleged, the petition does not disclose any cause of action in respect of this particular act of insolvency and in the absence of such cause of action no inquiry can be held whether the debtor had committed this particular act of insolvency.

Moreover, an act of insolvency in order to found a petition must have been committed within three months of the filing of the petition. If a petition is filed more than three months after the commission of the act of insolvency it would fail since the act of insolvency would not be available to the petitioning creditor after the expiration of three months from its commission. It would, therefore, follow that if a particular act of insolvency is not mentioned in the petition, the petition cannot even be amended except on strong and exceptional grounds so as to found it upon the particular act of insolvency if more than three months have already elapsed from the date of commission of such act of insolvency.

It is not sufficient to make vague allegations in the petition of acts which are not acts of insolvency and then endeavour by means of evidence to prove that as a matter of fact an act of insolvency under S. 6 (g) has been committed.

If an amendment cannot be permitted after the expiration of a period of three months from the date of commission of the act of insolvency, mere leading of evidence in regard to the act of insolvency after the expiration of such period of three months cannot entitle the petitioning creditor to make out a case for adjudication based on such act of insolvency. See Partnership Act (1932), S. 30 (5). (1963) 1 Mys L J 332.

——S. 6 (g) — Act of insolvency — Notice of suspension of payment of debts—What constitutes.

Whether the acts of the debtor relied upon by the creditors in support of their petition constitute an act of insolvency within the meaning of S. 6 of the Insolvency Act or not, is to be decided in the light of the following principles: 1. That a mere statement of the debtors that they are unable to pay their debts however insolvent they may be, is not necessarily a notice within the meaning of the Act, that they are suspending or about to suspend payment. 2. Whether the effect of the words used by the debtors would reasonably and ordinarily mean to the creditors that the former intend suspending payment or about to suspend payment as they are unable to discharge their liabilities immediately. 3. Construing the statement of the debtors it has to be seen whether they intend to deal with their creditors collectively.

A joint Hindu family firm sent a registered notice signed by one of its members to several of their creditors that they are unable to meet their liabilities immediately and that they would like to make arrangements for the purpose of realising all their assets and discharge their liabilities. At a meeting called for the purpose an agreement was arrived at between the firm and some of the creditors present. The relevant clause in the agreement ran as follows: —'As the debtors were in financial difficulties they cannot pay in full to the creditors owing to loss in business. So they have proposed to pay annas six in the rupee as full and final settlement towards their dues to the creditors'. The creditors agreed to take six annas in a rupee in full and final settlement and it was provided that if the payment was not made within the prescribed time the agreement will automatically be cancelled. The payment not having been made the creditors filed a petition for adjudication of the firm as insolvent.

Held, that the registered notice as well as the agreement read as a whole amounted to notices of suspension of debts of the firm. Each of them constituted an act of insolvency. 1891 A C 318 and (1894) 1 Q B 433 and AIR 1935 Mad 589 (2): 69 Mad L J 184 and A I R 1937 All 435 and A I R 1955 Punj 193, Rel. on; A I R 1932 Lah 643 (2) and A I R 1933 Pat 461, Dist. 38 Mys L J 909 : ILR (1960) Mys 900 : A I R 1960 Mys 267 (269, 270, 271) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 8, 17) (DB).

——S. 6 (g) — Requirements — Notice and not mere suspension is necessary — Evidence of intention to suspend payment and not mere declaration is necessary.

What the S. 6 (g), Provincial Insolvency Act requires is notice of suspension of payment. Therefore, mere suspension of payment will not suffice. There must be a notice of suspension, that is, a statement which is intended to give the creditor to understand that the debtor has in fact suspended payment. 12 Rang 150 and Mulla's Insolvency Act, p. 96, para 129, Foll.

Suspension of payment is something different from and over and above inability to pay. A statement by debtor to creditor that he is unable to pay does not by itself and without reference to context or circumstances amount to notice of suspension within the meaning of the section. Beyond a simple declaration there must be some evidence of intention to suspend payment that is to say, to abstain from paying his debts as they fall due. 39 Mad 250 and Mulla's Insolvency Act, p. 96, para 129, Foll. 1952 Nag L J (Notes) 19.

——S. 6 (g)—"Suspended payment" — Suspension of whole indebtedness and payment to every creditor is meant—Refusal to pay disputed debt is not suspension.

The expression "suspension of payment" means the entire suspension of his whole indebtedness by a debtor and a general intention to stop payment to every creditor. A refusal to pay creditors whose debts are disputed is not a suspension of payment. 49 All 321, Foll. 1952 Nag L J (Notes) 19.

——S. 6 (g) — Requirements — Proof of act must be strict — Notice of suspension alleged — Time, place and particulars must be specified.

The proof of commission of an act of insolvency must be strict and precise and where it is alleged that a debtor has given notice that he has suspended or is about to suspend payment of his debt the time, place and particulars of the notice must be specified. 11 Rang 96 (98) and 12 Rang 150, Foll. 1952 Nag L J (Notes) 19.

——S. 6 (g)—Debtor's inability to pay debt — Communication to creditor—Act of insolvency—Test.

A communication of his inability to pay his debts made by a debtor to his creditor may be oral or in writing In order to decide the question whether such a communication amounts to an act of insolvency, the test is what effect would the statement of the debtor produce on the mind of the creditor receiving it as to the intention of the debtor with regard to the creditor taking into account the circumstances disclosed at the time. If the effect is that the debtor has suspended or is about to suspend payment it will amount to an act of insolvency. (1891) A C 316; (1934) 2 K B 769; (1905) A C 442, Rel. on; A I R 1937 Mad 13; 71 M L J 730, Rel. on.

A joint family firm consisted of father, sons and grandsons. When the creditors of the firm demanded payments of their debts at the firm Shop, one of the sons in the presence of the father stated that they had no money and the creditors could do what they liked.

Held, that the statement made by the son fell within S. 6 (g) and was an act of insolvency binding on the whole family. A I R 1937 All 435; AIR 1933 Pat 461; A I R 1934 Pat 526, Ref. A I R 1955 Punj 193 (195 to 197) (Pt A) (Prs 18, 22, 26).

[Reversed in A I R 1958 S C 999.]

——S. 6 (g)—Notice of suspension of payment.

A statement by the debtor in a prior insolvency proceeding that he had issued a notice to the creditors suspending payments of debts does not itself amount to any notice to the creditors that on the date of the statement the debtor has suspended or is about to suspend payment of his debts. 31 P L T 1095, Rel. on. A I R 1953 Trav-Co 356 (357) (Pr 4) (DB).

SECTION 6-A

——S. 6-A (Bom) — R. III-A, Cls. 9 (c) and 10 of Bombay High Court Rules — Scope and validity of— Do not extend time prescribed by S. 9 (1) (c)—Rules held intra vires.

Section 6 sets out the conduct or acts of a debtor which may be regarded as acts of insolvency. But the section does not purport to state at what point of time an act of insolvency shall be deemed to be committed. Section 6 (1) which has been added by the Bombay amending Act does not purport to set out the point of time at which the act of insolvency may be committed by reason of non compliance with insolvency notice. The High Court was therefore was competent to frame rules under S. 79 of the Act to prescribe a point of time at which an act of insolvency may be deemed to be committed by failure to comply with notice as contemplated by S. 6A (2). It is evident from the terms of S. 6 (1) and S. 6A (2) that the Legislature has not provided that on the expiry of the period specified in the notice an act of insolvency shall be deemed to be committed. ——S. 7 — Ex parte order of adjudication — Setting aside of—Limitation—(Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 164 and 181).

To attract Art. 164 of the Limitation Act, the application must be to set aside a decree. Mere fact that O. 9, R. 13, read with S. 141, Civil P. C., is invoked would not necessarily bring that Article into operation. An order of adjudication as an insolvent does not amount to a decree. Nor does a combined reading of Ss. 12 and 18, Provincial Insolvency Act results in converting an order of adjudication into a decree. An application to set aside such order does not therefore attract Art. 164 of the Limitation Act.

But since the petition to set aside the order of adjudication is one taken out under the Code and since no other Article is applicable to it, Art. 181, Limitation Act will govern it. AIR 1932 Lah 522, Dissented from; AIR 1920 Lah 410, Rel. on. (1958) 2 Andh W R 316 : 1958 Andh L T 925.

——Ss. 7, 9—Partnership Act (1932), S. 49—'Partner' when can petition for co-partner's adjudication.

There is nothing in law to preclude a partner from presenting a petition for adjudicating a co-partner insolvent in respect of a distinct debt for which an action might have been brought notwithstanding the partnership. It is only in cases where it would depend upon taking partnership account whether the sum was due or not or where a partner treats a debt due to him by his co-partner as mixed with the partnership accounts, that he cannot present a petition in respect of such debts.

Where a partner who had advanced moneys to his co-partner and took documents from him at every advance as though he (co-partner) were a debtor in respect of those amounts, a sum found due under those documents on account having been made up cannot be said to be an unliquidated sum. As the advances made were by agreement treated not as capital invested in the partnership business but as advance made as creditor, it is not open to the co-partner debtor to contend that the advances were unliquidated sums in respect of which no action can be taken by the creditor partner under the Insolvency Act. ——S. 7 — Joint Hindu family firm — Order of adjudication—Competency and effect of.

An order adjudicating a joint Hindu family firm as insolvent, is in effect an order adjudicating as insolvents those adult members of the family who had participated in the business of the firm. There is no legal impediment to the adjudication of a joint family firm, provided that no minor member is adjudged an insolvent and the other members as are alleged to have participated in the business of the firm had an opportunity to put forward their objections : 9 Mys L J 1; AIR 1941 Pat 596 and AIR 1937 Pat 455 and A I R 1931 Sind 179, Rel. on. 38 Mys L J 909 : ILR (1960) Mys 900 : AIR 1960 Mys 267 (271) (Pt B) (Pr 18) (DB).

——S. 7—Joint Hindu family firm—Creditor's petition for adjudicating insolvent—Parties.

In a creditor's petition for adjudicating a joint Hindu family firm as insolvent which involves the adjudication of persons as insolvents, it is proper that the creditor should specifically name as respondents all those members of the ioint family who have participated in the business of the firm and are connected with the act of insolvency.

Ordinarily, it would be more appropriate that the Court before making an order of adjudication against the joint family firm should be in a position to know as to who are all the members of the family that have participated in the business of the firm and are connected with the act of insolvency. It is also proper that such members should have opportunity to put forward their objections, before the adjudication order is made.

Where the petition named only the Manager of the firm in the cause title as respondent and no notices were issued to the other members :

Held, that the order of adjudication so far as it affected the other members should be set aside. 38 Mys L J 909 : ILR (1960) Mys 900 : AIR 1960 Mys 267 (272) (Pt C) (Pr 20) (DB).

——Ss. 7 and 2 (1) (a) — 'Creditor' and 'Debtor' — Adjudication — Joint Hindu Trading Family — All the members of the family when could be declared insolvent—'Debtor', meaning of—Act of insolvency by Karta of family business cannot be imputed to other coparceners — Difference between a partnership firm and joint Hindu trading family.

For the purposes of the Insolvency Act, nobody is a debtor unless he is personally liable for the debt; or, in other words, whether his separate or self-acquired property can be sold out to satisfy the debt; for, if that cannot be done, then, the necessary foundation for adjudication is lacking.

A joint Hindu family as such, as contradistinguished from a partnership firm, cannot be adjudicated insolvent and it is the individual members thereof alone who could be so declared. In order that members of a joint Hindu trading family other than the managing member may be lawfully adjudicated as insolvents, it must be proved not merely that the debts are owned by the family but that such other members have actively participated in the business of the family by actual conduct or otherwise, so that they may be held liable to personally satisfy the debts. Where, these conditions are not satisfied, it cannot but follow that the order adjudicating the members of such a family other than the managing member cannot be sustained in law for an act of insolvency of the manager of such business cannot be imputed to the other coparceners. AIR 1927 Mad 922 and AIR 1919 Mad 690 and AIR 1936 Mad 64 and AIR 1940 Mad 241, Followed.

There is an inherent difference between a partnership firm and a joint Hindu trading family. Where as a partnership firm arises from contract, a joint Hindu family business arises from status and hence while the interest of a partner in a firm is determined by contract, the rights and obligations of the coparceners, in a joint Hindu family business, are not governed by any contract but by the personal law by which they are governed. While the death of a partner would dissolve the partnership firm, joint Hindu family business cannot be dissolved by the death of a member of such a family. Consequently a joint Hindu family business cannot be called a partnership or a firm as regards the relations inter se of its members and unlike the partners of a firm, members of a joint Hindu trading family are not bound by the acts of the manager of the family. 2. Condition precedent for petition.

——S. 9—Applicability—Condition precedent.

To enable the creditor to maintain a petition for insolvency of the debtor, the debt alleged to be owing to the creditor must have come into existence prior to the act of insolvency on which the petition is founded. The fact that while under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, adjudication relates back to the date of the act of insolvency, under the Provincial Insolvency Act, it relates back to the date of presentation of the petition, makes no difference in the application of the rule, that the debt should have been in existence on the date of the act of insolvency. 1957 Mad W N 722 : 70 Mad L W 986 : (1957) 2 Mad L J 582 : ILR (1958) Mad 405 : AIR 1958 Mad 379 (381) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

——Ss. 9 (1) (c) and 13 (2)—Requirements—Creditor applying must allege specific acts of insolvency — Petition not so alleging is incompetent.

The provision in S. 13 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act and S. 9 (1) (c) make it clear that a creditor's petition must allege the specific act of insolvency on which it is founded and the facts which constitute the act. It is not sufficient to make vague allegations and then endeavour by means of evidence to prove that some hitherto unspecified act of insolvency had been committed. If an act of insolvency is not set out in the petition the petition is incomplete. 50 Bom 624, 28 Bom L R 680, 119 I C 46 and 55 I C 186, Foll. 1952 Nag L J (Notes) 19.

3. Act of insolvency.

— S 9 (g)—"Act of insolvency"—Mere declaration by debtor of inability to pay — Sufficiency — Test whether such declaration constitutes an "act of insolvency"—Proof required of creditor.

A mere declaration of inability to pay by the debtor does not of itself constitute an act of insolvency. S. 9 (g) contemplates that the debtor should not only not pay the debt but must convey the information to the creditor of his intention not to pay. The test whether a communication by debtor constitutes an act of insolvency being whether its effect is that the debtor has suspended his business or is about to suspend payment in which case it may amount to an act of insolvency. Further a creditor has to prove that the debtor was not merely refusing to pay any particular creditor but had declined to pay every one of the creditor or the creditors in a body. AIR 1936 Cal 269; AIR 1932 Lah 643; AIR 1934 Pat 526 and AIR 1955 Punj 193, Rel. on. 1963 All L J 28.

——S. 9—Debtor willing to pay particular creditor who insists on payment—No ground for not adjudicating him insolvent. When a person is adjudicated as insolvent it is not a particular debtor alone whose interests are to be protected by the Court but the entire body of his creditors, secured and unsecured. See Presidency-Towns Insolvency Act (1909), S. 12. AIR 1957 Mad 403 (DB).

—S. 9 (1) (c), Proviso (inserted by Insolvency Law Amendment Act (1950)).

An alleged act of insolvency committed before the coming into operation of the amendment on 21st February, 1950, but with reference to which a petition was not filed within three months, as the last day of the three months' period happened to be a holiday and so the petition was presented on the next working day, will not be an 'act of insolvency' for the purpose of that petition, which is pending after 21st February, 1950, and cannot be relied on for adjudicating a person an insolvent. ——Ss. 9 (1) (c) and 13 (2) — Admissibility of evidence—Transfer not set out as act of insolvency—It can be used as evidence of payment as fraudulent preference alleged.

Where a transfer is not set out as an act of insolvency it cannot be received in evidence to show an act of insolvency but it can be used as evidence of payment to the transferee as fraudulent preference set out in the creditor's petition. 55 I C 185, Foll. 1952 Nag L J (Notes) 19.

4 Debt owing — Meaning of.

——S. 9 — Petition under — Amounts claimed as 'debts' exceeding pecuniary jurisdiction—Effect.

Where a petition under S. 9 is presented by a creditor setting out certain sums to be due from the debtor the petition need not be rejected on the ground that on the face of it, the debts alleged to be due exceeded the jurisdiction of the Court. The Court has the jurisdiction to enquire into the question as to whether what is claimed to be due by the petitioning creditor is or is not a debt as contemplated by S. 9. 1958 Nag L J 83 : 60 Bom L R 505 : ILR (1959) Bom 194.

——S. 9—'Debts' — Meaning of—Claim for refund of earnest money — Character of.

The essence of a debt is that it must be a sum certain which was due from one person to another and would, therefore, exclude a claim for money which arises solely upon the allegation of the breach of a contract. No doubt, the right to refund earnest money is a legal right and does not depend on any equitable consideration, but before being entitled to the refund of earnest money the buyer has to establish that a breach of a contract has been committed by the seller. Where a claim for the return of money is dependent upon the determination of the question as to who is in breach of the contract, it cannot be regarded as a debt within the meaning of the word in S. 9 until it has matured into a decree. 1958 Nag L J 83 : 60 Bom L R 505 : ILR (1959) Bom 194.

——S. 9 (1) (b) — 'Debt' — Meaning of — Claim for damages for breach of contracts relating to forward business — Not a debt.

A claim for damages for breach of contracts relating to forward business is not a debt within the meaning of S. 9 (1) (b) because a claim for damages does not amount to a debt unless the damages are ascertained by a Court. An application to adjudicate opponents as insolvents does not lie in such a case. AIR 1962 Guj 295 (296) (Pr 1).

——S. 9 — Promissory note or letter evidencing deposit — Letter by debtor to creditor — Letter held to be evidencing deposit and not pronote — (Stamp Act (1899), S. 2 (22)).

Held that the document was only a letter evidencing a deposit and was not a promissory note and that the petitioning creditor was entitled to file an application for adjudicating V as an insolvent. The claim was not barred and the respondent was a creditor within the meaning of the Provincial Insolvency Act. See Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), S. 4. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 3942.

—Ss. 9, 7 — Petition for adjudication — Debt as foundation — Requirements of — Person appointed as administrator — Failure to pay amount — Nature of liability—Liability of legal representatives—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 52).

Bankruptcy is essentially a proceeding 'in personam' and only a personal debt due by the insolvent form the foundation of a petition for adjudication. Such a debt must have come into existence before the act of insolvency. A debt on which the insolvency petition can be based must be one provable in insolvency or in other words it must be a subsisting debt due from the debtor on the date of the presentation of the petition. It must also be a liquidated sum payable either immediately or at some future time. Where a person appointed to administer the fund fails to pay it to the beneficiary, the liability, if any is one in the nature of damages for breach of trust. It cannot be a debt for liquidated sum. And even if he is a debtor, his son cannot become a debtor; for, a legal representative will become personally liable only in the circumstances provided for in S. 52, Civil P. C. Therefore adjudication cannot be founded on such a claim. AIR 1928 Mad 133 (1), Not approved; AIR 1927 Mad 922, Foll. ILR (1955) Trav-Co 1239: 1955 Ker L T 669: AIR 1956 Trav-Co 88 (88) (Pr 2) (DB).

—S. 9 — Travancore Insolvency Act (8 of 1108) — "Debt owing by debtor to creditor."

Where the secretary of co-operative Bank retained a certain amount with him without depositing it in the Bank and became liable under the by-laws of the Bank to make good that amount together with interest at a particular rate, the liability of the secretary arising under the bye law cannot be characterised as amounting to an embezzlement. Such an obligation can be enforced as a debt and can form the foundation of an application to adjudge the secretary as insolvent. Where the secretary has, by a document executed by him, owned and accepted the liability, the case is still stronger by the novation of the original liability. ILR (1954) T C 93: AIR 1954 Trav-Co 419 (421) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

5. "Liquidated sum."

—S. 9 (1) (b) — "Liquidated sum" — Mutual open and current account — No liquidated sum or ascertained sum, can be said to be due under such account — Words and Phrases — Mutual open and current account.

One of the conditions for the maintainability of an insolvency petition by the creditor is that the debt must be a liquidated sum. A sum can be said to be liquidated only if it is ascertained sum or one that can be immediately computed with certainty. In commission agency account which is admitted to be 'mutual open and current account,' it cannot be said that any ascertained sum or liquidated sum is due under that account. AIR 1935 All 53; AIR 1931 Cal 359; AIR 1960 Cal 285; AIR 1935 All 352; 1907 C R L 158: (1882) 28 E R 210, Rel. on. 1964 All L J 38.

—S. 9 (1) (b) — 'Liquidated sum' — Amount found due if accounts are taken.

A and B were carrying on joint business, one contributing the capital and the other labour. A applied under S. 9 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The amount which was alleged by A to be due by B was on account of profits earned by the business. It was alleged that a certain sum would be found due if the accounts prepared by B were examined and that as B had not paid up that sum he should be adjudged an insolvent.

Held, that the relationship between the two partners in business could not be said to be that of a creditor and a debtor and that the amount which may be found due on accounting cannot be said to be a liquidated sum within the meaning of S. 9 (1) (b). Case law referred 1955 All L J 52: 1955 All W R (HC) 174: AIR 1955 All 352 (353) (Prs 6, 8) (DB).

—S. 9 — 'Liquidated sum' — Claim for damages for non-performance of contract.

An essential condition for a creditor's petition is that the debt due to him must be a liquidated sum (i.e.), there must be a certain sum admittedly due and payable to the petitioning creditor. A claim for damages for non-performance of a contract of sale cannot ordinarily be within the meaning of a "liquidated sum" and such a claim cannot support a creditor's petition. AIR 1951 Madh B 115 (115) (Prs 5, 6).

—S. 9 (1) (b) — 'Liquidated sum' — Claim for refund of advance on breach of contract.

The fact that the cause of action which enabled the creditor to recover the debt was the same as the cause of action on which he could claim damages for breach of contract does not disentitle him from maintaining the petition under S. 9 (1) (b). The debt on the basis of which the creditor seeks the adjudication of the debtor is a liquidated sum within the meaning of that expression in S. 9 (1) (b). 70 Mad L W 986: 1957 Mad W N 722: (1957) 2 Mad L J 582: ILR (1958) Mad 405: AIR 1958 Mad 379 (380) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

6. Secured creditor — Who is.

—S. 9 (2) — Secured creditor, who is—Petition by secured creditor.

The definition of the term secured creditor has to be understood as confined to his capacity qua the secured debt and not comprehending his capacity as regards debts for which there is no security.

A creditor to whom the insolvent debtor owes secured as well as unsecured debts cannot be held to be a secured debtor qua the unsecured debts and is entitled to file a petition for insolvency without valuation of the security or its abandonment as contemplated by S. 9 (2). See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 2 (e). AIR 1954 Trav-Co 419.

7. Amendment of petition.

—S. 9—Amendment of petition.

If within three months from the act of insolvency a debt has been made ground of the petition, and it afterwards becomes desirable to add another party to the petition in respect of that debt, leave may be given to join that other party as a petitioner where it will not lead to any injustice.

Where on an application having been filed by A to adjudicate B as insolvent it was contended by the latter that the debt was due not to A in his individual capacity but it was really a partnership debt due to a firm of which A was only one of the partners and, thereupon an amendment was sought for more than three months after the act of insolvency to the effect that the petitioner may be described as the firm of which A was the managing partner.

Held, that the amendment should be allowed. ('50) 1950-2 Mad L J 761: A I R 1951 Mad 436 (437) (Pr 2).

—Ss. 9 (1) (c) and 13 (2) — Amendment — Act not set out as act of insolvency in creditor's petition — Amendment to include it cannot be allowed after more than 3 months from act of insolvency.

Where an amendment goes to the root of the petition and alters the substance of the act of insolvency alleged, the Court ought not to permit the amendment to be made if the effect would be that the amended petition would be represented more than three months after the date of act of insolvency alleged. Where the amendment seeks to add another act of insolvency not set out and seeks to do so long after three months from date of act of insolvency the amendment cannot be allowed. 22 Rang 150 (156), Foll. 1952 Nag L J (Notes) 19.

8. Abatement of petition.

——S. 9—Abatement of application under.

Application under S. 9, Provincial Insolvency Act, was filed against, D by A, B and C, brothers, as proprietors of a joint Hindu family concern carrying on cloth business. B died and the application to bring his sons on record was rejected as made beyond time. The application under S. 9 was also held to have been abated as a whole. In appeal against the order by A and C.

Held, that the presumption of law was that the persons who are own brothers are members of a joint Hindu family. The mere fact that they are living and messing separately does not establish that they were separate in status. Separation in status comes about by proof of separate enjoyment of the income of the property. There was no evidence on record that the brothers were separate and the application was filed by A as manager of the joint family.

Further that even if the brothers were assumed to have been separate, A and C satisfied the requirements of S. 9 and could apply under it in their own rights. The application therefore did not abate by the death of B. AIR 1928 Pat 250 and AIR 1945 Oudh 50, Distinguished. AIR 1954 All 449 (450) (Prs 3, 5, 6) (DB).

9. Within three months.

——Ss. 9 (1) (c) and 6 (b) — Gift — Deed registered within three months before petition though executed beyond that period— Can be treated as act of insolvency — Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 123— Registration Act (1908), Ss. 47 and 60.

A gift can be treated as an act of insolvency within three months of the presentation of the petition where the deed had been registered within that period although its execution itself took place beyond that period of time.

Reading together the provisions of S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act with S. 6 (b) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and S. 47 of the Registration Act the only conclusion which can be drawn is that the material date cannot be the date of execution of the deed for acts of insolvency but would be the date of registration. 1947 A L J 408, Rel. on; AIR 1937 Rang 446, Not followed.

For the purposes of the act of insolvency under S. 6 (b) what is required is that the debtor makes a transfer of his property or any part thereof with intent to defeat the claims of the creditor. Section 123, T. P. Act requires that for the purpose of making a gift the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument. Hence it cannot be held that there is a distinction between a gift and a sale as an act of insolvency and that as a gift is irrevocable after its acceptance by the donee it must be deemed to operate as a transfer for the purposes of the Insolvency Act from the date of its execution or transfer of possession.

The date of execution cannot also be deemed to be date of registration by a reference to the fiction of law in S. 47, Registration Act. The reason of the fiction of law under S. 47 is that the document when it is registered would operate from the date of its execution as if no registration had been required by law and not that the date of registration would date back to the date of execution.

Similarly the date of presentation of the document for registration and its admission therefor cannot also be taken as the date of registration. When an act is completed by a series of acts the date of the performance of the act would be the date when the final act is performed and not the first act. A reference to S. 60 of the Registration Act shows that though a series of acts may have to be performed for registering a document yet the act of registration would mean the date when the certificate is actually made containing the word "registered" in the document. The admission of the document for the purposes of registration, which is the first act in the series, cannot therefore be taken as the date of registration. 1962 All L J 1101 : 1963 All W R (HC) 30.

——Ss. 9 (1) (c), 53 and 54— Date of transfer is date of registration and not date of execution of transfer deed — Fiction of relation back does not apply— (Registration Act (1908), Ss. 47 and 75).

A creditor may present a petition to adjudicate a debtor as an insolvent under S. 9 of the Provincial Insolvency Act on the ground that the debtor made a fraudulent transter of his property within the meaning of S. 6 (c) of the Act. Similarly, an Official Receiver can present a petition for avoiding a transfer under S. 53 or for annulling a transfer under S. 54 of the Act. The fiction of relation back which is provided for under Ss. 47 and 75 of the Registration Act does not find a place in the Provincial Insolvency Act. Therefore the date of the transfer of property for purposes of Ss. 9 (1) (c), 53 and 54, is date on which the document of transfer is registered and not the date on which it was executed or the date when it was first presented for registration. ——S. 9 (1) (c)—'Within three months'—Meaning of.

For an application by a creditor under S. 9, where the act of insolvency alleged against the debtor is the execution of a sale deed or other alienation which requires registration, the period of three months for presenting the petition for adjudication should be computed from the date of registration of the sale deed and not from the date of its execution If it is held that the period of three months provided under S. 9 begins to run from the date of execution and not from the date of registration of a sale deed that section can be easily rendered nugatory by the insolvent or the alienee merely deferring presentation of the document for registratson till the last day of the four months within which the document may normally be registered or to the eight months available under some special circumstances referred to in S. 24 of the Registration Act. ——Ss. 9 and 40 — Petition for re-adjudication — Requirements.

When the statute is thoroughly silent as to the kind of requirements under S. 9 which are to be fulfilled in the case of original adjudication where the statute deals with re-adjudication, it is not for the Court by a process of judicial construction to indulge in anything like a legislative enlargement of the Act, on an application for re-adjudication after the annulment of the original adjudication on account of the failure of a composition scheme which intervened, it is not incumbent upon the petitioning creditors to satisfy the requirements of S. 9. 12. Hindu joint family—Competency of petition against.

——Ss. 9, 34—Joint family debt.

A person liable for debts merely on the ground that he is a member of a joint family and that the debts are payable by the joint family cannot be adjudicated insolvent for those debts, and those debts cannot be proved in his insolvency and will have only to be allowed for primarily in a partition suit brought by the purchasers of the other share or shares. But there are also undoubtedly circumstances which will make such a person personally liable for the debt, such as his being a member of a trading firm and holding himself out as a partner and the debts being contracted for that trade. There is no need to wait then for a partition suit for allowing such debts which can be proved in the insolvency of the person who had made himself personally liable for the debts in addition to being liable for them from out of his share in the joint family properties. 17 Lah 644: A I R 1936 P C 277: 34 L W 781, A I R 1931 Mad 788, Ref. —S. 9 — Hindu joint family — Debts incurred by Manager — Insolvency petition against whole family —Competency—Proof of liability of coparceners.

In the case of a joint Hindu family of which the father or manager is the head, the sons or other members are not personally liable for debts contracted by the father or manager and hence in order to support a single petition against the entire members constituting the joint family it must be shown that the debt on which the petition is founded is a joint debt for which all members are personally liable and that they have committed a joint act of insolvency. 1959 Nag L J (Notes) 128.

13. Partnership firm — Adjudication of partner of.

——S. 9—Partner, when can petition for co-partner's adjudication.

There is nothing in law to preclude a partner from presenting a petition for adjudicating a co-partner insolvent in respect of a distinct debt for which an action might have been brought notwithstanding the partnership. It is only in cases where it would depend upon taking partnership account. whether the sum was due or not or where a partner treats a debt due to him by his co-partner as mixed with the partnership account that he cannot present a petition in respect of such debt See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 7. AIR 1964 Mad 106.

——S. 9—Petition for adjudication of a partner made by partner—Mortgage debt — Claim for a liquidated sum — Transaction impugned as an act of insolvency — Creditor receiving monies due to him under that transaction — When would be precluded from maintaining petition

There is nothing in law to preclude a partner from presenting a petition in his insolvency against a co-partner in respect of a distinct debt for which an action might have been brought notwithstanding the partnership. It is only in cases where it would depend upon taking partnership accounts to ascertain whether the sum was due or not or where a partner treats debts due to him by his co partner as mixed with the partnership accounts, he cannot present a petition in respect of such debt. Where for the advances made by one partner to another partner the parties used to take documents from the borrower as though he was a debtor in respect of those amounts, a debt evidenced by a mortgage would be liquidated sum under S. 9 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Where the creditor protested against the sale effected by the insolvent, the fact that the creditor received payments that were due to him under the mortgage from the vendee under the transaction which was impugned as an act of insolvency, would not preclude him from maintaining the petition for adjudication. It is only where a creditor assents to or is a party to the transaction or privy to or where he acquiesces in the conveyance that he cannot rely on the conveyance as an act of bankruptcy. (1964) 1 M L J 99 : 1963 Mad W N 609 : A I R 1964 Mad 106 (107, 108) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5, 7).

—S. 9 (1) — Sale of property mortgaged by a co-partner as security for advances made to him independent of partnership business by his partner — Partner creditor not a consenting party to sale — Receipt of the amount due by partner creditor from out of sale proceeds does not estop him from relying upon the sale as an act of insolvency.

A partner in a firm made advances to his co-partner and every time took a document from him. Pursuant to this practice the co partner executed a mortgage of his property to the partner creditor. When accounts were taken of the advances it was found that the co-partner owed a large sum to his partner-creditor which sum was acknowledged by him by signing the pass book. While the partnership continued, the co partner debtor sold to third parties all his properties which he had mortgaged to the partner creditor. Alleging that though the properties were really worth merely Rs. 80,000, they were sold by the co-partner for Rs. 47,000 only with a view to defeat and delay his creditors, the partner creditor relying upon the sale as an act of insolvency filed a petition to adjudicate the co-partner an insolvent. The petition was opposed by the co-partner debtor on the ground that as the partner creditor had received and accepted whole amount due to him under the mortgage from out of the sale proceeds he was estopped from relying upon the sale as an act of insolvency.

Held, that it was only where a creditor assented in or was a party or privy to or where he acquiesced in the conveyance or assignment by his debtor that he was estopped from relying upon the conveyance or assignment as an act of insolvency and from filing a petition for adjudicating the debtor as insolvent and not otherwise. 15. Appeal.

——S. 10 —Condition precedent for filing insolvency petition by debtor -Prima facie proof of inability to pay debts essential — Omission to disclose full assets in petition—Petition not maintainable.

A substantial change was made in the law by the enactment of Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920, which for the first time made it a condition precedent, for a debtor to entitle him to present an application for being declared an insolvent, to prove, prima facie, that he is unable to pay his debts. It is only when the conditions prescribed under S. 10 of the Act have been fulfilled that a Court has no option but to admit him to the protection of the insolvency Court.

This condition was absent in the Act of 1907. A I R 1924 Pat 166, Rel. on. Unless the assets of the petitioner along with his liabilities, are fairly presented before the Court, for which a duty is cast on the petitioner under the law, it cannot be held that the Court is in a position to come to a finding on the question about his inability to pay his debts 1964 All L J 82 : AIR 1964 All 322 (323) (Prs 8, 9) (DB).

—S. 10 (2) — Applicability — Defective order of annualment —Review—Maintainability—Order without vesting properties of insolvent in Official Receiver — Review at instance of debtor to rectify defect lies.

Section 10 (2) of the Act which provides a specific remedy to a debtor in respect of whom an order of adjudication has been annulled and gives him permission to present other petition on the same facts, provided he has satisfied the Court that he was prevented, by any reasonable cause, from presenting or prosecuting his application cannot be applied to set aside an unconditional order of annulment passed earlier without providing for vesting of properties of the insolvent in Official Receiver. In such a case therefore the earlier order of annulment can be reviewed on debtor's application in order to rectify the defect therein. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 5. AIR 1963 Andh Pra 52 (DB).

—S. 10 (2) — Order of annulment under S. 43 — Debtor should follow specific remedy under S 10 (2) — He cannot apply under S. 5 for setting aside the order of annulment and for extension of time for discharge — The intention of the Legislature is that in class of cases coming under S. 43, the special procedure referred to in S. 10 (2) should be followed and not the provisions of C P. C made applicable by S. 5. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 5. AIR 1962 Andh Pra 262 (DB).

—S. 10 –Order of adjudication—Conditions for — Debtor satisfying requirement of S. 10 — Application cannot be dismissed on ground that it was not bona fide—Petition cannot be dismissed because salary was not disclosed — That the petitioner was harrassed by the creditors may by itself not warrant his being adjudicated an insolvent. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 27. AIR 1957 Andh Pra 375.

—Ss. 10 and 24 — Preliminary inquiry—Scope—Power of Court.

During a preliminary enquiry the Insolvency Court has no power to enquire into the correctness of the particulars of the claim furnished under S. 13 (1) (d) and has no power to direct deletion of any of the items included in such particulars. Before making the order of adjudication, the Court has no power to enquire what debts are provable in insolvency. Such inquiry is made in the course of framing of the schedule of creditors under Ss. 33 and 34 after the order of adjudication is made. ILR (1957) 3 Cal 481 : AIR 1957 Cal 16 (16) (Prs 5, 6).

—S. 10 — Inability to pay debt—Proof—No elaborate enquiry contemplated — Applicant to make out prima facie case

Unless the debtor satisfies the court of his inability to pay his debts, his petition for insolvency must be dismissed under section 25 (a) of the Act. It is no doubt true that under section 10 read with the proviso to section 24 (1) (a) of the Act, for the purpose of proving his inability to pay his debts, the debtor is required to furnish only such proof as will satisfy the Court that there are prima facie grounds for believing the same, and the Court if and when so satisfied is not bound to hear any further evidence thereon. It is thus clear that at this stage an elaborate inquiry into the alleged inability of the applicant to pay his debts is not contemplated. At the same time it is necessary that the debtor must make out a prima facie case to the satisfaction of the Court as to his inability to pay his debts. The fact that the only property to which the petitioning debtor is entitled to is his share in the joint family property of which he cannot, under the Hindu law enforce partition during the life time of his father, is no ground for holding that the debtor has no property available for payment of his creditors. His interest in the property is alienable notwithstanding the restriction, and its value must be taken into consideration in determining whether he is unable to pay his debts. 1956 Madh B L J 923.

—S. 10—Debtor's petition for insolvency — Conditions satisfied—Court cannot refuse adjudication—Abuse of process, if any can be visited with consequences at time of application for discharge.

For adjudicating a debtor an insolvent, the court must see whether there is compliance with the provisions of S. 10 and whether the debtor has committed an act of insolvency. A debtor commits an act of insolvency even if the petitioner to be adjudged an insolvent under the provisions of the Act. Under S. 10 his debt must amount to Rs. 500 or he must be under arrest or imprisonment in execution of the decree of any court for the payment of money. When all the conditions specified under the Act are satisfied a debtor is entitled to an order of adjudication. The matter does not depend on the discretion of the court, but it is a statutory right of which he cannot be deprived by the court on the ground of abuse of process. There is a stage at which the court can visit on the petitioner its due consequences of misconduct, that is when the application for discharge comes before the court. At the time of the initiation of the proceedings, the court has only to be satisfied that the essential conditions for adjudication as provided under the Act are present. 44 Cal 535, Relied on.

The petitioner's petition for insolvency was rejected on the ground that the debt was fictitious. Subsequently the same creditor obtained a decree on that debt and in execution thereof arrested the petitioner. The petitioner came up with another application for adjudication but the court dismissed it on the ground that it was abuse of the process of the court Held, that the petitioner was entitled to be adjudicated. (1966) 1 Mad L J 210 : 78 Mad L W 648.

—Ss 10 and 24—Petition by debtor under S. 10—Scope of inquiry—Evidence that may be adduced in such inquiry — Evidence regarding concealment of property by debtor—When can be adduced.

When a petition is made by a debtor under S. 10 for being adjudged insolvent, the debtor has, under proviso to S 24 (1), only to furnish such proof as to satisfy the Court that there are prima facie grounds for believing that he is unable to pay his debts and the Court, if and when so satisfied, is not bound to hear any further evidence. The creditors who have a right under S. 24 (2) to question the debtor as regards his conduct, dealings and property have no right to produce substantive evidence as regards the concealment of property by the debtor; it is only at the stage of making the order of discharge that the question as regards the concealment of property or the question of the debtor being guilty of any fraud or fraudulent breach of trust can be raised and it is only at that stage that the creditors are entitled to adduce evidence on these points AIR 1928 Pat 477, Foll. AIR 1961 Orissa 91 (91) (Pr 4).

—S. 10—Unable to pay his debts—Meaning.

The existence of assets may not be the criterion to determine whether one is able to pay the debts or unable to pay the debts. Even though a man may own several assets, still he can be said to be unable to pay his debts if he cannot raise money by sale of those properties. The fact that the assets exceed the liabilities is colourless and will not disentitle the debtor to an order of adjudication.

Held, that the petition could not be dismissed merely because the petitioner failed to show that he was unable to pay his debts, especially when the only objection of the respondent was that the petitioner owned one-fifth share in the joint family property, without stating the value of that one-fifth share. AIR 1933 All 841, Not foll.; AIR 1928 Lah 202, Rel. on. I L R (1958) Cut 126 : 24 Cut L T 167 : AIR 1958 Orissa 117 (118) (Pr 5).

——Ss. 10 (1) (a), 13 (1) (d), 24—Petition by debtor —Procedure.

Under S. 10 (1) (a), the two conditions which must co-exist are: first, that the debtor is unable to pay his debts, and, secondly his debts amount to Rs. 500. These two conditions which are pre-requisite for presentation of an application for insolvency must be established in every case. On the failure of either, the debtor's application for insolvency must fail if his case is governed by S. 10 (1) (a). Mentioning only of the names of the creditors and amount of loan is not sufficient compliance with S. 13 (1) (d) of the Act. In order to determine whether the loans taken on the basis of the two handnotes were subsisting or not, or, when they would be barred by limitation, it was necessary to mention further the dates of the handnotes in order to enable the Court to find out whether the two handnotes really existed either in fact or in law. AIR 1933 Pat 43, Rel. on. 1958 B L J R 522 : AIR 1958 Pat 528 (528, 529, 530) (Prs 6, 7, 8, 10, 18).

——S. 10—'Unable to pay his debts'—Debtor owning share in property—Value of share though in excess of his liability not immediately realisable—Effect.

Although a debtor may have assets which, if liquidated would provide sufficient money to discharge his debts, yet if he has no liquidated assets with which to pay his debts at present he must be held not to be able to pay his debts and therefore liable to adjudication as an insolvent. AIR 1934 Lah 63 (1), Rel. on. Thus where the debtor owned one fourth share in a house along with three others and the value of his share was sufficient to liquidate his debts but the debtor could not alone sell away that property and it could not be said what exact amount that property will fetch on being sold that would not be sufficient to prove his ability to pay his debts. A I R 1960 Raj 242 (243) (Pr 6).

——S. 10 — Scope — Petition for adjudication by debtor— Provisions of S. 10 should be complied with —Advantage of S. 6 (f) is not available to a debtor. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 6 (f). 1960 Raj L W 623.

——S. 10—Inability to pay debts— Test of — Liquid assets should be considered — Value of the property need not be considered.

In deciding a question whether a debtor is unable to pay his debts within the meaning of S. 10 the Court has primarily to consider the matter from the point of liquid assets. If the conditions are such thet he cannot realise his assets when he is called upon to pay his debts a debtor would be insolvent although the total value of the properties which may subsequently be found to be his as a result of a long and tedious litigation would be sufficient to discharge those debts. AIR 1955 N U C (Trav-Co) 6006.

Provisions of S. 13 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act are mandatory. The word "shall" used in the section cannot be taken to have been used in the sense of 'may' and the non-compliance with the provisions of S. 13 would make the petition incompetent.

The Legislature while enacting S. 13 (2) of the Act could not have intended that any vagueness in the petition, which does not give sufficient particulars regarding the matters required to be given could be condoned. The mere fact that no penalty was provided for not giving particuiars is ——Ss. 15, 28 (2) — Consolidation of insolvency petitions.

Under S. 15, Provincial Insolvency Act, the Court has power to consolidate separate petitions against the same debtor. The only limitation is that the section does not empower the Court to pass an order of consolidation on a petition in insolvency before it is admitted and before an opportunity had been afforded to the other parties concerned of showing that the petition is not competent. Prima facie, this section refers to consolidation of insolvency petitions after they are admitted and pre-supposes that such petitions are otherwise competent. This section also does not require that a formal order of consolidation should be passed because the language used is 'The Court may consolidate the proceedings or any of them on such terms as the Court thinks fit.' Express order is not necessary and can be inferred from the conduct of the proceedings. AIR 1933 Cal 651 and AIR 1930 Rang 265 (1), Distinguished. AIR 1956 Mad 157 (159) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

——Ss. 15, 18 —Consolidation of creditors' petitions.

Section 15 permits the Court to consolidate the creditors' petitions, before the order of adjudication under S 27 is passed. There is no impediment in the way of the debtor being heard on the point whether creditors are competent to file the applications, even after the applications are consolidated. SECTION 16

——S. 16 — Scope and object of — Debtor admitting inability to pay debts—Proof of insolvency — Necessity — Negotiable Instruments Act (26 of 1881), S. 118 (1) — Nature of presumption.

The object of S. 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is to serve as a check on the fraud of a creditor who has presented the application for insolvency and to prevent other creditors from being injured by the action of the former, who by reason of collusion or otherwise, may not diligently prosecute the petition and to give the other creditors the benefit of the date of the original petition, no matter how much later be the date of their own introduction into the case. This act of the petitioning creditor colluding with the proposed insolvent may happen at any time after the filing of the petition and if the petition happens to come for enquiry more than three months after the act of insolvency, it cannot be said that no new creditor can be substituted for the petitioning creditor and the purpose of the Act cannot be defeated by objecting to any new creditor coming on record. ——S. 16—Petitioning creditor not proceeding with insolvency petition with diligence—Another creditor — If can be allowed to proceed with the petition.

The requirements of S 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act are satisfied when the first petitioning creditor withdraws the amount deposited by the insolvent towards the debt and does not proceed with the insolvency petition and where the consequent annulment of the adjudication would result in defeating all the other creditors. The petition presented by the first petitioning creditor must be held to enure for the benefit of all the creditors of the insolvent on ——Ss. 16 and 19 — Application for adiudicating debtor as insolvent—Application dismissed on basis of compromise — Proper procedure—Restoration of apolication under inherent power — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 151).

Where, on the basis of a compromise between the petitioning creditor and the debtor, the petition adjudicating the debtor as insolvent was dismissed and it was further ordered that the sum of money which was deposited by the debtor in Court should be paid over to the petitioning creditor in case to be obtained a decree against the debtor and thereafter another creditor applied under S. 16 of the Act and S. 151 of the Civil P. C. to re-open the original petition and substitute him as the second petitioning creditor and allow him to continue the application for adjudication.

Held that the proper thing for the Court would have been to withhold the payment of the amount for a period in order to allow other creditors to come up and then adjudge their rights against the debtor. Such a procedure would alone have satisfied the principle or the policy and scheme underlying the Provincial Insolvency Act that the petitioning creditor acts not merely for himself but also on behalf of other creditors when once he files a petition to adjudicate debtors as insolvents.

Held further that this was a fit case where the ends of justice required that in the exercise of the powers vested in Court under S 151 of the Code, the original application should be ordered to be restored to file in order that the claims of the other creditors against the respondents could be considered and disposed of. Since under S. 16, a creditor who is aggrieved by the conduct of the petitioning creditor can come by way of an application for being substituted and not for being added as an additional party resort cannot be had by him to the provisions of O. 1, R. 10, Civil P. Under S. 17 if a debtor by or against whom an insolvency petition has been presented dies the proceedings in the matter are to be, unless the Court otherwise orders, continued so far as may be necessary for the realiasation and distribution of the property of the debtor. In view of S. 5 of the Act the provisions of S 17 should be given preference over the provisions of O. 22, Civil P. C in the case of death of a debtor. There is no doubt that R. 21, sub-r. (3) framed under the Act is mandatory in its nature and the Court is bound to follow it. It does not however follow that the failure to issue the notice to the transferee necessarily vitiates the proceedings and renders it void The debtor on whom notice was served cannot be heard to urge the failure to serve the transferee as a ground in revision for invalidating the order of adjudication particularly so where the point regarding the failure to comply with the rule

—S. 19 (2)—Petition by creditor — Notice - Necessity — (High Court Rules and Orders — (Rajasthan) General Rules (Civil), R. 423).

Section 19 (2) applies to petitions both by creditors and by debtors and the notice has to be made in the manner prescribed in R. 423 of the General Rules (Civil) framed by the High Court of Rajasthan. This means that whether the petition is by a creditor or by a debtor, general notice as prescribed by that rule must always be given. Specific notice to individual creditors will only be given where the names and addresses of the individual creditors are known from any part of the petition. SECTION 20

—Ss. 20, 28, 56 — Powers of interim receiver — Property, when vests in receiver.

Whatever may be the powers conferred on an interim Receiver the property of the debtor does not vest in him as it does in a Receiver appointed after adjudication under S 56 of the Act; in other words his appointment has not the same effect as the effect of the appointment of an Official Receiver after adjudication.

It is only after the adjudication that an insolvent can be said to have been divested of his property and it is only then and not otherwise that the property would vest in the receiver. But before adjudication, debtor continues to be the legal owner of the property. AIR 1964 Andh Pra 299 (302) (Pt B) (Pr 22) (DB).

—S. 20—Interim receiver appointed under S. 20 — Expenses incurred by him are not expenses of administration within S. 61 (3) — Priority cannot be claimed in respect thereof. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 61 (3). AIR 1960 Andh Pra 53 (DB).

—S. 20—Interim Receiver — Vesting of property.

It is not correct to assume that by the appointment of an interim Receiver the property of the insolvent vests in the Receiver. Under S. 20, Provincial Insolvency Act, an interim Receiver has powers conferable on a Receiver appointed under the Code of Civil Procedure. The property of the debtor against whom an application for adjudication is made is not vested in the interim Receiver. Till the debtor is adjudicated an insolvent, the property continues to remain vested in the debtor. It is only when an order of adjudication is passed that the title of the Receiver in Insolvency relates back to the date of the application for adjudication. 56 Bom L R 1028 : ILR (1955) Bom 236 : AIR 1955 Bom 170 (171) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

●—S. 20—Interim Receiver — Powers of—Sale in execution of decree against insolvent — Interim Receiver directed by Court to take possession of insolvent debtor's property — He can apply under O. 21, R. 90, C. P. Code to set aside sale.

In a case where on an application made by a creditor to adjudicate his debtor an insolvent against whom a decree already obtained by another creditor is being executed by sale of his property, an interim Receiver is appointed under S. 20 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, subsequent to the date of the execution sale, as well as in a case where he has been appointed before, it is competent to the insolvency Court to clothe the Receiver with the authority to take proceedings under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., to set aside the sale. Such authority can be given expressly or even impliedly and if such Court directs the interim Receiver to take charge of the property which had been sold (the sale not having been confirmed), he would have authority to institute all necessary proceedings to retain the property and thereby make the title of the debtor more perfect. ILR 34 Cal 305 and (1951) 2 M L J 506 ; AIR 1952 Mad 51, Rel. on ; AIR 1928 Mad 454, Foll ; (1942) 2 M L J 563 ; AIR 1943 Mad 199, Overruled. T. S. Sailappan v. ● —S. 20—Interim Receiver—Purpose in appointment of.

The appointment of the interim Receiver does not have the effect of vesting or transferring title in the property to him. The real purpose of such appointment is to preserve the assets of the debtor for the benefit of the general body of creditors, in case the main petition were to result in an adjudication of the debtor. After an adjudication, however, the property of the debtor will vest in the Official Receiver (under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act) as and from the date of the presentation of the petition. —S. 20—Effect of appointment.

On the appointment of the interim receiver in the insolvency proceedings not only the general property of the insolvent but also contracts made by him which were outstanding vest in the receiver. ILR (1953) Nag 201 : AIR 1953 Nag 345 (348, 349) (Pt C) (Pr 23) (DB).

See Contract Act (1872), S. 39. AIR 1953 Nag 345 (DB).

—S. 20 — Receiver's power to take possession of property not of the debtor.

Under the provisions of S. 20 the interim receiver has no authority to take possession of properties which were not admitted to be the properties of the debtor firm. AIR 1955 Pat 413 (417) (Pt C) (Pr 14) (DB).

——Ss. 20, 28-A and 4 — Power to direct ad interim receiver to take possession of joint family property—(Hindu law — Joint family—Insolvency of Karta)—Presidency-Towns Insolvency Act (1909), Ss. 52 and 16.

In an undivided Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, the property of the family being joint, no member of the family can predicate which portion of it belongs to him. It is only on partition that a member of such a family is in a position to say as to which part of the joint family property belongs to him. Therefore, on the insolvency of a member of such a family the joint family property does not vest in the Court or the receiver, whatever power the receiver may exercise by virtue of the provisions of S. 28-A of the Act and S. 52 of the Presidency-Towns Insolvency Act to have the joint family properties sold to meet debts binding on the family. 52 I A 22 and AIR 1942 Mad 682 : (1942) 2 Mad L J 457, Followed.

Such being the position after adjudication of insolvency, the ad interim receiver appointed before adjudication cannot be given possession of the joint family property. By virtue of the provisions of S. 28A of the Act and S. 52 of the Presidency-Towns Insolvency Act certain power vests in the receiver by operation of law, but in the case of an ad interim receiver nothing vests in him by operation of law and he can take possession of only such properties as belong to the debtor. It would, therefore, be misapplication of the law to apply to the provisions of S. 20 the provisions of S. 28-A of the Act. An ad interim receiver cannot take physical possession of the disposing power of the karta or the manager of a joint family although such disposing power may vest in him by operation of law after adjudication of insolvency.

Nor can resort be had to S. 4 to give possession of the joint family property to the ad interim receiver because that would be to override the express provisions contained in S. 20 which permit the Court to appoint such receiver for the property of the debtor only and S. 4 cannot override the express provisions of S. 20. 1954 B L J R 260 : ILR 33 Pat 185 : AIR 1954 Pat 459 (462, 463) (Pt B) (Prs 5, 6, 7) (DB).

C. against such order not competent. See Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47. ILR (1965) 2 Punj 212 : AIR 1966 Punj 479 (DB).

——S. 20—Court appointing interim receiver to take steps to recover compensation money payable to judgment-debtor—Property does not vest in interim receiver — Neither the decree-holders are precluded from taking out attachment against that compensation nor executing Court is precluded from proceeding against the same.

An interim receiver appointed by the Court under S. 20 does not stand on the same footing as a receiver appointed at the time, or, after the order of adjudication under S. 28. Furthermore, such a receiver can have only such powers as the Court may confer upon him and which are conferrable on a receiver appointed under O. 40, R. 1, of the Civil P. C. that is to say, the property of the insolvent does not vest in such a receiver. It is only after his adjudication that an insolvent can be said to have been divested of his property and it is only then that his property would vest in the receiver but before that stage has reached, the debtor does and must continue to be the legal owner of the property : AIR 1926 Mad 432 and AIR 1931 Pat 70 and AIR 1964 Andh Pra 299, Foll. Therefore where an interim receiver was appointed by the Insolvency Court, under S. 20, for taking steps to recover the compensation money payable to the judgment-debtors, neither the decree-holders were precluded from taking out attachment against the compensation money of the judgment-debtor, nor the executing Court was in any manner precluded from proceeding in execution against the same. 1965 Raj L W 160 : ILR (1965) 15 Raj 488 : AIR 1965 Raj 188 (190) (Pt A) (Prs 9, 14, 15) (DB).

——S. 21 (2)—Power of attachment—Nature of—Objector can question attachment even prior to adjudication.

The powers of attachment under S. 21 (2) are somewhat analogous to powers of ordinary Civil Courts with reference to suits under O. 38, R. 5. The power of attachment under S. 21 (2) is confined to the property of the insolvent which is either in his possession or under his control. When, therefore, the objector third party claims exclusive possession and not through the insolvent, the question concerns the jurisdiction of the Court to attach and has to be determined summarily apart from the question as to insolvent's title. The latter question can be examined under S. 4 after adjudication. It is competent therefore for an objector to question the attachment even at a stage prior to adjudication by contending that the property when attached was not in the possession or under the control of the insolvent but had properly passed on him and was under his control. —S. 22—Production of debtor's account books.

Where the creditor's petitions are admitted the Court may ask the debtor to produce his books of account. But where the debtor strenuously contests the right of the creditors to present the applications and alleges that he has not committed any act of insolvency, it is not proper to ask him to produce his books without first deciding the contentions of the debtor.

If while deciding the matter under S. 27 of the Act the Judge thinks it necessary to examine the debtor's books of account, he is free to make such a direction giving his reasons for the same. 1961 Raj L W 33 : ILR (1960) 10 Raj 1612.

—S. 23 — Applicability — Maintenance order in favour of wife of insolvent under S. 488, Criminal P. C. —Enforcement of, by imprisonment of husband—Insolvency petition by him—Release of husband—Jurisdiction and power of Insolvency Court.

Section 44 of the Act indicates that the Legislature has maintained a clear distinction as between a liability under and order of maintenance made under S. 488, Criminal P. C. and other classes of debts in respect of which protection is afforded under the provisions of the Act. The order under S. 488, Criminal P. C., cannot be deemed to be a decree of Court. Clause (1) of S. 23 cannot therefore, be invoked by the husband when the order is enforced by imprisonment.

The Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to pass a protection order against such imprisonment and direct release of the prisoner even though the Court is competent to entertain his insolvency petition and to pass an order adjudicating him insolvent. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 488 (3). 1957 Cri L J 392 : AIR 1957 Trav-Co 49 (DB).

Under S. 24, the creditors to whom notice is given as provided under S. 19 (2) are entitled to appear at the hearing of the petition and oppose the maintainability of the insolvency petition by creditor, or a debtor. They are entitled to adduce evidence and satisfy the Court that the provisions of S. 9 or 10 of the Act are not complied with and that the insolvency petition should be dismissed under S. 25. As under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act it is open to the creditor to whom notice has been issued to prove that the applicant creditor is not a creditor of the debtor and that the insolvency petition is engineered by the debtor only with a view to defeat and delay his rights, it is not necessary to add him as a party under the terms of O. 1, R. 10, Civil P. C., when the Provincial Insolvency Act itself has made adequate provision, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure will not apply. —S. 24 (1) (a), Proviso—Scope—Petition by debtor for adjudication on ground of inability to pay debts —Scope of enquiry — Court is bound to inquire into genuineness of all debts enumerated in the petition —Prima facie case—If sufficient.

When a debtor applies to get himself adjudicated an insolvent alleging that he is unable to pay his debts mentioning the names of creditors to whom he owes debts and also deposes in the witness box that he is unable to pay the debts mentioned in his application, all that the Court has to do is to see whether he has made out a prima facie case. His petition stating that he is unable to pay his debts can itself be treated as an act of insolvency and it is not necessary for him to prove each and every debt mentioned by him. Where further a creditor who has obtained a decree is taking execution by way of arrest and the petition for adjudication is filed at that stage and there is no evidence to prove that he possessed any property sufficient to discharge the debts a prima facie case must be held to be made out and he should be adjudicated. —S. 24—Petition by debtor under S. 10—Scope of inquiry — Evidence that may be adduced at such inquiry — Evidence regarding concealment of property by debtor—When can be adduced — It is only at the time of order of discharge that such question can be raised and it is only at that stage that the creditors are entitled to adduce evidence on the point. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 10. A I R 1961 Orissa 91.

—S. 24 (1), Proviso—Application by debtor—Court cannot hold elaborate enquiry into question of debtor's inability to pay debt — Dismissal of application on the ground that debtor had made fraudulent transfers and purchased property benami is erroneous. AIR 1937 Pat 134, Rel. on. A I R 1964 Pat 521 (522) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

—S. 24—Scope of inquiry—Question of benami.

Ordinarily, the question of benami cannot be and should not be gone into a proceeding for adjudi-cating the debtor as insolvent; nonetheless it does not debar a Court from looking into the conduct of the debtor and to see as to whether really he is in a position not to pay the debts as alleged by him. While coming to this satisfaction on prima facie evidence, the Court can look into the attending circumstances and the conduct of the debtor. It is not a case of going into the question of benami nature of the transaction if from the answers given by the debtor in cross-examination the Court comes to the conclusion that the debtor purported to bring into existence a sale deed transferring his half share in the ancestral house in favour of his younger brother in order to defraud the creditors. 1960 B L J R 442 : A I R 1960 Pat 522 (522) (Pr 3).

——S. 24 — Scope — Summary enquiry under S. 24, has nothing to do with S. 4 which ordinarily comes into play after adjudication in disputes between receiver representing debtor's estate and creditors. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 4. A I R 1955 Pat 413 (DB).

2. Powers of Insolvency Court.

——Ss. 24, 25 and 9—Duty of Court.

Where a debt is alleged and it is denied by a debtor the duty of the insolvency Court is to examine into the existence of the debt. It cannot refer the creditor to another civil suit.

Under the Insolvency Act the Court has power to enquire into the genuineness of the debts denied by the debtor, and that power extends to judgment debts also. The enquiry may be made at the instance of the Official Receiver or the debtor himself. This does not, however, mean that the Court is bound to enquire into the allegations of the debtor in every case. There may be a case in which the debt was contested in a regular suit and upheld. The debtor in such a case cannot ask the insolvency Court to re-investigate the matter on the same allegations. 1953 Nag L J 480 : ILR (1953) Nag 625 : AIR 1954 Nag 33 (34, 35) (Prs 10, 16) (DB).

——S. 24—Second appeal—Maintainability—Creditor's application — Insolvency Court, finding question to be complicated, referring parties to civil Court and keeping petition pending in the meanwhile — First appeal against order not successful — No second appeal lies to High Court. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 75. AIR 1953 Nag 189 (DB).

——Ss. 24 and 25 — Power of insolvency Court to refer complicated questions to Civil Court.

Having regard to the entire scheme of the Act and the fact that all matters are open for determination by the Insolvency Court and there is no provision for trial of any issue by a regular suit (as there is in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act or the English Bankruptcy Act) the insolvency Court has no option but to try all the matters. Further, the insolvency Court has to determine whether the creditor's application is proper or not and to dismiss it if it is not; and for this purpose the inquiry, though summary, has to be made. Insolvency Court cannot leave the matter suspended for years and refer the applicant to a regular suit if it finds that complicated pleas of law and facts are involved. Such is not the intention to be gathered from the Act as a whole. AIR 1935 Bom 80, Dissented from, A I R 1941 Mad 895, Foll. Case law referred. 1953 Nag L J 246 : I L R (1953) Nag 608 : A I R 1953 Nag 189 (191) (Pt B) (Pr 15) (DB).

——S. 24 (1) (a) — Insolvency petition by debtor — Petition contested by creditor—Duty of Court.

In a case where a debtor's application for being adjudged an insolvent is not contested by the creditors and the Judge is satisfied that the debtor is unable to pay his debts, he need not hear further evidence. But where the debtor's application is contested by the creditors then it is not proper for the Judge to ride roughshod over the rights of the creditors and say that he is satisfied from the debtor's statement alone about his inability to pay his debts and that he is not going to hear the creditors or entertain their evidence on that point. It is true that he need not make an elaborate or searching enquiry at this stage, but he must give hearing and equal opportunity to both the parties. AIR 1933 Pat 43 and AIR 1936 Rang. 108, Rel. on. ILR (1957) 7 Raj 287 : 1958 Raj L W 111 : AIR 1957 Raj 354 (335) (Pr 4).

3. Inability to pay debts — Proviso to sub-sec. (1) (a).

——S. 24 (1) (a), Proviso—Application by debtor for being declared insolvent — Mere filing of the application will not preclude Court from examining whether application is bona fide or it has been filed with the ulterior purpose of running away from liability for payment of the debts. AIR 1936 Pat 18 (FB) and AIR 1921 Pat 315, Rel. on. AIR 1964 Pat 521 (522) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 24—Petition by debtor — Procedure to be followed—Where the Court below has simply relied on the evidence of the debtor who repeated in his evidence what he had said in the petition that was not sufficient to discharge his obligation envisaged by the proviso to S. 24 (1) (a) and S. 24 (1) (a) of the Act to satisfy that the conditions precedent for presenting insolvency application as required by S. 10 (1) (a) had been complied with. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 10 (1) (a). AIR 1958 Pat 528.

——S. 24—Application for adjudication by debtor—His inability to pay off debts disputed by creditors—Court should afford opportunity to parties to produce evidence.

Where the creditors contested the debtor's right to present the application for adjudication and also alleged that he was in possession of sufficient property to liquidate his debts, it is incumbent upon the Court not only to examine the debtor but also to afford an opportunity to the creditors to question the debtor on the matters regarding his conduct, dealings and property. The Court should also give fair time to the parties to produce their evidence. 1960 Raj L W 623.

4. Examination of debtor—Sub-sec. (2).

——Ss. 24 (2), 13—Scope—Prima facie evidence of inability—Sufficiency — Enquiry about concealment of property—Propriety.

The insolvency Court dismissed the debtor's application under S. 13 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for being adjudged as insolvent, holding that he had suppressed a house and ornaments from the list of his properties, which were sufficient to discharge the debts due by him. The order was approved by single Judge in appeal.

Held, that a debtor is not entitled to present an insolvency petition unless he is unable to pay his debts and the Court under S. 24 (2) is required to examine him, if he is present as to his conduct, dealings and property. However, he has to tender only prima facie evidence as regards his inability to pay the debts: AIR 1928 Nag 226, Foll. The enquiry that is contemplated under S. 24 (2) of the Act is only to obtain information at as early a stage as possible of the property and the conduct of the debtor in relation to the insolvency proceedings but such an enquiry is not essential for deciding whether a debtor should be adjudged as insolvent. AIR 1937 Nag 226, Rel. on. At that stage, therefore, it is not for the Insolvency Court to decide whether the petitioner has not concealed any property from his list of assets from which he can pay his debts. (ILR 36 Mad 402, Rel. on). 1959 M P L J (Notes) 221.

——Ss. 24 (2) and 10 (2) — Second application presented by debtor with leave — Court has to treat debtor as insolvent on strength of previous order.

Where the debtor with the permission of Court presents a second application for adjudication after the annulment of the previous order of adjudication the Court must without another enquiry order the debtor to be treated as an insolvent on the strength of the previous order of adjudication itself. AIR 1937 Pesh 85 (1), Rel. on. Section 10 (2) lays down that the permission to present another application for adjudication as insolvent will be entertainable when the Court is satisfied that the petitioner by any reasonable cause was not able to prosecute his application for discharge which resulted in the annulment of the adjudication or when he has presented fresh facts substantially different from those contained in the petition on which the order of adjudication was made. The effect of this provision is to put such proceedings on the same footing as O. 9, Rr. 9 and 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If it were to be held otherwise and if an enquiry were permitted to be made by the Court on the second occasion which might go against the conclusion recorded in the proceeding resulting in the order of adjudication, the entire object of clause (2) of S. 10 would be defeated. Where the petition is founded on facts substantially different from those in the previous petition, it will be proper for the Court to embark upon fresh enquiry. (iii) that though S. 74 provided for the summary administration of the debtor's estate when his property was not likely to exceed Rs. 500 there was no provision in the Act which disentitled him from presenting a petition if he did not possess assets of a particular or substantial value.

——Ss. 27, 6, 53—Transfer by insolvent challenged—Burden of proof.

Per Shiv Dayal J.:—The burden of proof in insolvency proceedings is not upon the transferee but is on the official receiver or the creditor who challenges the transfer, but it is competent for the Court to draw the inference of intention from the totality of circumstances. The burden on the petitioning creditor is discharged as soon as it is shown that the property stood in the name of the debtor. It is then for the transferee to show that he was the real owner and the debtor was only a benamidar. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 6. AIR 1961 Madh Pra 15 (DB).

——Ss. 27, 19, 79—Madras Civil Rules of Practice, R. 21, Cl. (3) — Adjudication without notice of petition on transferee of property — Vadidity — An order of adjudication passed on a petition under S. 19(1) without notice to the transferee of the properties of the insolvent, as required under R. 21, Cl. (3), Madras Civil Rules of Practice, is unsustainable. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 19. AIR 1950 Mad 386.

——Ss. 27, 28 (2)—Adjudication order — Effects of—Subsequent declaration of property being evacuee property—Validity—Property held vested in Official Receiver—He could not be divested.

An order of adjudication passed under S. 27 denudes the insolvent of all right, title and interest to and in the property of the insolvent and this continues during the whole period of the insolvency. It is as if the law has effected a transfer of title from the insolvent to the Official Receiver. Under Ss. 7 and 8 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act the Custodian gets dominion over the property only after the declaration is made that the property is evacuee property. That declaration follows upon the enquiry under S. 7, but until the proceeding is taken under S. 7 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act there is no vesting of the property and consequently no right in the Custodian to take possession of it. Therefore, where the order of adjudication is passed the property of the insolvent vested in the Official Receiver and it is not open to the Custodian to issue any notice under S. 7(1) of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act and declare the property to be evacuee property. Section 8(1) of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act would not have any effect in the circumstances. Nor would S. 17 read with S. 4 of that Act render the effect of the adjudication order and vesting of the property in the Official Receiver, inoperative and ineffectual. 2. Scope and object of sub-section (2).

——S. 28 (2)—Constitutional validity — Deprivation of property of insolvent under S. 28 (2) — Not hit by Art. 31, Constitution of India—Constitution of India, Art. 31.

Section 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, which provides for the vesting of the property of the insolvent in the Insolvency Court or the receiver and thereby in effect divests the insolvent of his ownership rights in property, does not contravene Art. 31 of the Constitution and is not unconstitutional on that ground. Section 28 (2) of the Act does not contravene Art. 31, Cl. (1) inasmuch as the vesting of the property is due to a duly enacted piece of legislation, viz. Provincial Insolvency Act, and as such supported by authority of law. Clause (2) of Art. 31 is not applicable as the property is neither requisitioned nor acquired for a public purpose. ILR (1962) 1 All 200 : AIR 1962 All 256 (260) (Pt C) (Prs 26, 26a) (DB).

——S. 28 (2)—Vesting of Insolvent's property in the Court or the Receiver—Amounts to reasonable restriction as contemplated in Cl. (5) of Art. 19 of the Constitution. See Constitution of India, Art. 19 (5). AIR 1962 All 256 (DB).

——S. 28 (2)—Sub-section places no inherent bar on rights which creditor has at common law but places only a restriction on the rights—Sale in auction of insolvent's property without leave of Court—Property purchased by creditor decree-holder himself — Court has power to validate sale by subsequent order—Receiver reporting to Court to accept sale—Court ordering that sale may be confirmed if purchaser paid a certain sum—Amount paid by auction-purchaser utilised by receiver for payment to creditors of insolvent—Effect of the order of Court was to validate the sale by ratification—Subsequent acceptance of the sale by the receiver by his act amounted to feeding the estoppel—Hence person having obligation to pay the profits of the property cannot defeat the right of the purchaser to such profits by pleading the absence of saleable interest in the judgment-debtor when the sale was made : AIR 1933 Cal 627, Rel. on—(T. ——S. 28—Contract by insolvent — After initiation of insolvency proceeding, but before adjudication is not per se void. See Contract Act (1872), S. 39. AIR 1964 Andh Pra 299 (DB).

——Ss. 28 (2), 78 (2)—'Provable' — Mortgage suit—Mortgagee, if entitle to deduction of period under S. 78 (2). See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 78 (2). AIR 1957 Andh Pra 437.

——S. 28 (2)—Scope—Mandatory character.

It is clear from the terms of S. 28 (2) that as on the making of an order of adjudication the estate vests in the Receiver no suit shall be commenced except with the leave of the Court. The terms of the section are mandatory and there can be no question of any waiver of objection as to the maintainability of the suit on the part of the parties so as to nullify the effect of the section. The suit is not maintainable unless leave of the Insolvency Court is obtained prior to its institution. ——S. 28 (2) — Suit filed before adjudication — Appeal filed after adjudication — Section 28 (2) not contravened—Appeal is continuation of suit — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 96).

An appeal is a continuation of the suit and not a commencement of a new proceeding. Where a suit has been filed before the adjudication of the debtors as insolvents, there can be no question of seeking leave from the insolvency Court under S. 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and of making the Receiver-in-insolvency a party to the suit and consequently to the appeal filed. 64 Cal W N 88 : ILR (1960) 2 Cal 466 : AIR 1960 Cal 469 (473) (Pt B) (Pr 19) (DB).

——S. 28 (2) — "Debt" — Meaning of.

An execution of a decree for specific performance compelling the judgment-debtor and a person claiming as his representative to execute a mortgage in favour of the decree-holder is not a legal proceeding in respect of a debt within the meaning of S. 28 (2) and previous leave of the Court is not necessary. ——S. 28 (2) & S. 58 — Order of adjudication passed — Decree obtained by secure creditor against insolvent before appointment of receiver — Insolvency Court not impleaded — Validity of decree.

A decree obtained by a secured creditor against an adjudged insolvent without impleading insolvency Court as a defendant after an order of adjudication has been passed under S. 27 but before a receiver is appointed to take charge of the insolvent's estate, is ineffective and does not bind the receiver. AIR 1927 P C 108 : 54 Cal 595 (P C). Rel. on. The mere fact that the creditor had obtained permission of the insovency Court to file the suit is not sufficient to validate the decree. ILR (1952) Nag 662 : AIR 1953 Nag 268 (269, 270) (Prs 15, 16) (DB).

——Ss. 28 (7), 30 and 54 — Order of adjudication — Transfer held to be act of insolvency — Finding, if can be challenged in annulment proceedings.

An order of adjudication is not conclusive as to the legal character of a transfer which it has held to be an act of insolvency. The transferee who was not a party to the adjudication proceedings can, therefore, challenge that finding in the annulment proceedings. 1950 Ker L T 573 : 1950 T C L R 707 : AIR 1951 Tra-Co 55 (60) (Pt A) (Pr 13) (DB).

3. Property.

——S. 28 — Right to claim damages is not property — Plaintiff dying during pendency of claim for the damages — Receiver in insolvency not entitled to be substituted in his place — 28 N L R 340 and AIR 1935 Nag 135, Foll. 1963 M P L J (Notes) 190.

——S. 28 — 'Property' — Right to receive compensation under statute relating to displaced persons — If vests in Official Receiver.

Under the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act, a displaced person has to be paid the compensation for his verified claim, out of the compensation pool. Once the amount of compensation is determined, only the manner how that has to be paid is left to the discretion of the authority concerned. The department cannot withhold it. Hence the right to receive such compensation is property just as the creditor's right to recover a debt is property. AIR 1957 S C 599 : 1957 S C J 574, Distinguished. Where, after the compensation is determined, the displaced person is adjudicated insolvent, the right to receive compensation will, by operation of law (namely, S. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act), vest in the Official Receiver. Section 15 of the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act will not bar such vesting. (1960) 62 Punj L R 348 : AIR 1960 Punj 474 (475) (Prs 3, 4).

——S. 28 (2)—Property 'vesting' in Court or receiver — Meaning of.

Vesting of a property in the Court or the receiver not only gives the Court or the receiver the right to take possession of the property and deal with it in a certain manner but amounts to a legal transfer of the right, title and interest of the insolvent in the Court or the receiver as the case may be and as a result of the vesting, the property for the purposes of the Insolvency Court becomes the property of the Court or the receiver and ceases to be the property of the insolvent. After the order of adjudication either the Court or the receiver as the case may be, becomes owner and the insolvent is divested of his rights with respect to the property under adjudication. ——Ss. 28 (2), (7), 51 (3), 52 — Effect of—Purchase of insolvent's property at execution sale after admission of insolvency petition but before order of adjudication — Title of purchaser.

Considering the provisions of sub-ss. (2) and (7) of S. 28 along with the provisions of Ss. 51 and 52, the title of the receiver to the property of the insolvent would relate back from the date of adjudication to the date of the petition and the auction-purchaser at the sale held in execution of the decree against the insolvent would only get a title defeasible by the receiver unless he was a purchaser in good faith. The provisions of sub-s. (3) of S. 51 would apply whether notice of the insolvency proceedings is given to the executing Court or not because no reference to notice of the insolvency proceedings to the executing Court is at all made in sub s. (3) of S. 51. The matters dealt with by these provisions are quite different from those dealt with by S. 52. These provisions can be availed of only where sale has been held whether before or after adjudication while the provisions of S. 52 are available only where notice of the admission of the insolvency petition is given to the executing Court and while it is still in possession of the property of the insolvent, that is, where sale has not been held at all. The nature of the title that he will get will depend on whether he fulfils the condition laid down in sub-s. (3) of S. 51 or does not fulfil it. Knowledge of insolvency proceedings by the purchaser is sufficient to disprove his contention that he was a bona fide purchaser. 60 Bom L R 1017 : 1958 Nag L J 367 : ILR (1959) Bom 249 : AIR 1959 Bom 10 (12, 13) (Pt B) (Prs 16, 17, 18).

——Ss. 28 (2) and 47—Effect of S. 28 (2).

The effect of S. 28 (2) is that so far as properties are concerned the insolvent completely goes out of the picture ; his ownership in the properties at least temporarily ceases and becomes fully vested in the Court or the Official Receiver. In other words the Court or the Official Receiver stands in the shoes of the insolvent and he has all the rights, privileges and commitments which the insolvent may have. ——S. 28 — Purchaser in insolvency — If represents interest of insolvent.

The purchaser in insolvency represents the interest of the insolvent, because it is the right and title of the insolvent which are vested in the Insolvency Court or the receiver. When the sale takes place it is of the property, right, title and interest of the insolvent, and the purchaser obtains it subject to any advantage or disadvantage which the insolvent himself enjoyed. ——S. 28 —Effect of vesting.

On the making of an order of adjudication the whole of the property of the insolvent which is not exempted under S. 28 (5) vests in the receiver and becomes divisible amongst his creditors. The effect of the vesting is that the ownership of the property is transferred by operation of law to the receiver who becomes its legal owner. The insolvent loses all right, title or interest in the property on the passing of the vesting order. Though the insolvent is entitled to surplus of the sale proceeds of the property that may remain after all the creditors are paid off, it is not a legal right, but it is a mere hope or expectation. 37 Cal 418 : 20 Mad L J 432 (P C); A I R 1951 Nag 281, Rel. on. ——Ss. 28 (2), 35 and 37 — Alienation during pendency of insolvency—If validated by order of annulment—Application by insolvent to Debt Conciliation Board—Etfect of—C. P. Debt Conciliation Act, S. 21.

It follows from S. 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act that an order of adjudication divests the insolvent of all right, title and interest to and in his property and this continues during the whole period of the insolvency. It is as if the law had effected a transfer of title from the insolvent to the receiver. Even if the insolvent applies to the Debt Conciliation Board for settlement of his debts S. 21 of the C. P. Debt Conciliation Act, cannot do more than "suspend" the insolvency proceedings. It cannot abrogate them, nor can it restore the status quo. Therefore, once the insolvent is divested of his property by the insolvency proceedings S. 21 does not have the effect of re-vesting it in him ; all it does is to "suspend" the possibility of re-vestment. It follows from this that the insolvent has no authority or power to alienate his property after his adjudication and before its annulment by order of the Insolvency Court.

It is true that the property reverts to the insolvent under S. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act after the annulment of his adjudication, but that does not wipe out all the effects of the insolvency. The insolvent gets his original title back and it is possible that one can place him as far as may be in the same position as he was on the date of the adjudication, but that does not mean that acts done by the insolvent while under an incompetency can be validated or can be regarded as if there had never been a disability. An order of annulment, therefore, does not have the effect of validating an alienation made by the insolvent during the pendency of the insolvency. 6. Vesting of property situated in foreign territory.

——S. 28 (1) — Debtor adjudicated insolvent—Vesting of property situated in foreign State.

Legislature in one State cannot legislate in respect of land situate in a foreign State. Even if the land in a foreign State (e. g. Baroda State before its merger) be regarded as vested on adjudication (by a former British Indian Court) in the Receiver in Insolvency in an ideal sense, unless the law of the foreign State recognises the vesting as a transfer of the property to the Receiver, the vesting cannot operate to confer title upon the Receiver in Insolvency and the property situate in the foreign State will continue to be liable for satisfaction of the claims against the debtor according to the law of that State and unaffected by the insolvency.

Section 28 (1) imposes a purely personal obligation upon the insolvent which may be enforced by process of the Insolvency Court to compel compliance of all acts necessary for completing the title of the Receiver to property situate in a foreign territory.

But the personal obligation cannot affect the jurisdiction of the Courts in the foreign State to deal with property situate in that State ; nor can it compel the creditors, who are not amenable to the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court which has adjudicated the debtor an insolvent, to allow other creditors to participate in the satisfaction obtained by them by taking proceedings in a foreign State. By the rules of private international law immoveable property can only be transferred in accordance with what is called 'lex rei sitae' : 2 Moo Ind App 353 (PC) and AIR 1926 Cal 898, Rel. on ; A I R 1926 Bom 271, Disting. 56 Bom L R 1028 : ILR (1955) Bom 236 : AIR 1955 Bom 170 (173) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

10. "Commence any suit or other legal proceeding."

——S. 28 (2) — Suit or legal proceeding —Meaning of — Section not applicable to personal action.

The words 'suit or other legal proceeding' in S. 28 (2) mean suit or other legal proceeding against the property of the insolvent, which vests in the Receiver and the remedy against which is controlled by that sub-section. Section 28 (2) has no application in respect of any suit or appeal which is merely a personal action against the insolvent, for example, a suit for bare claim of money against the insolvent. This view finds additional support from the provisions of S. 59 (d) under which the receiver's right to defend has been limited only to suits or other legal proceeding relating to the property of the insolvent : 18 Cal 43 ; 12 Mad L J 282 ; AIR 1939 Mad 572 ; (1939) 1 M L J 889 and AIR 1932 All 382, Rel. on ; AIR 1931 Pat 357, Dissented from. 64 Cal W N 88 : ILR (1960) 2 466 : AIR 1960 Cal 469 (473, 474, 475) (Pt C) (Prs 21, 29, 30 34) (DB).

——S. 28—Person declared insolvent—Locus standi to continue appeal — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 96).

When a person is declared insolvent, he becomes civilly dead and on such death, all his rights and liabilities devolve on the Receiver. It being so, the necessary corollary of this is that he has no locus standi to maintain the appeal. 1960 Jab L J 256 (2) : 1960 M P L J 418.

——Ss. 28, 59 — Scope — Insolvent continuing legal proceedings against his debtors — Decree passed in favour of undischarged insolvent without Official Receiver being brought on record—Validity—C. P. Code (1908), O. 22, R. 8).

The prohibition contained in sub-s. (2) of S. 28 is only in respect of independent legal proceedings being taken by the ordinary creditors of the insolvent against his property after it has become vested in the Court or in the Official Receiver as a result of the order of adjudication. There is no provision barring the insolvent from commencing or continuing any legal proceeding against his debtors. On the other hand sub-s. (4) of S. 28 clearly indicates that no such prohibition is contemplated by the Legislature. The acquisition of property by the insolvent after the death of the adjudication order could very well be by instituting or continuing the necessary legal proceedings in that direction. His liberty to commence or continue such legal proceedings cannot cause any prejudice to the insolvency proceedings against him, because any property acquired by him as a result of the proceedings commenced or continued by him will forthwith vest in the Insolvency Court or the Official Receiver.

It is also clear from the provisions of R. 8 of O. 22, Civil P. C. that unless the suit by the insolvent plaintiff is caused to be dismissed in the manner prescribed by the rule, it will not abate and come to an end; in other words, the suit will proceed on the basis that the insolvent plaintiff is competent to continue the suit. If it ends in a decree in his favour, it will be a valid decree capable of enforcement and cannot be ignored as a void decree. The provisions of Ss. 28 and 59 of the Provincial Insolvency Act also lead to the same inference. Even though the insolvent plaintiff may be the decree-holder, the property covered by the decree will vest in the Official Receiver by virtue of the provisions contained in sub-s. (4) of S. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act unless such property happens to fall under the category exempted by sub-s. (5) of the same section. A holder of a joint decree transferred the decree after one of the judgment-debtors was adjudicated insolvent. The transferee filed an execution petition without obtaining the permission of the Official Receiver or Insolvency Court and proceeded to levy attachment and sale of property which had vested in the Official Receiver. However, the sale was stopped on an application of the judgment-debtor that he could not be proceeded against as the property had vested in the Official Receiver. The execution petition which was posted for hearing later was dismissed as no batta was paid. After annulment of adjudication and more than 3 years from date of decree the transferee filed a second petition.

Held, that the second petition was barred by time as it was not in continuation or in revival of the first one. The first execution petition without the leave of the insolvency Court was not in accordance with law. The question therefore that the second petition was in continuation or in revival of the previous one did not arise : ILR 12 All 64, Rel. on. Further, the first petition was dismissed for non-payment of batta. It was a final order and hence there could be no question of treating the second one as being in continuation or in revival of the first petition. (1964) 2 Andh L T 204.

12. Leave of Court—When not necessary.

——Ss. 28 (2), 37, 78 (2) — Execution petition dismissed—Adjudication of one of judgment-debtors—Subsequent unconditional annulment of adjudication—No leave of Insolvency Court is required for filing subsequent execution petition — Joint decree against several judgment-debtors—Execution against one — Effect of saving limitation against all—Limitation Act (1908), Art. 182 (5).

The decree was passed on 31st August 1951 and it became final as no appeal had been preferred. On 2nd May 1952 the decree-holder put his decree into execution but that petition was dismissed on 18th June 1952, as the batta was not paid. This was followed by another E. P. on 25th June 1952 which again was dismissed on 29th August 1952 as no property liable to be attached could be found. On 29th August 1952 the 1st defendant on the petition of the decree-holder had been adjudged insolvent. Without taking out permission of the Insolvency Court for taking execution proceedings against the insolvent, the decree-holder filed his E. P. on 18th November 1954. Of course the petition was against all the judgment-debtors including the insolvent. This petition was, however, dismissed on 20th April 1955 on the ground that no batta was paid. The next petition was filed on 18th November 1957 again without the leave of the Insolvency Court and it met the same fate on 9th December 1957 on the same ground that batta was not paid. Sometime thereafter on 11th August 1958 the adjudication of insolvency was annulled unconditionally. Thereafter the E. P. was brought on 1st December 1958. This time statute of limitation was set up against the tenability of E. P. The Subordinate Judge having regard to the provisions of S. 78 (2) held that the E. P. was barred by limitation.

Held, that the effect of annulling the adjudication unconditionally was that the insolvent was automatically reverted to his original position. The execution petition, therefore, filed without the leave of the Court would be taken as valid applications and it would constitute a step-in-aid of the execution, in view of Ss. 37 and 43. (1962) 2 Andh W R 266, Foll. Even though the provisions of S. 78 (2) did not avail the decree-holder, it was open to him to take advantage of the effect of S. 37 and S. 43 of the Act. When there were more than one defendant and the decree had been passed against them jointly, the E. P. against any one of them would take effect and save limitation against all of them. This position was in no way affected by S. 78 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, which only conferred some concession on the creditors who might satisfy the requisite conditions. (1962) 2 Andh W R 266, Foll. Plea taken under Art. 182 (5) by the decree-holder must also prevail. (1965) 1 Andh L T 73 : AIR 1966 Andh Pra 25 (25, 26) (Prs 2, 4, 5).

——S. 28 (2) — Applicability — Suit by creditor against sons for pre-partition debt — Leave of Court —Necessity.

Creditors who sue the divided sons for realisation of the pre-partition debts of the father who was adjudged insolvent cannot be said to be seeking a remedy against the property of the insolvency in respect of the debt within the meaning of S. 28 (2) of the Act. Therefore leave of the Insolvency Court is not necessary for a creditor's suit against the divided sons of the insolvent debtor. (1957) 1 Andh W R 216 : AIR 1957 Andh Pra 692 (700) (Pt F) (Pr 19) (DB).

There is no objection in law against the creditor filing a suit against the sons in regard to a debt incurred by the father as manager of the joint family for family purposes, even though subsequently they become divided and the father becomes an insolvent.

Section 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act does not prohibit a creditor from filing a suit against a divided son against whom and against whose assets the insolvency Court has no control. Even if the father is alive, it is not necessary that such creditor should have taken necessary steps to enforce the relief against the father in proceedings in insolvency. 13. Effect of not obtaining leave.

——S. 28 (2) (7) — Scope—Leave of insolvency Court — Absence of — Effect — Objection as to want of, in collateral proceedings.

Leave of the Insolvency Court under S. 28 (2) of the Act is essential to the institution of a suit or other legal proceeding of the nature described in the sub-section. Want of leave before the institution of the suit or proceeding entails its dismissal and cannot be cured by the grant of leave subsequently. But the fact that the leave of the insolvency Court was not obtained for the institution of a suit by a creditor under S. 28 (2) does not render the decree passed therein a nullity.

Obiter :— There may be same ambiguity in the word 'thereafter' as used in S. 28 (2) but it must be held that the doctrine of relation back in S. 28 (7) applies to the first part of S. 28 (2) and not to the second part and that a suit instituted after the filing of an insolvency petition and before adjudication does not become incompetent or unsustainable by reason of want of leave of the insolvency Court. Section 29 of the Act refers to such a suit and the Court in which it is instituted has to act under the provisions of that section, if and when an order of adjudication is made by the insolvency Court. ——Ss. 28 and 34 — Rights and disabilities of insolvent — (Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (1909), Ss. 17 and 46).

There is nothing in the provisions of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act or the Provincial Insolvency Act which prohibits an insolvent from borrowing or entering into contracts, giving rise to financial liability. All that the insolvency effects is to vest all the properties belonging to the insolvent in the Official Receiver and since S. 28 (7) of the Act governs S. 34, the date of adjudication will have relation back to the date of the presentation. When there is no prohibition under the Insolvency Act from an insolvent borrowing or entering into contracts giving rise to a liability, it necessarily follows that a promissory note debt incurred by him after presentation of his petition but before adjudication is a post-insolvency debt and is not provable in insolvency. Consequently the promissory note debt and the subsequent decree and execution proceedings cannot be said to be absolutely without any effect on the insolvent's estate on the ground that the decree on the foot of that promissory note was obtained without the leave of the insolvency Court and without the leave of the Official Receiver being made a party. ——Ss. 28 and 37 — Object and scope — Annulment — Vesting order — Necessity.

The provision under S. 28 is for purposes of administration of the estate for discharging the debts of the insolvent. If that purpose is accomplished by discharge of all liabilities in full or becomes impossible on account of annulment of adjudication without a vesting order under S. 37, the insolvent gets back the property in his original right. No transfer from the receiver to the insolvent is needed. Nor would there be an interregnum when the insolvent had no right. The term 'revert' instead of 'revest' in the section renders the position clear. 1955 Ker L T 702 : ILR (1955) T C 68 : AIR 1955 Trav-Co 241 (242) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Ss. 28 and 37 — Rights of insolvent during pendency of insolvency — Effect of annulment.

During the subsistence of the receivership or of the order of adjudication, the rights of the insolvent are in a state of suspense or abeyance. They are not extinct. Whatever the insolvent may do and whatever proceedings may be taken against him will no doubt not bind the receiver or the insolvency Court. But by his acts and by the proceedings to which he is a party the insolvent is bound and on the disappearance of the obstacle by the accomplishment of the purpose or its becoming impossible by an unconditional order of annulment the acts and proceedings will bind his property that reverts to him AIR 1951 Mad 63; AIR 1954 Mad 604, Foll. 1955 Ker L T 702 : ILR (1955) T C 68 : AIR 1955 Trav-Co 241 (242) (Pt C) (Pr 5) (DB).

A purchased goods from B and paid for them by a cheque, which was subsequently dishonoured. B instituted a suit for the recovery of the price of goods and applied for attachment of the said goods which were removed to its godown by a Bank which had accommodated A. The goods were attached and sold by B and the money realised by sale was brought to the Court. In the meantime proceedings in insolvency were started against A and a receiver of his property was appointed. The insolvency proceedings, however, were compromised and under the scheme of composition, certain creditors were appointed as trustees. The receiver and the trustees were therefore made parties to the suit by B. It was contended that the suit brought under S. 11 (d) of the Specific Relief Act was not maintainable, that A was not entitled to the moneys realised from the sale of goods, property in which had already passed to the insolvent. The plaintiffs argued in reply that though the suit might not be maintainable, the trustees were not entitled to the moneys realised as the goods were obtained by fraud by the insolvent.

Held, that the insolvent played a fraud on the plaintiff and cheated him by taking delivery of the goods by passing cheques, which he knew full well would not be honoured by the Bank. In these circumstances, even if the plaintiff had no legal right to get back the goods, the trustees in insolvency must be directed to return the goods to the plaintiff, because the equity was all in their favour. Allowing the trustees to retain the moneys for distribution would produce an unjust and dishonest result which the Court in point of moral justice and honest dealing could not allow to perpetuate. 16 Q B D 308; 32 Ch D 597; (1919) 2 K B 735; L R 9 Ch 722; (1907) 1 K B 865, Applied. (1963) 1 Ker L R 443 : 1963 Ker L J 387.

It is an elementary principle of insolvency law that subject to the special provisions enacted by the insolvency statute—Ss. 51 to 54—the official receiver merely steps into the shoes of the insolvent and can claim no higher rights than the insolvent. Where under a contract of lease entered into by the insolvent he was bound to make adjustment towards rent a certain amount received by him at the time of entering into the lease the official receiver as the representative of the insolvent, is equally bound to give effect to the contract. ——Ss. 28 and 28-A—Equitable assignment—Transfer by shareholder of his right to receive moneys in respect of shares of company in liquidation — Shareholder adjudged insolvent -Effect—Official Assignee if entitled to claim moneys in respect of those shares —Right of assignee.

Where future debts are assigned and the assignor becomes an insolvent after the assignment, the Official Assignee's rights may or may not be subject to the assignment. His rights are subject to the assignment if the debts are due at the date of the bankruptcy but are not payable until a future time. The assignee loses his rights upon insolvency if the debt is one that will only become due if certain conditions are fulfilled in future on behalf of the insolvent.

S and R, the two partners of a firm, were the holders of four shares in a company against which an order for winding up had been made in 1948. S who owed two sums of money to the petitioners executed a document in their favour by which S agreed to give due information to the petitioners whenever any money would be payable by the company in respect of his two shares so that the petitioners shall receive the sum or sums which shall be payable in respect of those shares thereby pledged till their respective debts together with interest were discharged. In 1955, S was adjudicated insolvent. The petitioners made a claim against the official liquidator of the company in respect of the dividend declared by him in respect of the two shares of S.

Held, that S had created an equitable assignment of his rights to receive moneys payable in respect of his shares in favour of the petitioners. Since the moneys that were payable on the shares were not payable until future time and no act or effort on the part of the assignor was required or necessary in order that they become payable, the assignor would have been entitled to these moneys by virtue of his being only one of the holders of the share. Therefore, the Official Assignee had no claim on these moneys at all. Hence the official liquidator of the company should be directed to pay to the petitioners the sums of moneys as prayed for. ——S. 28 (2), (4)—Creditor after date of adjudication —Rights.

By reason of the vesting under S. 28 (4) the judgment-debtor becomes completely divested of any interest or title in the property which consists of his salary. By operation of law, the title of the Court or the receiver in insolvency is absolute and the judgment-debtor is no longer the owner of his own salary. In these circumstances, although the Insolvency Court has chosen to realise only a small portion of the salary of the judgment-debtor, it is not open to the decree-holder to attach the remaining portion of the attachable part, though his debt came into existence after the date of the order of adjudication. The vesting which is mentioned in sub-s. (2) of S. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is necessarily a vesting against the whole world and in the second part of that sub-section a limited right is given to creditors whose debts are provable under the Act to pursue their remedy in the ordinary Court with the leave of the Insolvency Court. No such exception has been made in favour of creditors whose debts are not provable before the Insolvency Court. AIR 1925 Oudh 668, Dissented from. Besides other properties of the insolvents, the building in dispute consisting of a residential portion and a shop were attached. The upper portion of the storey was a residential house and even a part of the ground floor was used as residence. It was only a portion of the ground floor which had been used for shops. The insolvents objected to this attachment under S. 28 (5) of Provincial Insolvency Act. The question was whether the building was exempt from attachment under S. 60 (1) (ccc) of Civil P. C. as amended in Punjab.

Held, that there was no room for the contention that the exemption could not be claimed in respect of the suit property on the ground that it was available only for the benefit of the creditors.

Held, further, that the entire building was exempt from attachment. (1963) 65 Punj L R 641.

——S. 28 (5) — Property granted to maintenance holder in lieu of maintenance — Relinquishment in favour of grantor in lieu of payment of maintenance —If vests in Official Receiver.

The property which is granted to a maintenance holder merely in lieu of maintenance with control over the power of disposition thereon, and which property is relinquished in favour of the grantor or his heirs or successors in lieu of payment of maintenance is not subject to attachment and cannot vest in the Official Receiver having regard to the provision in S. 28 (5), Provincial Insolvency Act read with S. 60 (1) (n). Civil P. C. The mere fact that future maintenance accrues by lapse of time, and becomes as it were, maintenance due, would not make it liable for attachment, as what is exempted under the Civil Procedure Code, is property or right. The principle on which exemption is granted in regard to the rights of future maintenance is that a person who is depending on that right for her maintenance should not be deprived of that maintenance. The general policy underlying exemption in S. 60 clearly indicates the anxiety on the part of the Legislature to ensure a certain minimum income or property to the person concerned, so as not to interfere with what is needed for his existence in this world. 21. Relation back—Sub-section (7).

——S. 28—Relation back.

The principle underlying the law of insolvency is that interest ceases to run when adjudication takes place. An order of adjudication relates back to and takes effect from, the date of the presentation of the petition on which it is made. Therefore interest should run up to the date of the presentation of the petition in an insolvency case and upto the date of presentation of winding up petition in the case of an insolvent company. The defendant executed a promissory note on 7-1-53. He presented a petition under S. 10 of the Act on 17-7-1954 and was adjudicated an insolvent on 10-8-1959. A money suit having been instituted against the defendant:

Held, that the suit did not fall within the concept of S. 28 (2). It could not be argued that since S. 28 (2) was a bar to the filing of suits, the suit must be deemed to have been in time as the insolvency petition was presented within three years of the execution of the promissory note. AIR 1935 Mad 817, Disting.; AIR 1938 Mad 19 and AIR 1928 Mad 977 and AIR 1957 Andh Pra 692 and (1963) 2 Andh W R 249, Foll. Moreover the expression "on the making of the order of adjudication" in S. 28 (7) cannot be interpreted to mean "on the date of the presentation of the petition." Section 78 (2) also contemplates exclusion of the time between the date of the order of adjudication and the date of the order of annulment. This does not permit the exclusion of the period between the date of the presentation and the date of adjudication. AIR 1954 Bom 436, Rel. on. Further S. 29 did not help the defendant as it envisages stay of proceedings only on proof of an order of adjudication being made and a suit cannot be stayed when the order of adjudication has not been made. On the other hand, this section supports the view that S. 28 (2) comes into operation only when an order of adjudication is made and not otherwise. It does govern suits or proceedings instituted before the order of adjudication. (1965) 2 Andh W R 26 : AIR 1965 Andh Pra 260 (261, 262) (Prs 5, 9, 15, 16)) (DB).

—Ss. 28 (7), 33 (1), 34 and 61 (3) — Sum due from Official Receiver in respect of rent—If expenses of administration.

The words 'expenses of administration' have not been defined anywhere in the Provincial Insolvency Act but the question of expenses of administration only arises when the property vests in the Official Receiver and is bound up for purposes of paying the insolvent's creditors. The debt to be provable must accrue before adjudication but if it accrues after adjudication and before discharge, it is provable only if the obligation giving rise to the debt was incurred before adjudication. Even though on the theory of relation back the order of adjudication may take effect from the date of the presentation of petition still the question arises whether the expenses incurred by the Interim Receiver can be treated as expenses of administration under the Insolvency Act. Such expenses having been covered by O. 40, R. 1, C. P. Code are not meant to be covered by S. 61 (3) of the Insolvency Act, for the authorisation to incur is not conferred on the Official Receiver under the Bankruptcy Act. The property had not vested in the Receiver though he had taken possession of the property. The Receiver was in possession of the property, but that alone cannot confer any priority. His powers were limited and were covered under O. 40, R. 1, C. P. Code, and they would be governed by the said provision. (1959) 2 Andh W R 313 : ILR (1959) Andh Pra 1162 : A I R 1960 Andh Pra 53 (53, 54) (Prs 2, 4, 6, 7) (DB).

In considering the question of the exclusion of time under S. 78 (2) it would not be reasonable to give effect to the legal fiction which has been introduced by S. 28 (7) in dealing with the effect of the order of adjudication. An ex parte decree was passed on 30th June, 1952 against A for specific performance of an oral agreement to execute a mortgage deed in favour of B. On 14th July, 1952, C, another creditor of A filed an insolvency petition and A was adjudged insolvent on 16th December, 1952. Meanwhile on 22nd October, 1952, B, in execution of his decree got the mortgage executed by the Court, as A defaulted to comply with the terms of the decree. ● ——Ss. 28 (2), 28 (7) and 37 —'Official Receiver not made party to mortgage suit — Effect—Title to property on annulment — Execution sale—If can be challenged by judgment-debtor or his representatives.

Where during the pendency of a suit on mortgage the mortgagor is adjudicated but the decree is passed without making the Official Assignee a party to the suit and the decree-holder purchases the property in execution of the decree, the decree and the proceedings are not null and void in the sense that they have no legal effect at all. The proceedings are only ineffective to bind the equity of redemption which is vested in the receiver.

Notwithstanding his insolvency, the mortgagor under the law as it now exists is a necessary and proper party to a suit on mortgage as under S. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act, he is a person entitled to redeem the property and under O. 34, Rule 1, C. The effect of annulment is to vest the property retrospectively in the insolvent, in other words the consequence of annulling an order of adjudication is to wipe out altogether the insolvency and its effect except to the limited extent reserved under the section. The Legislature introduced the fiction of vesting the title retrospectively in the insolvent. In view of this, the alienations made of property, movable or immovable, by the insolvent after adjudication or the decree and execution proceedings suffered by him during such insolvency, notwithstanding the property is taken away and transferred from him are all restored and validated with effect from the date on which the insolvency petition was filed. Per Subba Rao, J. — Insolvency does not operate as civil death. The insolvent's property vests in the Official Receiver for the purpose of administering the estate and for meeting the claims of the creditors. The Act does not affect the capacity of the insolvent to enter into contracts and otherwise deal with the property. He is in the position of a person who has alienated all his property or otherwise lost it. But his position cannot be equal to that of a minor or a lunatic. He can be sued with or without the leave of the Court, as the case may be, and in that suit he can properly represent himself. But any decree that might be obtained against him would not bind the Official Receiver in whom his entire properties vest. If the properties vested in the Official Receiver are sold as if they were the properties of the insolvent, the sale would be valid and the judgment-debtor cannot question the validity of the sale. ● ——S. 28-A, Proviso I (as amended in 1948) — 'Final decision' — Meaning of — Preliminary decree for partition is 'final decision' — Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 2 (2), 97, O. 20, R. 18.

A decision is said to be final when, so far as the Court rendering it is concerned it is unalterable except by resort to such provisions of the Civil P. C., as permit its reversal, modification or amendment. Similarly, a final decision would mean a decision which would operate as res judicata between the parties if it is not sought to be modified or reversed by preferring an appeal or a revision or a review application as is permitted by the Code. A preliminary decree passed whether it is in a mortgage suit or a partition suit, must be regarded as conclusive. No doubt in suits which contemplate the making of two decrees—a preliminary decree and a final decree—the decree which would be executable would be the final decree. Section 97, Civil P. C. clearly indicates that as to the matters covered by it, a preliminary decree is regarded as embodying the final decision of the Court passing that decree.

After a father of a joint Hindu family became insolvent, the joint family properties consisting of his and his two sons' shares were sold by the Official Receiver. The transferee sold the entire property to the respondent. The sons thereafter filed a suit for partition of the joint family property to which suit they made the respondent a party. A preliminary decree for partition was passed in favour of sons. The decree was eventually affirmed by the High Court in 1946. In the meanwhile there was an application by the sons for a final decree, which was granted ex parte. That decree was set aside at the instance of the respondent in 1950. By that time the new S. 28-A had come into force. On the question in appeal by the sons by Special Leave before the Supreme Court, whether the first proviso to S. 28-A would save the preliminary decree from being re-opened :

Held, that in this case the sale made by the Official Receiver during the insolvency of the appellants' father was the subject of a final decision by a competent Court inasmuch as the Court decided that the sale was of no avail to the purchaser as the Official Receiver had no power to that sale. ——S. 28-A — Hindu father becoming insolvent — Power to alienate interest of sons — If passes to official receiver.

The power of the father to alienate the interests of his sons for the satisfaction of his antecedent debts passes to the receiver as 'property' within the meaning of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Once it has so passed by virtue of S. 28-A, S. 28 (2) of the Act debars any creditor from having any remedy over the property of the insolvent which property includes the property defined under S. 28-A. ——S. 28-A—Scope — Exercise by Official Receiver of father's power to sell sons' share—Interest of sons —When passes—Question of fact.

The question whether in a particular case the Official Receiver has exercised the power of father to sell sons' share and conveyed the entire interest in the property including the sons' share must be decided on the facts of that case. It is true that the mere fact that the order of adjudication vests in the Official Receiver not only the share of the father but also the power of disposition possessed by the father over the sons's shares would not by itself convey to the purchaser the shares of the sons unless there is indication in the deed of sale or in the sale proceedings which preceded the sale that the Official Receiver purported to exercise that power of sale and did in fact sell the sons' shares also. It is sufficient if the Official Receiver in fact exercises the right of the father to sell the share of the sons and convey the entire interest in the property to the purchaser. The Official Receiver need not purport 'to exercise the right to sell the right of the father to sell the son's share as well, whatever this might mean.' It is sufficient if he sells the absolute interest in the property. There is no doubt a difference between the existence of a power and its actual exercise and the mere existence of power may not be sufficient to show that in any particular case that it was exercised. At the same time the deed of sale executed by the Official Receiver need not specifically recite that he was exercising the power of sale vested in him under Ss. 28 and 28-A of the Act. It will be sufficient if he purports to convey the entire interest in the property and not merely the share of the insolvent father. 1956 Andh W R 586 : AIR 1957 Andh Pra 609 (611) (Pt C) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Ss. 28-A, 28 (2)—Joint family property—Right of insolvent to dispose of—Vesting of right in Receiver.

Although on first impression, in view of the definition of the word 'property' it appears that the receiver in insolvency is invested with not only the property belonging to the insolvent but also property over which the insolvent had a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, it has been held that the capacity of an insolvent to dispose of joint family property for his own benefit, having regard to the fact that what vests in the receiver is property which is to become divisible among the creditors, is not property within the meaning of S. 28 (2). In view of such judicial pronouncements the legislature amended the Act by adding S. 28-A and since that amendment the property of the insolvent comprises and always has been deemed to comprise also the capacity to exercise and to take proceedings for exercising all such powers in relation to property as might have been exercised by the insolvent for his own benefit. A Hindu father has the power or capacity to dispose of for his own benefit the interest of his sons in joint family property and therefore by the operation of S. 28-A such capacity may be exercised by the receiver. But when the manager of a joint Hindu family, who is not the father, exercises his power of disposing of property for the benefit of the joint family for purposes of legal necessity, he does not exercise the power for his own benefit. Therefore such a capacity is not comprised in the expression 'property' in S. 28-A and hence it does not vest in the receiver'. 59 Bom L R 1243 : ILR (1959) Bom 13 : A I R 1959 Bom 229 (230, 231, 232) (Prs 5, 8, 9, 10, 11) (DB).

——S. 28-A (inserted by 25 of 1948) — Retrospective operation — Section is retrospective and applies to all transfers which may have been effected by the receiver on an adjudication of the father or the managing member of a joint Mitakshara Hindu family under the Act. The fact that the decree of the trial Court had been passed already and the amendment was made during the pendency of an appeal does not affect the applicability of S. 28A. A I R 1951 Cal 210 (211) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 28-A—Father's power to dispose of son's property — Vesting in official receiver—Attachment by creditor before insolvency — Effect — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 64).

The result of the enactment of S. 28-A, which is expressly made retrospective, is that the powers of a father under the Mitakshara Law, to alienate the joint family property including the interest of his sons in the same for discharge of an antecedent debt not contracted for illegal or immoral purposes vests in the Receiver on the adjudication of the father as an insolvent, as 'property' within the meaning of the Insolvency Act: AIR 1953 S C 370, Rel. on.

That as regards the attachment before insolvency it was not correct to read S. 64, Civil P. C. as putting an end to the power of sale because as between the transferor and the transferee the alienation would undoubtedly be operative and if the attaching creditor was paid off or for any reason the attachment ceased to subsist the alienee's right would be unassailable. So long as there was no dispute raised by the attaching creditor regarding the sale, neither the son nor anybody else would have a right to challenge the sales by the Official Receiver on the ground of an attachment by another creditor: A I R 1939 Mad 702, Rel. on. I L R (1958) Ker 1039: 1958 Ker L T 995 : 1959 Ker LJ 569: AIR 1959 Ker 141 (144, 146) (Prs 20, 21, 36, 37, 40) (DB).

——S. 28-A — Insolvency of Hindu father — Sale by Official Receiver — Extent of right acquired by auction purchaser — Son's shares — If pass — (T. C. Insolvency Act (2 of 1956), S. 29).

The mere fact that the order of adjudication vested in the Official Receiver not only the share of the insolvent father but also his power of disposition of the son's share would not by itself convey to the auction-purchaser the share of the son, unless there is indication in the document or in the sale proceedings that the Official Receiver in fact purported to exercise that power of sale and did in fact sell the son's share as well. Where the sale-deed executed in favour of the auction-purchaser shows that what was conveyed by the sale was the interest notified to be sold and it is seen from the notice that what was notified to be sold was the right, title and interest of the insolvent in the properties described in the schedule and there is no indication in the notice or the sale-deed that the insolvent's son's share was intended to be or was sold by the receiver it is not possible to hold that the insolvent's son's share was also conveyed. The interest obtained by the purchaser must be limited to the insolvent's share in the property sold. ——S. 28-A—Insolvency of Hindu father — Power of Official Receiver to sell son's interest.

On adjudication of the father as an insolvent not only the share of the father but also the power of the father to dispose of the share of the son would vest in the Official Receiver under S. 28. But the mere fact that the order of the adjudication vested in the Official Receiver not only the share of the father but also the power of disposition possessed by the father for the son's share would not by itself convey to the auction purchaser the share of the son unless there is indication in the document or in the sale proceedings that the Official Receiver in fact purported to exercise that power of sale and did in fact sell the son's share as well. Where in the sale list it is said in the preamble that what is purported to be sold is the entire right possessed by the insolvent in the immoveable properties described in the schedule, so also if in the sale deed, it is definitely stated that what is being conveyed is the property belonging to the insolvent under Muli mula geni and janmi right of which the creditor became the auction purchaser the sale will be confined to the right of the insolvent in the property and will not extend to the share of the son. Further, the power of sale of the father is dependent upon the existence of coparcenary and if that coparcenary is terminated by division in status, the power ceases to exist. When prior to the date of sale the son issued a notice to the father demanding partition of the property, this would bring about division in status and prevent the Official Receiver from exercising the power of sale. ——S. 28-A—Powers under S. 28-A, whether vest in receiver.

The power of the manager or the father, as the case may be, under S. 28-A can vest in the Official Receiver. As the whole of the property of the insolvent can vest in the Court or in the receiver at the commencement of the insolvency, along with the entire property his powers mentioned in S. 28-A also vest in the receiver. Pending the insolvency the insolvent might get some properties or powers by devolution or otherwise. Such properties or powers also would vest in the receiver. 64 Mad L W 906 : 1951-2 Mad L J 438 : AIR 1952 Mad 27 (31) (Pt C) (Pr 9) (DB).

——S. 28-A, Proviso — "Final decision by a competent Court."

"Final decision by a competent Court" can only mean the decision of the Court which ultimately disposes of the suit. If an appeal has been filed against the judgment of the subordinate Judge, it is impossible to treat his judgment as final within the meaning of the proviso. 64 Mad L W 906 : 1951-2 Mad L J 438 : AIR 1952 Mad 27 (32) (Pt D) (Pr 10) (DB).

——S. 28-A — Scope and effect — Decree against Hindu insolvent father and his son — Executability against son.

The insolvency of the father of a joint Hindu family under the law as it now stands, after the introduction of S. 28-A of the Provincial Insolvency Act in April, 1948, which has retrospective effect, vests not only the share of the father but also the power of the father to dispose of the properties of the sons in the Official Receiver. But where actually the Official Receiver has sold only the father's interest in the property and has not exercised the power of the father by bringing to sale the share of the son also, S. 28 does not prevent the decree-holder from proceeding in execution of the decree against the son's share notwithstanding the vesting of the power to dispose of the property in the Official Receiver. That vesting does not take away the power of the son to sell the property in his own right and much less prevent the execution creditor from proceeding with the sale of the son's share. As under the law there is no bar preventing the decree-holder from executing the decree against the son, there will be nothing to prevent running of limitation for execution of the decree against the son. It is wrong to think that S. 28-A by recognising retrospectively the power of the Official Receiver in the case of insolvency of the father to dispose of the son's share in the right of the father saves the bar of limitation against the son. 1951 Mad W N 557 : (1951) 2 M L J 299 : AIR 1951 Mad 1010 (1010, 1011) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 3, 4).

——S. 28-A — Hindu joint family — Adjudication of father—Creditor proceeding against sons — Official Receiver, whether necessary party.

When a father of a Hindu joint family is adjudicated insolvent, a creditor of the family can proceed against the shares of the sons so long as they have not been disposed of by the Official Receiver in the exercise of the right of the father himself to sell the shares of the sons under certain circumstances. In such a case the sons cannot compel the creditor who has obtained a decree to implead the Official Receiver in the execution proceedings. ——S. 28-A—Insolvency of Hindu father.

When the insolvent is a Hindu father the property that would vest in the receiver would consist of the share of the father in the joint family property and the right, capacity or power of the father to sell the shares of the sons to pay antecedent debts which are not illegal or immoral in character. The effect of the vesting would be to take out or abstract from the joint family the properties that so vest in the official receiver and the funds realised by him by the sale of the properties must also be deemed to have been abstracted or taken out from the joint family. Those funds would be at the disposal of the official receiver for payment to the creditors of the insolvent father, subject always, of course, to the reverter of any surplus. The creditors of the sons would be entitled to proceed only against the surplus, if any. ('51) 1951 M W N 76 : 1951-1 M L J 145 : AIR 1951 Mad 656 (2) (657) (Prs 2, 4).

——S. 28-A—"For his own benefit" — Meaning of— Presidency — Towns Insolvency Act (1909), S. 52 (2) (b).

The words "for his own benefit" can have reference only to a father manager of Hindu joint family and not to a manager other than father as the power of the latter is exercisable for the benefit of the family and not for his own. Hence S. 28-A has no application to the insolvency of a manager other than father of a Hindu joint family. 1950 Mad W N 471 : (1950) 2 Mad L J 173 : 63 Mad L W 766 : ILR (1951) Mad 449 : AIR 1950 Mad 770 (771) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

In order to exercise discretionary power under S. 29, it is incumbent upon the Court to consider whether there are special circumstances to justify the continuance of the suit. Where the insolvent is the only defendant and the claim relates to a debt there is greater reason than not to stay the suit since the debt is provable in the insolvency. But where besides him another person is also sued and the claim is laid in the alternative, the continuance of the suit is more desirable than its stay because if the suit is totally stayed the plaintiff's chance to obtain a decree against a defendant who is not adjudicated an insolvent is also withheld. The Court may permit the continuance of the suit subject to the condition that the insolvent or his estate would not be liable for any further costs incurred by the plaintiff. Where the trial Court stayed the suit merely by observing that the stay was necessary for avoiding further complications, and did not even mention what were the likely further complications, the order involved material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. 1960 M P L J 1368 : 1960 Jab L J 1186 : AIR 1961 Madh·Pra 199 (200) (Prs 2, 3).

——S. 29—Stay under—When once there is an order of the Court which absolutely on its terms prohibits a party from executing the decree, the mere fact that the Court has power to modify such an order does not make it any the less an order staying the execution of a decree. Hence, it cannot be held that as it was open to the decree-holder to have applied to have the order of stay under S. 29, modified or vacated it is not such an order of absolute stay as is contemplated by S. 15. See Limitation Act (1908), S. 15. AIR 1955 Mad 547.

——Ss. 30, 28 (7) and 54 — Order of adjudication — Transfer held to be act of insolvency — Finding, if can be challenged in annulment proceedings.

An order of adjudication is not conclusive as to the legal character of a transfer which it has held to be an act of insolvency. The transferee who was not a party to the adjudication proceedings can, therefore, challenge that finding in the annulment proceedings. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 28 (7). AIR 1951 Trav.Co 55 (DB).

——S. 31—Section applies to State debts.

A protection order under S. 31, Provincial Insolvency Act, may apply either to all the insolvents' debts or to some of them. It draws no distinction between classes of debts, that is debts due to the State or to Corporation or Municipalities or private persons. Section 31 does not impose any obligation whatsoever on the State. Certain creditors are by law given a right in certain circumstances to have an unfortunate debtor imprisoned for failure to pay his debt. It is a form of execution recognised by the Code of Civil Procedure. The State can take advantage of these provisions and the fact that a protection order might be made is not an obligation imposed on the State. All that the section provides is that the rights of creditors to imprison a debtor may be curtailed if the debtor has been adjudicated insolvent. That being so, S. 31 must be held to apply to State debts. AIR 1952 Cal 251 (252) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6) (DB).

——S. 31 — Discretion of Court—Wrong exercise of discretion resulting in injustice to insolvent — High Court should interfere under Art. 227, Constitution of India—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115—Constitution of India, Art. 227.

A protection order under S. 31, Provincial Insolvency Act should not ordinarily be refused to an adjudged insolvent who has been stripped of all his property which has by law vested in the official Receiver whose duty is to discharge the insolvent's debt to the best of his ability, unless there is proof that the debtor has concealed some of his assets or there is some special reason for refusing him the protection. The mere fact that the insolvent after his discharge would still be liable for the State debt in respect of the income tax is no reason for refusing him the protection from arrest.

Where the Court wrongly refuses to pass a protection order in favour of the insolvent in the exercise of its discretion under S. 31, Provincial Insolvency Act, it would be difficult for the High Court to exercise its powers of revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. unless it can be said that the jurisdiction has not been exercised judicially. But the High Court can and should interfere under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India when the refusal to pass the order would result in real injustice to the insolvent. Interference under Art. 227 should only be resorted to in rare cases where real injustice would be done if the Court could not interfere under S. 115, Civil P. C. AIR 1952 Cal 251 (252) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 8, 9) (DB).

——Ss. 33, 80, 49 — Proceedings under S. 33—Presumption under S. 118 (a), Negotiable Instruments Act does not arise — Nature of proceedings under S. 33—Jurisdiction and duties of Insolvency Court — Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), S. 118.

No statutory presumption of consideration under S. 118 (a), Negotiable Instruments Act arises in favour of creditors in a proceeding under S. 33, Provincial Insolvency Act for settlement of schedule of creditors and the Receiver exercising power under S. 80 is not bound to admit the debts in the schedule if the insolvent or the other creditors failed to displace that presumption. A I R 1958 All 54, Reversed. A proceeding under S. 33 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is not a proceeding between the insolvent and the proving creditor. The proceeding is between the creditors represented by the Official Receiver and the insolvent. When a creditor, seeking to prove a debt relying upon a negotiable instument, or other evidence makes a claim for inclusion of the debt due to him, the Court, or, where he is authorised the Receiver of the estate of the insolvent, has to be satisfied about the existence of the debt, the amount due, its particulars and that it is provable in insolvency. Section 33 does not indicate the quantum of proof which may be regarded as sufficient to prove a debt. A Court may accept in proof of a debt a registered letter to the Court and an affidavit verifying the debt. That, however, is a matter of procedure, and does not lay down as to what is sufficient to prove the debt. In each case it is for the Court or the Receiver (subject to review in the manner provided by the Act) to consider whether the debt of which the creditor claims inclusion is proved. The decision of the question must of necessity depend upon the circumstances and the evidence led to prove the debt.

The presumption under S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act is a presumption of consideration; it does not in all cases prove the quantum of debt due by the insolvent at the date of insolvency. The Insolvency Court has to ascertain whether a debt is due by the insolvent, whether the debt is provable in insolvency, and the quantum of the debt due at the material date. In making this enquiry in its three aspects even the judgment of a Court against the debtor may not be regarded as binding upon the Court.

A debt to be entered in the schedule must be a real debt. The Court in each case has jurisdiction to investigate whether there is a real debt; whether production of a judgment or a negotiable instrument or other evidence may be regarded as sufficient to regard the debt as proved is a matter for the Insolvency Court to decide. The question is not to be adjudged in the light of any estoppel which may operate against the insolvent or of any presumption. The Court has power to insist upon proof of the debt apart from the judgment or the negotiable or other instrument. Whether the power should be exercised in the case of a judgment debt in a given case depends upon the discretion of the Court which has to be exercised on sound judicial principles. It is true that the Court ordinarily does not go behind a judgment against the debtor, on a bare suggestion by the debtor that the debt which is merged in the judgment did not exist or was bad. There must undoubtedly be circumstances prima facie justifying an enquiry. There must appear something that the judgment was procured by fraud or collusion, or that there has been miscarriage of justice. But a mere, irregularity or error in form will not be a sufficient reason for going behind the judgment.

When a debt secured by a promissory note is sought to be proved, the Insolvency Court must enquire into the reality, and the quantum of consideration. What shape this enquiry may take will depend upon the circumstances of the case. In all cases of proof of debts under S. 33, the burden is upon the creditor. That burden may be discharged by the affidavit of the creditor viewed in the light of a presumption which the Court may raise under S. 114 of the Evidence Act, that a bill of exchange accepted or endorsed, was for good consideration. Hence the presumption under S. 118 of the Negotiable Instrumen s Act that every negotiable instrument was made or drawn for consideration cannot avail against the Receiver of the estate of the insolvent. A was adjudicated insolvent on 27th March, 1944. Two years later, the Insolvency Court, in annulling the adjudication, passed an order under S. 37 of the Insolvency Act that the properties would continue to vest in the Official Receiver. The administration was closed in 1947, as there were no assets to be realised. A suit filed in 1949 by B, a creditor, was decreed in 1950, holding the properties mentioned therein as those of the insolvent. The administration was reopened in 1952. In June and July, 1955 two more creditors, whose debts were shown in the Schedule but had not been proved, filed proofs of debt before the Official Receiver. On the question whether the Official Receiver was competent to receive the proofs of debt and the creditors were entitled to proceed against the properties of the insolvent subsequent to the order of annulment:

Held, it is open to the creditors to approach the Official Receiver in whom the property vested by an order of the Court under S. 37 of the Insolvency Act, to prove their debts before the Official Receiver. A debt not barred at the commencement of the insolvency does not in and for the purpose of the insolvency become barred by lapse of time. The annulment of adjudication under S. 43 is merely a continuation of the insolvency and the vesting order in the Official Receiver is for the benefit of the general body of creditors. ——Ss. 33, 50 —Proof of debts — Revision — Interference in — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115.

In an insolvency matter the Schedule of Creditors was prepared by the Receiver and was submitted to the Court, for necessary orders along with the dividend proposed to be distributed amongst the said creditors and an application for fixing his remuneration. The Schedule and the proposal along with the application of the receiver for fixing his remuneration was at Court's order shown to the creditors or their advocates for having their say on the same. The advocate of two of the creditors, A and B made an endorsement that he had no objection if reasonable remuneration was paid to the receiver. The Court thereupon passed an order that as the parties had no objection to the proposal and approved the proposal of the receiver, the receiver should distribute the dividend as proposed and also to receive the amount of his remuneration. After this order creditors A and B filed an application that as the debts of creditors C and D had not been accepted as such by the Insolvency Court as required by S. 33, they were not entitled to share in the proposed distribution of the assets. The Insolvency Court held that the Court had done what was necessary for C and D to be entitled to a share in the distribution of the assets and that nothing further was required to be done by the Court in that respect. The appellate Court, however, held that as the Court had not determined the correctness of the claims made by C and D, which the Court ought to have done, C and D were not entitled to a share in the distribution of the assets. In the revision petition by C and D against the order:

Held, that the question about the proof of debt by a creditor and the question about the acceptance or admission of his debt by the Insolvency Court are two distinct steps. One step is to be taken by the creditor and the other by the Court. It is only when the Court either accepts or rejects the creditor's claim and, in case of acceptance, enters his name and claim in a schedule that it can be said that the question has been finally determined by the Court. The effect of the preparation of the schedule by the Insolvency Court and the affixation of the signature by the Civil Judge thereon was a question which is primarily within the jurisdiction of the appellate Judge to determine. It might be that another Judge might have inferred from the fact that a schedule was prepared that the Court had also determined the question about tho creditor and his claim. But, the fact that appellate Court has drawn a different inference on the facts did not mean that the interference of the High Court was necessary in the interests of justice. Held, further, that even assuming that the failure to pass a specific order in terms of S. 33 was a mere irregularity and that the mention of the names of C and D in the Schedule suggested that the Court had accepted or admitted their claims, if in the absence of such specific order a competent Court took the view that specific order in terms of S. 33 had not been passed then it did not necessarily establish, except in certain exceptional cases, a case for interference of the Court of revision. (1964) 5 Guj L R 130.

——Ss. 33, 49, 50 — Insolvency Rules (by Bombay High Court), R. 8 — Proof of debts — Admission of a claim by creditor — Requirements of — Specific order under S. 33 necessary — Mere inclusion of his name in schedule of creditors does not amount to compliance with S. 33.

Mere acceptance of evidence tendered by the creditor in support of his claim against the insolvent does not amount to admission of his claim by the Court. The question about the proof of debt by a creditor should not be confused with the question about acceptance or admission of his debt by the Insolvency Court. For acceptance of a debt, specific order in terms of S. 33 by the Court is necessary.

For determining who are the creditors of the insolvent and what is the amount due to them, three steps are required to be taken. The first of these three steps is to be taken by the creditor himself and that step is described as proof of his debt in S. 49 read with R. 8 of the Insolvency Rules (Bombay High Court) which prescribe the normal mode of proving a claim. The other two steps in the process are to be taken by the Court itself. The second step consists of the determination of the persons proving their debts as creditors and the amounts of their debts proved by them by passing a written order in that behalf as specifically stated in S. 33. The third and the last step consists of framing the Schedule of creditors and the debts due to them. Mere inclusion of a creditor's name in the Schedule of creditors without prior determination of his claim in the manner prescribed in S. 33, however, does not entitle him to a share in the distribution of the assets of the insolvent. ——Ss. 33 (3) and 41 — Limitation for tender of proof — Effect of order of discharge.

Fixing of some time for proof of debts at the time of passing an order of adjudication is only for the convenience of parties. Hence delay in applying for proof of debts is not per se fatal to acceding to the prayer for the inclusion of debt in the schedule. No period of limitation is preseribed in the Insolvency Act during which a creditor should apply for proof of his debt. But this right of creditor to prove his debt is subject to the condition that he (creditor) should apply for proof of debts before the insolvent is granted an unconditional order of discharge and his assets are realised and distributed and the surplus, if any, is paid to the insolvent. The granting of an unconditional order of discharge is the last act in bringing about a final termination of the insolvency proceedings. AIR 1936 Cal 807 and 54 Mys H C R 261. ——Ss. 33 (3) and 41 — Death of insolvent before filing application for discharge — Effect—Automatic discharge — Meaning of — Unconditional order of discharge, when can be passed.

The order of discharge contemplated under S. 33 (3) is one made on the application of the debtor. It does not contemplate a case where the insolvent dies without filing an application for discharge. 'Automatic discharge' does not mean 'immediate discharge'. Those words can only mean a discharge brought about without any direct or immediate stimulus from without. Death of an insolvent is no bar to the Court suo motu granting an order of discharge to a deceased insolvent when the other conditions required under the Act, i. e., the realisation of his assets and the distribution of the same among his creditors are completed and when there is nothing else to be done.

There is no reason to doubt the jurisdiction of the Court to grant an unconditional order of discharge in favour of a deceased insolvent when the proceedings otherwise terminate. Even otherwise, an automatic discharge can occur when the insolvency proceedings finally terminate. Hence the death of the insolvent does bring about automatic discharge of the insolvent and the insolvency proceedings do not terminate thereby. The creditors are, therefore, entitled to prove their debts even after the death of the insolvent till the unconditional order of discharge is passed. ILR (1956) Mys 209 : AIR 1957 Mys 3 (5) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 13) (DB).

——S. 34 — Civil Procedure Code (5 of 1908), S. 11 and O. 9, Rr. 8 and 9 — Suit for recovery of money dismissed for default — Subsequent petition for proof of the debt in insolvency — Maintainability.

The plea of res judicata cannot be raised unless the matter directly and substantially in issue in the latter suit has been heard and decided in the former suit. Therefore, where a suit was not heard and decided but was only dismissed for default, it cannot be said that there was anything decided in the former suit, which can operate as res judicata in a petition for proof of that debt in insolvency. Further, even where O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C. applies, it could only be a bar for a second suit based upon the same cause of action. Therefore, the further condition that has to be proved is that, the cause of action is the same in the suit previously instituted as well as in the application for proving the debt.

It is well settled that the scope of an inquiry by the Insolvency Court under S. 34 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is very wide. Even in a case where the liability of the insolvent is embodied in a decree, it is open to the Insolvency Court to inquire and go behind it and get to the real character of the transaction. A fortiori in a case where the suit had been dismissed for default, it cannot be said that the creditor is debarred under S. 34 of the Act from proving his claim or for the Insolvency Court to entertain and inquire it, especially when the Civil Court had not decided the claim on its merits.

The proceedings before the Official Receiver and the Insolvency Court in regard to proof of debt are not suits within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure. That being so, O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. Where in spite of a mortgage, which is set aside under Ss. 53 and 54 and a suit and a decree therein for the first instalment due under the mortgage, there has been no substantial part performance of the fraudulent intention to prefer some of the creditors to others under the mortgage and no harm has been actually done and the parties have virtually been put back to their original position by the cancellation of the deed, the intended fraudulent transaction will not prevent the mortgagee from proving in insolvency the debts covered by the mortgage as an unsecured creditor. 59 Mad 998 : AIR 1936 Mad 717 (F B), Rel. on. ('51) 64 M L W 438 : (1951) 2 Mad L J 32 : AIR 1952 Mad 504 (2) (506) (Pt B) (Pr 11) (DB).

——Ss. 34, 53, 54 — Mortgage declared void—Effect on debt.

The mere fact that a mortgage is declared void under Ss. 53 and 54 does not make the debt included in it void. Though the mortgage deed is annulled under Ss. 53 and 54, the mortgagee thereunder can rely on the debt included in the mortgage deed and prove the debt in insolvency as an unsecured creditor. The mortgagee need not plead any fraud for proving these debts as for proving the mortgage. Further this view does not take away the effect of cancelling the mortgage deed. The mortgagee, who was a secured creditor and could recover his dues in full under the mortgage set aside, is, owing to the cancellation of the mortgage, relegated to the position of a mere unsecured creditor, entitled only to the dividend (a mere fraction) of his dues, like the remaining unsecured creditors. 59 Cal 377 : AIR 1931 P C 245, Foll. ('51) 64 M L W 438 : (1951) 2 Mad L J 32 : AIR 1952 Mad 504 (2) (507) (Pt C) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 34 — Joint family debt.

A person liable for debts merely on the ground that he is a member of a joint family and that the debts are payable by the joint family cannot be adjudicated insolvent for those debts, and those debts cannot be proved in his insolvency and will have only to be allowed for preliminarily in a partition suit brought by the purchaser of the other share or shares. But there are also undoubtedly circumstances which will make such a person "personally liable" for the debt. Such as his being a member of a trading firm and holding himself out as a partner, and the debts being contracted for the trade. There is no need to wait then for a partition suit for allowing such debts which can be proved in insolvency of the person who had made himself personally liable for the debts in addition to being liable for them from out of his share in the joint family properties. AIR 1952 Mad 504 (2) (DB).

——S. 34 — Cochin Insolvency Act (7 of 1098 M E.), S. 34 (2) — Surety's right against principal debtor— Nature of — Suit by surety for contribution — Debt not proved in insolvency—Suit not maintainable.

It is clear from the S. 34 (2) that future, certain or contingent liabilities of the insolvent are also deemed to be debts provable in insolvency. The surety's right against the principal debtor comes under the category of the principal debtor's contingent liability as contemplated by the section which could be proved in insolvency. The surety who has not proved his debt in the insolvency proceedings cannot, therefore, sue the principal debtor for contribution if the loan is recovered from him. 50 All 606 ; 40 Mad 783 and 39 Cal W N 863, Rel. on.

——Ss. 35 and 53 — Sham and nominal transactions not covered by S. 53 — Annulment of adjudication under S. 35, if controlled by S. 53.

After A was adjudicated as an insolvent, on a creditor's petition, the Court ordered annulment of a gift-deed executed by A in favour of B on a petition under S. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act filed by the Official Receiver. Pending appeal against that order, the lower appellate Court annulled the insolvency of A on application by B under S. 35 of the Act without considering the plea of the petitioning creditors that the gift-deed executed by A in favour of B was a fictitious, sham and nominal transaction. In revision against the order :

Held, a transaction assailed on the ground of its being fictitious, sham and nominal is not covered by S. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The order annulling the adjudication is bad without considering the plea of the petitioning creditors. (1963) 2 Andh L T 325 : (1963) 2 Andh W R 437.

Where an adjudication is annulled under S. 35 and no vesting order is made under S. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), the property does not merely revest in the insolvent but it reverts to him. ——S. 35—Scope—Fraud between petitioning creditor and insolvent resulting in adjudication of latter as insolvent — Adjudication liable to be annulled under S. 35—Burden of proof.

One G filed insolvency petition, dated 18-11-1965, to adjudicate one D, his wife K and his son S as insolvents on the ground that a sum of about Rs. 4,000 was due to G under three promissory notes of the year 1948 executed in his favour by S as well as a separate sum of Rs. 350 due under a promissory note executed in his favour by S and his parents aforesaid in June 1951. The case of the petitioning creditor was that D and K, had guaranteed the liability of Rs. 4,000 of S under the three promissory notes aforesaid ; that D had executed a mortgage in favour of A on 25 7.1951 for Rs. 300 that he and his wife K had also executed a sale of all his properties to one R for a sum of Rs. 3,000 and that these alienations constituted acts of insolvency. At the same time the petitioning creditor filed a suit against D and his two wives and their children for recovery of a sum of Rs. 4,780 due under the three promissory notes executed by S which were guaranteed by his parents under separate letters of guarantee passed by them in favour of the petitioning creditor. The suit and the insolvency petition were dismissed as the petitioning creditor had not proved that D or K was indebted to him in the sum of Rs. 500. The petitioning-creditor thereupon filed appeals against the order dismissing insolvency petition and the suit. While the aforesaid appeals were pending, both the parties entered into a compromise and under that compromise, the members of the family agreed to be adjudged insolvents and the suit was decreed against them for the entire amount claimed with full costs. This compromise was entered into even without reference to their counsel.

Held, that under S. 35 an adjudication is liable to be annulled if the proceedings resulting in the adjudication are vitiated by fraud or collusion, or if it is proved that really no debt existed and the adjudication was suffered by the debtor fraudulently admitting the existence of a debt. The Insolvency Court had undoubted jurisdiction to enquire into the factum of the debt and also to determine whether any judgment obtained against an insolvent as evidence of the debt was vitiated by fraud and collusion when an application is filed under S. 35 for the annulment of the adjudication. In a majority of cases, direct evidence of fraud and collusion may not be available and the decision of the Court may have to rest upon circumstantial evidence. The circumstances under which the compromise was entered into between the parties, led to the clear and irresistible inference that the compromise was brought about as a result of fraud and collusion. The question of burden of proof had no significance on the facts in the present case. All the members of the family were undoubtedly making common cause with the petitioning creditor. In view of the changed attitude of the members of the family, the duty to examine them was clearly upon the petitioning creditor and the Official Receiver and an adverse inferenee had necessarily to be drawn against them for the non-examination of the members of the family. It may be that the decree passed upon consent may be binding between the parties. But so far as the adjudication was concerned, it should be annulled once for all. ——S. 35—Proceedings in insolvency — Termination of—Modes.

Proceedings in insolvency can be terminated by any one of the following modes, namely, (i) by discharging the receiver ; (ii) by the insolvent applying for discharge and (iii) by annulment of adjudication. Where none of these things happened and, on the other hand, the proceedings were kept pending, it could not be said that the Official Receiver had not locus standi to maintain the application questioning the sale deed executed by the insolvent. (1963) 76 Mad L W 757 : 1964 Mad W N 91.

——Ss. 35, 28 and 55—Position of receiver—Obligations under valid contracts of insolvent, entered into before insolvency.

It is an elementary principle of insolvency law that subject to the special provisions enacted by the insolvency statute — Sections 51 to 54 — the Official Receiver merely steps into the shoes of the insolvent and can claim no higher rights than the insolvent. Where under a contract of lease entered into by the insolvent he was bound to make adjustment towards rent a certain amount received by him at the time of entering into the lease the Official Receiver as the representative of the insolvent is equally bound to give effect to the contract. He can have no real legal basis for disputing the adjustment or to claim that the adjustment would not be binding upon him. A I R 1958 Mad 486.

——Ss. 35, 37—Annulment of insolvency under S. 35—Liability of debtor for outstanding debts remains unaffected — Words 'paid in full' in S. 35 — Meaning of.

The liability of the debtor for the balance of the debt remaining unpaid at the date of the annulment of adjudication of insolvency under S. 35 remains unaffected and can be enforced by the creditor as if there had been no proceeding in insolvency against the debtor.

By virtue of the provisions of S. 37 of the Act, the consequence of annulling an order of adjudication is to wipe out altogether the insolvency and its effect, except to the limited extent reserved under that section. The legislature has introduced the fiction of vesting the title to his property retrospectively in the insolvent without invalidating the sales and dispositions of property and payments duly made by the Court or the Official Receiver. The effect of annulment relates back to the date of adjudication and the property does not merely revest in the insolvent.

There is no scope for contending that no liability subsists against the debtor where the debts of the insolvent have been paid in full. The words 'paid in full' occurring in S. 35 of the Act mean payment of the full amount as the creditor would be entitled to, as if no order of adjudication had been passed against the debtor. Hence, a person who seeks to set aside an adjudication altogether must show that, independently of the insolvency, he had cleared off his debts and satisfied the creditors in full. Where, pending proceedings before the Insolvency Court, the debtor applies to the Debt Conciliation Board, even if it be assumed that the Debt Conciliation Board obtains precedence that does not abrogate the proceedings in the Insolvency Court. It merely "suspends" them. Whatever the position may be vis a vis the two Courts the insolvent has no power to deal with the property qua insolvent. ILR (1951) Nag 12 : 1952 Nag L J 106 : A I R 1951 Nag 241 (244) (Pt A) (Pr 21).

——S. 35—Practice and procedure—Burden of proof.

Where an application for annulment challenges the debt, whole stock and barrel and when the creditor's eligibility to lay the application in insolvency is founded upon that debt, it is for him to show that the debt was not only genuine, but also one for the non-payment of which the debtor could have been personally proceeded against. 1951 Ker L T 553 : A I R 1952 Trav-Co 234 (235) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Ss. 35, 6—Adjudication on basis of debt for which debtor was not personally liable to petitioning creditor—Validity.

It is a common place of the insolvency law that an act of insolvency to serve as the basis of adjudication upon a creditor's petition must be an act committed by his debtor and unless there is a personal liability in respect of the debt there is no such relation of the debtor as will serve to support an adjudication order. 32 Cochin L R 263, Rel. on.

An insolvency proceeding is essentially a proceeding in personam and only the personal debts due by the insolvent can be proved therein.

When the debtor was not personally liable for the debt due to the petitioning creditor and when there is no evidence of any other debt being in existence when the sale deed (alleged to be an act of insolvency) in favour of the vendee was executed, it can on no account be treated as an act of insolvency. 1951 Ker L T 553 : A I R 1952 Trav-Co 234 (236) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Ss. 36 and 77 — Successive orders of adjudication by two Courts A and B—Effect of prior Order—Proper procedure — Application by official assignee of B Court for transfer of assets from A Court to B Court made to A Court — Maintainability—Absence of letter of request from B Court — Effect — (Presidency-Towns Insolvency Act (1909), Ss. 22 and 126).

Where there are successive adjudications in insolvency by two Courts, all the property of the insolvent vests in the Official Assignee appointed by the Court in which the prior adjudication was made and it will not be divested from him by the subsequent adjudication by the other Court. In such cases it would not be just or equitable to allow the proceedings in both Courts to go on concurrently leading to a most undesirable conflict of jurisdiction. The proper procedure in such a case would be for one of the Courts either to annul the adjudication or to stay all proceedings thereof as provided by S. 22 of the Presidency-Towns Insolvency Act or S. 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Hence where there is a prior order of adjudication by A Court and a subsequent order by B Court, any assets in the hands of A Court can only be transferred to B Court in pursuance of a letter of request under S. 77 made by B Court to A Court. An application for transfer of such assets by the Official Assignee of B Court made directly to A Court is not sustainable under S. 36. 1956 Andh W R 207 : AIR 1957 Andh Pra 649 (650) (Pr 3) (DB).

Where pending proceedings before the Insolvency Court, the debtor applies to the Debt Conciliation Board, even if it be assumed that the Debt Conciliation Board obtains precedence that does not abrogate the proceedings in the Insolvency Court. It merely "suspends" them. Whatever the position may be vis-a-vis the two Courts, the insolvent has no power to deal with the property qua insolvent. ILR (1951) Nag 12: 1952 Nag L J 106: AIR 1951 Nag 241. ——S. 37—Order vesting only realised assets in the Court—Unrealised assets — If available for distribution.

Where at the time of annulment of an adjudication, the Court has passed an order under S. 37 vesting only the realised assets in the Court and has not passed an order vesting certain property (unrealised assets) of the insolvent in the Court for distribution amongst the creditors, that property cannot be available to that Court for such distribution. The unrealised assets revert to the insolvent from before the date of annulment unconditionaliy, in the absence of any condition prescribed by the Court, as if he had never been adjudged insolvent. 1959 B L J R 706 : AIR 1960 Pat 176 (178, 179) (Pt C) (Prs 12, 15) (DB).

—— Ss. 37 and 75 (2)—Appeal under S. 75 (2) — Receiver becoming divested of property — Receiver is not necessary party to appeal — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, R. 10 (2)).

A plain reading of S. 37 shows that the receiver washes his hands off, where an order of adjudication is annulled. Where, therefore, the order of discharge has the effect of vesting the amount realised with the creditors in certain proportions and what is left to be done by the receiver is the doing of the ministerial act of distribution in the proportion ordered by the Court, the receiver, according to the order of the Court, becomes divested of the property and in that view, it is not necessary to make him a party in an appeal under S. 75 (2) against an order rejecting the application of the insolvent for discharge and annulling the order of adjudication. 1960 Raj L W 18 : ILR (1959) 9 Raj 923.

2. Section 37 and Section 39.

——Ss. 37, 39—Absence of order annulling adjudication.

Section 39 expressly provides that the Court has to make an order annulling the order of adjudication and that provision is mandatory. Where, therefore, although the Court gave sanction to the composition, there was admittedly no order made by the Court annulling the order of adjudication, S. 37 will not apply. And if S. 37 does not apply, it is obvious that the insolvency continues. A I R 1956 Bom 262 (262) (Pr 7).

3. Section 37 and Section 43.

——Ss. 37, 33 (3) and 43 — Decree debt, not barred by time, shown in the schedule, though creditor did not prove it under S. 33 (3)—Annulment of adjudication.

Right of creditor to prove the debt before Official Receiver in whom property vests by order of Court under S. 37 is not affected as annulment of adjudication under S. 43 is merely a continuation of the insolvency and the vesting order in the Official Receiver is for the benefit of the general body of creditors — No question of the proof of the debt being barred on the ground that the debt was barred by time on the date of the petition for proof can arise as the debt was in time of the commencement of insolvency. ——S. 37 — Annulment — Effect on vesting — If no vesting order is made at the time of annulling an adjudication under S. 43 any property of the insolvent which may have vested in the Receiver reverts to the debtor automatically and the Court cannot thereafter divest the debtor of the property and revest it in another person. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 43. AIR 1954 Mys 52 (DB).

——Ss. 37 and 43 — 'Assets vested in Court' and 'assets realised'—Distinction.

There is a difference between the 'assets realised' and 'assets vested in the Court'. —S. 37—Annulment—Vesting order.

It is clear from S. 37 that in all cases of annulment of adjudication the court is not bound to pass an order for vesting the debtor's property in some person and that it has got a discretion either to pass a vesting order or not to pass the same. If no vesting order is passed, the properties revert to the debtor whose adjudication has been annulled. Imposition of conditions on the insolvent in cases in which his properties are to revert to him is also not obligatory and is a matter of discretion. An order of annulment making provision for the protection of the creditors would defeat the ends of justice and lead to an abuse of the process of the Court. But if the case is one where there is no creditor to be protected, an order under S. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act vesting the debtor's properties in some other person or imposing conditions on the debtor if the properties are to revert to him should not be passed at the time of the annulment. 1957 Ker L T 877 : (1957) Ker L J 801.

—S. 37 — Adjudication annulled — Vesting order not passed — Effect — Possession of Official Receiver does not become adverse — (Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 142 and 144).

Where the adjudication order is annulled but the Insolvency Court does not make any order under S. 37 vesting property in the Official Receiver, the position is that the situation becomes as before the adjudication and the quondam insolvent gets back his property saddled with all the debts. But if he does not take back the possession which still remains with the Official Receiver, the possession of the latter does not become adverse to the quondam insolvent. He holds the property on behalf of the rightful owner. If the Receiver sells the property the possession of the purchaser however becomes adverse to the quondam insolvent from the date of the sale but his suit for possession filed within 12 years is not barred AIR 1919 Mad 8 Rel. on, 1951-2 Mad L J 585 : 64 Mad L W 1097 : AIR 1952 Mad 179 (179) (Pr 3) (DB).

—Ss. 37, 54 — Sale by Hindu father before adjudication on his behalf and on behalf of minor sons annulled — Property not sold by Official Receiver — Annulment of adjudication — Effect.

Where a sale of the properties in question executed by a Hindu insolvent on his behalf and on behalf of his minor sons prior to adjudication, for valuable consideration to discharge antecedent debts is set aside at the instance of the Official Receiver as offending the provisions of the Act and the properties were not effectively sold by the Official Receiver, the effect of the annulment of adjudication is to restore the sale in favour of the alienee. The object of setting aside the alienation as offending the provisions of the Insolvency law is for the benefit of the insolvent's creditors and where no provision is required to be made from and out of the property so far as the insolvent's creditors are concerned, by reason of the adjudication having become annulled, the limited purpose for which the benefit of such an order of setting aside disappears and the alienation in question must be deemed to have been left untouched. AIR 1943 Mad 453 : (1943) 1 M L J 166, Foll.

What are saved under S. 37 are 'sales and dispositions of property and payments duly made' and the 'acts' done by the Court or Receiver could not be any act done at any time by the Court or Receiver but must be acts done by the Court or Receiver which will have a relation to the sales and dispositions of property and payments duly made. AIR 1930 Mad 278 : 57 M L J 116, Dissent. from. In this view, the 'acts' in S. 37 (1) could not include the act of ordering the setting aside of the sale in question, the effect of annulment being to restore the prior state of things. It must, therefore, be taken that the order setting aside the sale has ceased to have any effect with the annulment of the adjudication. Further, so far as the minor son is concerned, his interest in the present case having already been parted with by the father who was competent to represent him and sell the property for purposes binding on him, it is not open to the minor son to question the alienation even on the assumption that the order setting aside the sale at the instance of the Official Receiver continues after the annulment. In so far as the minor son is concerned, his interests had already passed to the alienee, and his interest did not vest in the Official Receiver that it required revert consequent on the annulment. the reason being that on the setting aside of the alienation it was only the insolvent's interest that vested in the Official Receiver and that that interest alone could revert to the debtor on annulment. —S. 37 — Limitation Act (1908), Art. 182 (5) — Decree in favour of Official Receiver for debt due

When money is due to a person who has been adjudicated an insolvent and the official receiver in whom the estate of that person has become vested files a suit to realise that sum of money, it cannot be said, that he is representing any of the creditors of the insolvent in realising that sum of money. After an adjudication has been annulled, it is open to the quondam insolvent to take such steps regarding his property which he could ordinarily have done unless there has been an order under S 37 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act, vesting the property in a trustee or an Official Receiver. When there is no such vesting, since the decree obtained by the Official Receiver is capable of being executed after the adjudication has been annuled and till that order is set aside, failure by the insolvent to apply for execution during that period would disentitle the Official Receiver from seeking to execute the decree after the annulment order is set aside after three years from the date of the order on the previous application for execution. (1951) 1 Mad L J 551 : 1951 Mad W N 412 : 64 Mad L W 661 : AIR 1951 Mad 879 (2) (880) (Pr 3) (DB).

The reason is that the effect of the annulment of the adjudication relates back to the date of the adjudication and is as if no adjudication had taken place, except as regards the acts of the Court and the Official Receiver which are validated by S. 37. Where the order of adjudication is annulled unconditionally, the property reverts to the insolvent retrospectively. Therefore where an insolvent brings a suit for recovery of money and the order of adjudication is annulled pendente lite, but before the hearing of the appeal, the suit cannot be dismissed by the appellate Court on the ground that the insolvent's property vested in the receiver. 1954 Nag L J 593 : ILR (1955) Nag 970 : A I R 1955 Nag 47 (49) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 13).

The contention that the orders passed by Insolvency Court while passing an order of annulment directing only the assets realised to remain vested in the Court for payment to the creditors are against the provisions of S. 37 itself and are bad in law, and that the appropriate order should have been that the properties of the insolvent remained vested in the Court for the purpose referred to above, cannot be raised after the orders have become final and binding, no appeal having been preferred against it. 1959 B L J R 706 : AIR 1960 Pat 176 (178) (Pt B) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Ss. 37, 78 (2) — Unconditional order of adjudication—Powers of Court.

Under S. 37, in the absence of any conditions imposed by the Court, the properties would automatically revert to the insolvent as soon as the order of annulment is passed. But the Court does not become functus officio so as to be incapable of passing a subsequent order in order to make the properties formerly vested in the Insolvency Court available for distribution among the creditors on their applications.

Section 78 (2) has no application to the exercise of such power by the Court. ILR (1950) Cut 117 : AIR 1950 Orissa 233 (233, 234) (Pr 2) (DB).

See Hindu Law — Joint family — Debts. AIR 1965 Andh Pra 285.

——Ss 39 and 37 — Absence of order annulling adjudication.

Section 39 expressly provides that the Court has to make an order annulling the order of adjudication and that provision is mandatory. Where, therefore, although the Court gave sanction to the composition, there was admittedly no order made by the Court annulling the order of adjudication, S. 37 will not apply. And if S. 37 does not apply, it is obvious that the insolvency continues. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 37. AIR 1956 Bom 262.

—S. 40 — Petition fot re-adjudication — Requirements.

When the statute is thoroughly silent as to the kind of requirements under S. 9 which are to be fulfilled in the case of the original adjudication where the statute deals with re-adjudication, it is not for the Court by a process of judicial construction to indulge in anything like a legislative enlargement of the Act. Hence on an application for re-adjudication after the annulment of the original adjudication on account of the failure of a composition scheme which intervened, it is not incumbent upon the petitioning creditors to satisfy the requirements of S. 9. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 9. AIR 1953 Mad 375.

—Ss. 41 (2) (c), 67 — Scope — Sale of property in contravention of S. 60 — Conditional discharge of insolvents under S. 41 (2) (c) — Effect — Right of insolvents to recover possession of property.

The effect of the order of conditional discharge under S. 41 (2) (c) is that, subject to the conditions laid down in the order, the insolvents are free men after the order of discharge. They are not bound by the debts incurred by them or proved against them up to the date of discharge. But they do not get back the property which has vested in the official receiver. Even though the receiver had been discharged the creditors are entitled in case the property reverts to the receiver for some reason or other to apply to the insolvency Court for the re-appointment of the receiver, and the sale of the property and distribution of the proceeds amongst them. AIR 1943 Mad 26, Disting. 1957 All W R (HC) 111 : AIR 1957 All 262 (263) (Pr 8) (DB).

—Ss. 41 and 75 — Conditional order of dischage—Dismissal of application for review—Appeal.

An order dismissing an application for review of an earlier conditional order allowing the insolvent's prayer for an order of discharge is not appealable. 1959 Ker L T 993 : 1959 Ker L J 1141 : AIR 1960 Ker 146 (147) (Pr 1) (DB).

—S. 41 — Condititional order of discharge — Grounds for.

The debtor executed a release of share in Tavazhi properties to his sister before applying for adjudication. The Tavazhi was undivided at that time and the transfer was absolutely inoperative. The property belonged to the Tavazhi and the debtor's mother was alive on the date of the transfer so that he could not ask for partition.

Held, even if the debtor had no transferable share in Tavazhi properties on the date of his adjudication he would have obtained a share after the lifetime of his mother. In such a case it was open to the Court to make the discharge conditional and to direct that such share when acquired should vest in the Official Receiver. Further, the Madras Marumakkattayam (Amendment) Act (26 of 1958, Kerala) had conferred a right to enforce partition even during the mother's lifetime. It was therefore clear that the debtor's share in his Tavazhi properties should vest in the Official Receiver for the benefit of his creditors. 1958 Ker L T 445 : 1958 Ker L J 583 : ILR (1959) Ker 27 : AIR 1959 Ker 376 (377) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 3).

—Ss. 41 and 75—Concurrent orders—Revision.

The fact that the Courts below have passed concurrent orders of discharge is no bar to interference in revision in proper cases. 1958 Ker L T 445 : 1958 Ker L J 583 : ILR (1959) Ker 27 : AIR 1959 Ker 376 (377) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

—Ss. 41 and 42—Power of Court to refuse absolute discharge—Grounds.

The Court has got the power under S. 41 (2), cl. (a) to refuse absolute discharge in appropriate cases. S. 42 of the Act mentions circumstances on proof of which the Court shall refuse absolute discharge. This may mean that the Court might grant discharge subject to conditions or suspend the order of discharge in appropriate cases. But from this it does not follow that the Court has no power at all to refuse absolute discharge so as to leave the insolvent an undischarged insolvent for life. Where the conduct of the petitioner insolvent is not bona fide in that he had sold all his assets before filing the insolvency petition and had failed to produce account books and there is nothing to show that conditions if imposed will be complied with, the Court is justified in refusing to grant an absolute discharge. Where the Court cannot grant absolute discharge without any condition nor does it find room or justification for imposing conditions with an expectation that the same will be complied with, there is no other course but to refuse absolute discharge. 1956 Madh B L J 340 : Madh B L R 1956 : (Civ) 53 : AIR 1956 Madh B 254 (254, 255) (Prs 6, 7, 9, 11) (DB).

—S. 41 (2) (b) and (c) — Refusal to discharge absolutely—Appropriate order.

Although it is competent in extreme cases for the Court to refuse discharge absolutely when the insolvent is guilty of some misconduct or dishonesty either before filing the petition for insolvency or during the proceedings of insolvency, in the rest of the cases the Court ought to consider as to whether it would be appropriate to pass an order of the nature indicated in Cls. (b) and (c) of S. 41 (2).

As regards the grant of conditional discharge in favour of an insolvent where he has given up all his property for the benefit of the creditors and nothing is left with him, it is futile to impose such a condition where what the insolvent earns is barely sufficient for the maintenance of his family and practically nothing is left for payment to the creditors and there are no reasonable prospects of his coming by any property from any other source.

Where in the case all that is alleged is rash and hazardous business and there is no allegation or proof of any dishonest conduct, and bearing in mind the object of Bankruptcy Laws that the debtor on giving up whole of his property should be a free man again able to earn his livelihood, then it is pre-eminently a case where the Court should direct suspension of the order of discharge. 1960 Jab L J 546 : 1960 M P C 331 : 1960 M P L J 662 : AIR 1960 Madh Pra 204 (205) (Pt B) (Prs 10, 11, 13) (DB).

—Ss. 41 and 44 — Absence of notice — Effect on, order of discharge.

The absence of notice under S. 41 to a creditor would not invalidate the order of discharge especially when the creditor has filed a review petition against the order of discharge on the ground of absence of notice to him and that petition has been dismissed and the discharge order has become final. (1956) 1 Mad L J 527.

—S. 41—Limitation for tender of proof—Effect of order of discharge.

Fixing of some time for proof of debts at the time of passing an order of adjudication is only for the convenience of the parties. No period of limitation is prescribed in the Act during which a creditor should apply for proof of his debt. But this right of creditor to prove his debt is subject to condition that he should apply for proof of debts before the insolvent is granted an uncondional order of discharge and his assets are realised and distributed and the surplus, if any, is paid to the insolvent. ——S. 41—Death of insolvent before filing application for discharge — Effect—Automatic discharge — Unconditional order of discharge, when can be passed.

Death of insolvent is no bar to the Court suo motu granting an order of discharge of the deceased insolvent when other conditions required by the Act are fulfilled. Even otherwise, automatic discharge can occur when the insolvency proceedings finally terminate. But mere death does not bring about automatic discharge and the insolvency proceedings do not terminate. Creditors can prove their debts even after the death of the insolvent till unconditional discharge order is passed. ILR (1956) Mys 209 : AIR 1957 Mys 3 (5) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 13) (DB).

——S. 41 (2) (a) — Absolute discharge — Debtors held entitled to absolute discharge in circumstances of case.

The debts were incurred long before 1932. The application for adjudging the petitioners as insolvents was filed on 15th May, 1946 and according to the report of the receiver, every property in the hands of the debtors had been accounted for and realised. According to the receiver, the debtors were eking out existence with difficulty. This report was dated 21st July, 1952 and although more than six years had elapased since then, no property was found in the hands of the debtors on which the creditors could lay their hands.

Held, that it would be a mockery of law if the debtors were to continue to remain undischarged and that they were entitled to an absolute discharge. 1960 Raj L W 18 : ILR (1959) 9 Raj 923.

——S. 42 (1) (b) — Insolvent not keeping accounts—No discharge.

Where the insolvents who were allowed to carry on trade and keep accounts were either reckless in carrying on business or they had kept accounts but did not produce them, the Court should not be too ready to help them in the matter of getting their adjudication annulled. In such a case the Court would refuse to grant discharge. (1886) 15 Q B D 213, Ref.

Conditional discharge was also refused because of the behaviour of the insolvent, who was allowed to continue trade on condition that he kept accounts, in not helping the Official Receiver and not keeping the whole property at the disposal of creditors for distribution in insolvency proceedings. Where the insolvents, dealing in a speculative business, know that they are not in a position to bear the burden of the losses and yet go on with the transaction hoping that by some miracle there would be a windfall and being fully aware of their position of financial embarrassment continue the trade, the Court is right in refusing to grant an absolute order of discharge because a mentality such as this denotes rashness as well as great hazard. 1960 Jab L J 546 : 1960 M P C 381 : 1960 M P L J 662 : AIR 1960 Madh Pra 204 (205) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

Held, it is open to the creditors to approach the Official Receiver in whom the property vested by an order of the Court under S. 37, to prove their debts before Official Receiver. A debt not barred at the commencement of the insolvency does not in and for the purpose of the insolvency become barred by lapse of time. ——S. 43—Insolvency — Annulment of adjudication under — Effect of.

When the adjudication is annulled the insolvency is wiped out so far as the property right of the insolvent is concerned and it also restores back to the creditors the right to proceed against the person of the insolvent but it does not restore back to him his civic rights. ——S. 43 — Gwalior Insolvency Act (1980 Samwat), S. 26 (2) — Extension of time — Application made after expiry of period originally fixed — Power of Court—Civil P. C., S. 148—Applicability.

Under S. 26 (2), Gwalior Insolvency Act the Court is empowered to extend the time within which the debtor has to apply for his discharge, if sufficient cause is shown. Section 148, Civil P. C., would apply to insolvency proceedings and the time may be extended on an application made after the expiry of the period fixed provided it is made before the order of adjudication is annulled under S 42 (1). It must be noted that S. 42 (1), Gwalior Insolvency Act only says that if the debtor does not apply for an order of discharge within the period specified by the Court, the order of adjudication shall be annulled. The annulment under this section is thus not automatic on the failure of the debtor to apply; it requires an order of the Court. So long as the order is not passed by the Court annulling the order of adjudication an application to extend the time under S. 26 (2) is competent. Section 44 (3) applies and operates so as to save from release the shares of non-insolvent sons under a decree passed against them and the father after the date of presentation of the insolvency petition. On the adjudication of the father in a joint Hindu family, the shares of the sons do not vest in the Official Receiver but only the father's power of disposal vests in him. ——S. 44 (2)—Effect of discharge under — Receiver if becomes functus officio after discharge of insolvent.

A reading of the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act shows that on the adjudication of insolvency of a debtor all the properties which came under the definition of S. 2 (1) (d) of that Act come into the hands of the Court and are subject to any order that the said assets be administered and such of the creditors whose debts can be proved in the insolvency proceedings may get payments pro rata from those assets. The Court takes charge of those properties, and the insolvent after fulfilling certain conditions is allowed an absolute discharge. He is given an opportunity to begin his career without any handicap or impediment. The order of discharge is made without any direction being given about the divesting of the properties which had, under S. 28, vested in the Court or the Receiver for distribution amongst the creditors. Even, therefore, after an order for discharge under sub-s. (2) of S. 44 the Receiver in Insolvency does not become functus officio : Case law referred. AIR 1950 Cal 487 (489, 490) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 18).

——S. 44 (2)—Order of discharge—Its effect on debt.

The effect of an order of discharge under S. 44 (2) is not to extinguish the debts of the insolvent. The only limitation imposed is that the creditors who have got debts provable under the Act can, after the order of discharge, look only to those particular assets which the insolvent was possessed of and had accordingly vested in the Court or the Receiver on the date of the filing of the application for adjudication. The claims of the creditors cannot be directed against any other property which may be acquired by the insolvent after an order of discharge is made ; (1922) 1 Ch 22: (1878) 4 Ex D 26, Rel. on. AIR 1950 Cal 487 (489) (Pt C) (Pr 14).

——S. 44 (2)—Order of discharge—Effect—Insolvency proceedings in two Courts—Creditor receiving final dividend in one Court—Balance of debt cannot be realised in other Court.

Where an order of discharge has been passed by an insolvency Court, the creditor who has received the final dividend in respect of a debt proved by him, cannot be allowed to realise the balance of the proved debt in another Court where insolvency proceedings are started subsequently against the same debtor. Release from a proved debt means that not only the remedy (further proceedings for the realisation of the balance of the proved debt in another Court) is barred but the debt itself is also extinguished: (1872) 7 Q B 527 and AIR 1941 Mad 620, Rel. on. 1963 Jab L J 144 : 1963 M P L J 884 : AIR 1963 Madh Pra 228 (229) (Pt A) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 44 (2)—Sale of property by insolvent after he was granted an absolute order of discharge — Such property however not revested in insolvent after his disharge by any order of Court—Sale not questioned by Official Receiver—Purchaser if gets a valid title.

It is clear from Mulla's Insolvency (2nd Edn, page 389) that there is no provision that a property which is vested in the Insolvency Court should revest in the insolvent on the passing of an absolute order of discharge and it was never contemplated that an insolvent should get an absolute order of discharge and yet retain part of his property. Section 44 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920) means that the order of discharge frees the insolvent from liability for all debts provable under the Act but does not free his property from such liability. But there is no authority for the proposition that once a person was adjudged an insolvent. he was completely deprived of his property and that his property can be owned by the Official Receiver and that if and when he is granted an order of discharge his property does not revest in him unless there was a speciffc order to that effect by the Insolvency Court. Hence, when an insolvent sells property after his discharge the title of the purchaser cannot be questioned on the ground that there was no order of Court revesting such property in the insolvent after his discharge. The fact that the sale could be affected by the Official Receiver taking suitable steps cannot take away the title of the purchaser so long as such steps are not taken. The Official Receiver could take any steps only if there are creditors to be paid and the administration is not over, and the purchaser gets a valid title as long as the sale has not been questioned by the Official Receiver in any independent proceedings. ——S. 44—Order of discharge passed by foreign State—Binding nature—(Conflict of laws)—(International law) (Private).

The general rule is that a discharge granted under the Indian Insolvency law is binding on all the Courts of India without regard to the place where the contract was to be performed. A discharge granted in the Travancore State would certainly be an answer to a claim made subsequently in Madras State. In fact even in the case of foreign States, orders of discharge granted under the Insolvency Act by any foreign country have always been recognised by the comity of nations in accordance with the principles regulating faith and credit being given to such order. Hence an order of discharge passed in Travancore State when its insolvency law was identical with the insolvency law in British India, whether it is looked upon as an order passed by a foreign State or by any part of the Republic in India, would be binding in Madras State. (1868) L R 2 P C 157; (1870) L R 2 C P 228 and (1890) 25 Q B D 399 and AIR 1921 Bom 128, Rel. on. (1956) 1 Mad L J 527.

——S. 44 — Effect of Order of discharge.

An order of discharge no doubt released the insolvent from his liabilily to pav debts provable in the insolvency but it did not extinguish the decretal debt of the respondent creditor in the sense that after the discharge the creditor could look to the assets which the insolvent was possessed of and which had vested in the Court of Receiver on filing of the application for adjudication. The claim of the creditor would be satisfied also from any other property which may be acquired by the insolvent after the date of order of discharge in view of the condition attached to the order of discharge that 'his after-acquired assets, if any, will vest in the Official Receiver till his creditors are paid 8 annas in a rupee'. (1956) 1 M L J 527.

—S. 44—Absence of notice — Effect on order of discharge.

The absence of notice under S. 41 to a creditor would not invalidate the order of discharge especially when the creditor has filed a review petition against the order of discharge on the ground of absence of notice to him and that petition has been dismissed and the discharge order has become final. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 3927.

——S. 44 (2) and (3)—Father's debt—Decree passed against father and son—Father declared insolvent — Release of father under S. 44 (2) whether extinguishes liability of son under decree—Hindu Law—Debt.

The fact that sub-s. (3) of S. 44 provides for the continuance of the liability of persons jointly liable along with the insolvent indicates that the debt as such is not extinguished but it only releases the insolvent from all liability keeping alive the liability of the other debtors jointly liable with him. It, therefore, follows that liability of a person jointly bound with the insolvent is not extinguished despite the discharge of the insolvent.

The effect of decree against the son against whom a decree has been passed along with his father is to make the son jointly liable along with his father to discharge the debt. Whatever might be the position prior to the decree, when the obligation of a Hindu son to pay his father's debts fructifies into a decree it imposes a joint liability on the son along with the father and the former is jointly bound along with the latter within the meaning of sub-s. (3) of S. 44.

Hence, the release of an insolvent father under S. 44 (2) from all debts does not extinguish the liability of the son who is liable under a decree along with the father in respect of his father's debts. ——S. 44—Scope—Discharge of insolvent — Decree in respect of debt provable in insolvency, in spite of objection that debt ceased to exist because of discharge order—Objection cannot be raised in executing Court, decree though wrong not being void —

Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 38 and 47 — Evidence Act (1872), S. 44

The provisions of S. 44 of the Provincial Insolvency Act are mandatory and when a discharge order is made all debts provable under the insolvency proceedings in a way cease to exist but this does not make the decree for a debt provable against the insolvent, altogether void. It is well recognised that when the Court has jurisdiction to decide a matter it has jurisdiction to decide it wrongly or rightly. Where, therefore, in a suit the petitioner had pleaded that he had been discharged and accordingly no decree against him could be passed in respect of the debt in suit the debt being provable in insolvency but the trial Judge did not accept his contention and passed the decree notwithstanding the discharge order, though conceding that the decision was contrary to the provisions of S. 44 and was erroneous, the remedy for the petitioner was to have it set aside by way of appeal and he could not ask the executing Court to treat the decree as if it did not exist at all. It was the decree that was to be executed and even though the Court was wrong in passing it and it might be urged that it should not have been passed, since the petitioner did not get it set aside by a higher Court or even by the same Court on review, it existed and the executing Court was bound to execute it. ——S. 44—Scope—Validity—Sovereign prerogative—Priority of taxes in bankruptcy—Nature and scope of.

In S. 44 the Legislature has classified debt for the purpose of priority and has accorded a favoured position to debts due to State. The section is designed to carry out a public purpose, it operates uniformly on all persons in the State, it does not subject individuals to an arbitrary power and it does not discriminate against some and the favour of others. It is thus not violative of constitutional provision regarding equal protection of the laws. See Constitution of India, Art. 14. AIR 1957 Punj 150 (DB).

——Ss. 44—Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 38, 47—Power of executing Court to go behind decree.

There is nothing in S. 44 of Provincial Insolvency Act which bars the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to entertain a suit and decide it provided it has the necessary relevent jurisdiction. S. 44 could only be urged as a defence by defendant. Such a defence if raised will be decided by the Court where the suit is pending. If the decision is wrong the remedy is to file an appeal or revision. But it cannot be said that the decree is a nullity in execution proceedings for, there is no question involved of the inherent jurisdiction of the Court to pass a decree. 1957 Raj L W 319 : AIR 1957 Raj 131 (132, 133) (Prs 8, 16) (DB).

The Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to pass a protection order against such imprisonment and to direct a release of the prisoner even though that Court is competent to entertain his insolvency petition and to pass an order of adjudicating him an insolvent. SECTION 45

——Ss. 45, 46—English Case—Insolvency—Proof — Money advanced to bankrupt for setting up riding academy—Money not intended to constitute loan — Creditor interested in business—Creditor if entitled to claim repayment with other creditors.

The appellant (Mrs. M) advanced certain sums of money to the bankrupt for setting up a riding academy. There was no agreement for the repayment of the said moneys or the payment of interest thereon or of the giving of any security in respect of the said moneys. In other words, the money was not intended to constitute a loan at all. The enterprise into which the money went was intended to provide both of them with a home and a living. The appellant, although not married to the bankrupt, had been living with him for some time prior to the bankruptcy and both were described as the principals of the academy in the brochure.

Held, that the moneys advanced by the appellant represented her contribution to the capital of the business enterprise in which she had an interest herself and she was no more entitled as against the ordinary creditors of the business to prove in respect of her contribution than the proprietor, was entitled to prove in respect of his. The result was that she was not entitled to claim repayment in competition with the creditors of the bankrupt. ('51) 1951-2 All E R 168.

——S. 46—Scope — Insolvency of proprietor of chit fund — Assignment of pronote — Suit by assignee— Dealings in respect of separate chit — Set off by subscriber — Permissibility.

Section 46, Provincial Insolvency Act, is more or less a copy of S. 39 of the English Bankruptcy Act. Hence it is proper to presume that the Indian Legislature intended to give S. 46 the same import. The rule embodied in S. 46 is a rule of equity and there are no legitimate grounds to limit its benefits solely to actions in Insolvency Courts.

Where on the insolvency of the proprietor of a chit fund, the Official Receiver assigned a pronote executed by one of the subscribers in favour of the proprietor as security for future instalments, in the suit brought by the assignee on that pronote the subscriber can claim set off of a sum due to him in respect of instalments paid by him to the proprietor under a separate chit. 36 Mys L J 57 : ILR (1957) Mys 333 : AIR 1958 Mys 126 (127) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

——S. 46 —"Mutual dealings" — Meaning — Set off when allowable—Material date.

Mutual credit or mutual dealings under S. 46, Provincial Insolvency Act, mean reciprocal demands which must be naturally terminated in a debt. In a case where there are reciprocal demands available by one party against the other in the same capacity it is a clear case of mutual dealings in which a set-off is a matter of course. The date of insolvency would be material for the purpose of set-off. Fixed deposits maturing on a future date may be a future debt but it is a debt nevertheless at the date of the bankruptcy, available for set-off as a debt. ——S. 47—Valuation of security under—Effect of — If bar to claim in excess of that valuation — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 2, R. 2).

The right of a secured creditor to realise the security in accordance with the terms of the bond in his favour is not affected in any manner whatsoever by the valuation which he puts on his security under S. 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. A secured creditor is clearly entitled to make a claim in respect of the whole of the amount due under the security despite the valuation made by him of his security at a lesser figure. And if he limits his claim in a subsequent suit to the amount of the original valuation he is precluded under O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. ——S. 47—Secured creditor—Right to execute decree against personal property of insolvent after his discharge.

The right of a secured creditor in insolvency proceedings is a contingent one and until the contingency happens he is outside the Act — His debt is not provable until he has realised his security or has abandoned it or valued it as per S. 47. In such a case he is entitled to a personal decree against the insolvent under O. 34, R. 6, Civil P. SECTION 48

——S. 48—Companies Act (1913), Ss. 229 and 230 — Interest —Trusts Act (1882), S. 23.

Where the sum constituted a trust money in the Company's hands and therefore the claimant is entitled to priority not under S. 230 of the Companies Act but independently of it, such a claim is subject to the same rule about interest as any other debt provable in the liquidation proceedings and the mere fact that the debt was trust money will not entitle the claimant to claim any special treatment in the matter of payment of interest.

Thus where the official liquidators had not received interest for the sum from any other person, nor was it a case where they ought or might be fairly presumed to have received interest nor had any unreasonable delay been made in paying the trust money, the case was not governed by S. 23 of the Trusts Act and the company being not a solvent company the payment was governed by the rules applicable to insolvency cases. 1953 All W R (H C) 586 : 1953 All L J 725 : (1954) 24 Com Cas 450 : AIR 1954 All 129 (130) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

——S. 49 (1) — 'Provable' and 'proof' — Meaning — Contested claim—Mode of proof.

'Provable' and 'proof' are words of technical import in the language of the law of insolvency. And it is only that a certain debt may conform to that description for certain purposes of the Act that the convenient mode of proof prescribed by S. 49 has been laid down.

Where a claim for recovery of a debt is not contested, the mode of proof prescribed by S. 49 should be sufficient. But to say that that mode of proof will do even where a claim is contested would be to run counter to the recognised rules of pleading and proof. Where a debt is contested in the insolvency proceedings it should be proved in the ordinary way, and it would be no answer to the contest that a prima facie proof of it according to the mode prescribed by S. 49 had already been given. ——S. 49—Scope—Debts under pronote — Presumption under S. 119, Negotiable Instruments Act—Applicability—Proof of passing of consideration — Necessity — (Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), S. 118 (a)).

Where the circumstances on which the preliminary inference as to the weakening of the presumption as regards certain pronote under S. 118 (a) of the Negotiable Instruments Act was based are found to be illusory and unfounded, the creditors are not deprived of the benefit of that presumption and there is no necessity of proving by evidence that consideration did actually pass.

Held, on facts that it was clearly a case where not only had the insolvent failed to displace, or even to weaken, the presumption in favour of the creditors under S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, but the passing of consideration stood fully established, even if there were no initial presumption in favour of the creditors, by the evidence adduced by them and by the insolvent's own admission. There was therefore no need for the creditors to prove the actual passing of the consideration in respect of their pronotes. AIR 1958 All 54 (63, 66) (Pt J) (Prs 30, 40) (DB).

Section 51 (3) applies also to a sale in execution of a decree held after the property of the judgment-debtor vested in a Receiver under S. 74 (ii). The combined effect of S. 51 (1) and (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act is that while a purchaser in good faith gets good title for the properties sold in Court auction after the presentation of the insolvency petition, the decree-holder cannot get any right to the proceeds which would vest in the Receiver. ——S. 52 — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47 and O. 21, R. 58 — Money decree against insolvent and his sons — Property attached before judgment sought to be sold in execution by decree-holder — Application by receiver who was party to decree for delivery of property to him for administration — Question of title whether property is self-acquired or joint family property — Power of executing Court to decide stated. AIR 1965 Andh-Pra 451 (454) (Pt B) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Ss. 52, 28 (2), (7), 51 (3) — Effect of — Purchase of insolvent's property at execution sale after admission of insolvency petition but before order of adjudication — Purchaser if gets good title.

The nature of title that the purchaser will get will depend upon whether he fulfils the condition laid down in sub-s. (3) of S. 51 or does not fulfil it. Knowledge of insolvency proceedings by the purchaser is sufficient to disprove that he was a bona fide purchaser. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 28 (2). AIR 1959 Bom 10.

——Ss. 52, 2 (e) and 28 (6) —Applicability and scope — Secured creditors—Compromise instalment decree in mortgage suit — Mortgaged property to remain under attachment till payment of decree — Interim receiver in subsequent insolvency of mortgagor — Claim to possession of mortgaged property from receiver in execution — Sustainability.

Under S. 28 (6), Provincial Insolvency Act, the right of a secured creditor, to realise or otherwise deal with his security is in no way affected by the order of adjudication and the mortgagee can sue on and realise, his security. Under S. 20 of the Insolvency Act, the property of the debtor does not vest in the interim receiver as it does in a receiver appointed after adjudication under S. 56 of the Act. If, therefore, after the adjudication of insolvency, the right of a secured creditor to realise or otherwise deal with his security is unaffected, though the other property of the insolvent has vested in the official receiver then, a fortiori, the interim receiver appointed before adjudication to whom the property of the debtor does not vest cannot claim the right to take possession of any mortgaged property that is with the secured creditor of the insolvent, such being the rights of a secured creditor and of the receiver appointed before or after the adjudication. Section 52 of the Insolvency Act cannot, in its very nature, apply to mortgage decreee-holders or to decree-holders holding a charge or lien on the property of the debtor as security for the paymet of the debt due from him. Money decree-holders holding a charge or lien on the debtor's property being secured creditors within the meaning of S. 2 (e) are exempted from the operation of S. 52.

Held on facts, that the compromise decree passed in favour of the mortgagee was not a simple money decree but was in the nature of a mortgage decree. Even if the decree could not be regarded as a mortgage decree, it had beyond doubt the character of a decree giving to the decree-holder a charge or a lien on the properties of the debtor specified in the decree as security for the payment of the decretal amount and S. 52 could not be invoked by the interim receiver for delivery to him of the property mortgaged. The mere fact that in execution proceedings a receiver was appointed at the instance of the mortgagee for the collection of rents and profits of the mortgaged property did not attract S. 52, when it is in its nature inapplicable. 1959 M P C 726 : 1960 M P L J 135 : 1960 Jab L J 317 : ILR (1959) Madh-Pra 780 : AIR 1959 Madh-Pra 420 (421, 422) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 52 — Jurisdiction — Application for delivery of property to interim receiver — Forum.

An application under S. 52 has to be made to the Court which is executing the decree and it is that Court which has to decide whether in regard to an application under S. 52 the conditions laid down by that section are fulfilled and whether the provisions of the section are applicable. 1. Scope and applicability.

——Ss. 53 and 35 — Sham and nominal transactions not covered by S. 53 — Annulment of adjudication under S. 35 if controlled by S. 53.

Held, the order annuling the adjudication is bad without considering the plea of the petitioning creditors — See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 35. (1963) 2 Andh W R 437.

——Ss. 53 and 54—Fraudulent preference—What is.

If a man who is in serious pecuniary difficulties, his debts surpassing his assets, makes a transfer of a considerable portion of his properties to one creditor without making any provision for the payment of the debts of other creditors, the Court may presume that the transfer was with a view to give fraudulent preference. 1959 M P L J (Notes) 177.

——S. 53—Applicability—Fraudulent transfer.

Fraudulent transfer coming under S. 6 (b) is one voidable under S. 53 T. P. Act independently of insolvency of transferor and one that is voidable under S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act— See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 6 (b). AIR 1955 N U C (Mad) 3169.

——Ss. 53, 6 (b), and 54—Act of Insolvency.

Where the circumstances of a case leave no room for doubt that the transactions were resorted to by the debtor with a view to defeat his creditors that would be an act of insolvency — See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 6 (b). A I R 1954 Trav.Co 419 (DB).

——Ss. 53 and 54—Applicability.

Once the consideration is found to be real and not illusory. the transfer goes outside the scope of S. 53, whether or not it will come within that of S. 54. AIR 1954 Vind Pra 11 (12) (Pt A) (Pr 8).

2. "Any transfer."

——Ss. 53, 9 (1) (c) and 54 — Date of transfer is date of registration and not date of execution of transfer deed—Fiction of relation back does not apply—Registration Act (1908), Ss. 47 and 75 — See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 9 (1) (c). A I R 1962 Andh Pra 226 (DB).

——Ss. 53, 54 and 28.A — Scope — Father adjudged insolvent — Alienation by father — Effect of setting aside on sons' shares.

The jurisdiction of an Insolvency Court when setting aside a transfer under S. 53 or 54, where the transaction is not sham and nominal, is, confined to doing so in respect of the insolvent's share. In so far as the insolvent's share of property is involved in the alienation the Official Receiver will get it back when the alienation is set aside, but if under the powers vested in the insolvent father under the general law (such as, the Hindu Law) he has alienated the interests of his sons who are not insolvents, no order of the Insolvency Court under S. 54 can get back from the alienee and vest in the Official Receiver the interests of persons, who have not been adjudicated.

The question as to the father's powers to alienate family property for the discharge of antecedent debts and the provisions enacted in S. 28-A vesting such a power in the Official Receiver is wholly irrelevant for the consideration of the question. AIR 1935 Mad 246, Approved; A I R 1937 Mad 791, AIR 1943 Mad 303 held not good law. 1954 Mad W N 880 : I L R (1955) Mad 1039 : (1954) 2 M L J 755 : 67 Mad L W 1064 : AIR 1955 Mad 51 (52, 53) (Prs 6, 10) (DB).

——Ss. 53 and 2 (1) (f) — 'Any transfer' means transfer recognised by general law—Court must look to substance and not to form. A I R 1955 N U C (Mad) 3144.

——S. 53—Scope — Malabar tarwad—Right of member to maintenance — Surrender deed surrendering right — Transfer of property — Insolvent Karnavan giving up right in property for liquidated sum of Rs. 75/- per month and residence and Devaswam perquisites — Not only accruing allowance but also accumulated arrears given up — What is transferred by surrender deed is the property of the insolvent within the meaning of S. 2 (d) and not merely right to future maintenance. AIR 1955 N U C (Mad) 3144.

——S. 53 — Scope — Father adjudged insolvent — Share of son — If affected.

The question whether a Hindu father as the manager of the family has the right to alienate the son's share for a binding debt is not quite relevant in considering whether he alone was a transferor within the meaning of S. 53 of the Act. The mere fact that the father has got such a power does not imply that he is purporting to exercise that power in any given case.

Where a document of transfer is executed not only by the Hindu father but by the son as well and the fact that the son is a minor and is represented by the father does not make the transfer effected by the father as the managing member of the family, the circumstance that the son also is a party to the document shows that the father alone is not the transferor so as to render the whole document voidable as against the receiver. In such a case it is only the transfer effected by the father who is adjudged an insolvent, that can be annulled and the share of the minor son will be unaffected : AIR 1935 Mad 246 ; AIR 1944 Mad 233 ; AIR 1945 Mad 253 and AIR 1937 Mad 791, Dissented from. 1953 Mad W N 948 : AIR 1954 Mad 431 (432) (Prs 9, 12, 13).

——Ss. 53 and 54 — Annulment of transfers under these sections not identical.

The approach to a solution of the problem presented when a transfer is annulled under S. 53 as distinguished from annulment under S. 54 is not identical. 1962 Nag L J (Notes) 32.

3. Good faith.

——S. 53 — Travancore (Insolvency) Regulation (8 of 1090), S. 35—'Good faith'—Factors to be considered.

It is settled law that it is not necessary in annulment proceedings under S. 53 to prove that the transferor who has been subsequently adjudged an insolvent should have been honest and straightforward in the matter of the transaction impeached. Even if the transferor was wanting in bona fides the crucial question still remains to be answered. Unless it is found that the transferee was wanting in bona fide in respect of the transaction in question, he cannot be affected by the dishonest course of conduct of the transferor. Subramania Iyer v. Official Receiver. 1958 Mad W N (SC) 1 : 1958 Ker L J 17 : 1958 S C J 172 : 1958 S C R 257 : 1958 Ker L T 1195 : AIR 1958 S C 1 (9) (Pt D) (Pr 10).

——S. 53 — Travancore (Insolvency) Regulation (8 of 1090), S. 35 — Good faith—Test—Travancore General Clauses Act—Indian General Clauses Act — (Travancore (Insolvency) Regulation (8 of 1108), S. 53) — (General Clauses Act (1897), S. 3 (22)) — (United State of Travancore and Cochin Interpretation and General Clauses Act (7 of 1925), S. 2 (6)).

The Travancore General Clauses Act (2 of 1072) (1897), in Cl. (6) of S. 2 provides that 'Nothing is said to be done or believed in good faith which is done or believed without due care and attention'. The definition of 'good faith' in the Indian General Clauses Act (10 of 1897) is in these terms : 'A thing shall be deemed to be done in good faith where it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not'. The test of good faith as laid down in the law (viz , the General Clauses Act, 1897) generally applicable to Indian Statutes is more appropriate to proceedings under the insolvency law and not the test of good faith as laid down in the Travancore General Clauses Act, 1125, which is the same as found in the Act of 1072. For, it cannot be said that the definition of 'good faith' as contained in the Travancore General Clauses Act of 1125 must apply in the same sense to every piece of legislation to which it may apply irrespective of the subject or the contest. The Travancore Insolvency Regulation is on the same lines as the Provincial Insolvency Act and therefore must be understood in the same sense. If that is the correct approach to the law of insolvency, a secured creditor who has advanced money to a debtor honestly, even though he may not have taken all due precautions, would not come within the mischief of S. 35. Subramania Iyer v. Official Receiver, 1958 Mad W N (S C) 1 : 1958 Ker L J 17 : 1958 S C J 172 : 1958 S C R 257 : 1958 Ker L T 1195 : AIR 1958 S C 1 (9) (Pt F) (Pr 10).

——S. 53 — Annulment of transfer — Test — Intention of transferee.

The test to determine whether the transaction is liable to be annulled under S. 53 would be the intention of the transferee. Once a finding is reached that the transfer was for no consideration or without consideration an inference of want of bona fides would normally follow and the transfer ought to be annulled. 1962 Nag L J (Notes) 32.

——S. 53 — 'Good faith' — What is.

If it was within the knowledge of the transferees that the transferor was in insolvent circumstances at the time of the sale and there was pressure from his creditors for the payment of the moneys due to them and transferees purchased from him his entire stock-in-trade and assets without making any substantial contemporaneous payment and without undertaking to make any such payment in future in order that he might be able to continue his business so that he would be in a position to pay off his creditors, it would be very difficult to hold that the transfer was one entered into in good faith : ILR 19 Cal 223 (P C), Foll. 35 Mys L J 274 : 1957 Knt L J 86 : ILR (1957) Mys 147 : (1958) 2 Lab L J 613 : AIR 1958 Mys 35 (38) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

——S. 53 — Good faith — Test to decide.

The true test with respect to good faith of a transferee is not as to the honesty on the part of the transferee to discharge the obligations standing against the transferor. The true test is as to whether the transferee at the time of taking the transfer did or did not honestly know that the transferor was so heavily burdened with debts that there was no property left for him, more than what was needed, to discharge his obligations towards his creditors ; if the transferee honestly knew that the properties were more than the obligations standing against the transferor, he may possibly prove that there was no bad faith on the part of the transferee.

If, however, there are indications sufficient to prove that the transferee had the knowledge that the debts standing against the transferor were more than the property owned by the transferor, then in those circumstances it cannot be said that the transferee, when taking the transfer, was acting in good faith. The transfer in that case may be proved to have been entered into by the transferee in collusion with the transferor to screen the properties from the reach of the creditors. ILR 34 Pat 440 : AIR 1955 Pat 458 (467) (Pt G) (Pr 24) (DB).

——Ss. 53 and 54 — Applicability — Tests — S. 54, if controls S. 53 — Transfer in consideration of pre-existing debt.

The true test whether S. 53 applies to a transaction or not is not whether the transferee is not the creditor of the insolvent but whether the transferee creditor is proved not to have acted in good faith. The creditor's good faith will afford a complete answer to an application under S. 53 and the burden is on the Receiver to establish the absence of good faith on the part of the creditor. There is nothing either in S. 53 or S. 54 to justify the construction that the provisions of S. 54 which are meant to meet the specific case of the debtor's fraudulent act controls in any way the general provisions of S. 53 or that the latter section makes any exception in favour of the creditors. Transfer in favour of a creditor in consideration of a pre-existing debt is as much subject to the provisions of S. 53 as any other transfer provided that the conditions laid down in that section have been fulfilled. AIR 1952 Sau 47 (48) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 53 — Good faith — Transferee's good faith alone if sufficient.

The expression "in good faith" does not contemplate that both parties to the transaction should act in good faith. Good faith on the part of the transferee is alone required. 1950 Ker L T 573 : 1950 T C L R 707 : AIR 1951 Tra-Co 55 (61) (Pt B) (Prs 15, 20) (DB).

——S. 53 — Good faith — Mortgagee advancing Rs. 75,000 on mortgage — Mortgagor in embarrassed circumstances at time of mortgage — No proper enquiry regarding general financial condition of mortgagor made by mortgagee though there were materials to put mortgagee on enquiry — Mortgage held was not one made in good faith. 1950 Ker L T 573 : 1950 T C L R 707 : AIR 1951 Trav-Co 55 (63) (Pt F) (Pr 25) (DB).

——S. 53—Fraudulent transfer—Threat of legal proceeding.

A threat of legal proceeding to a person in hopelessly involved condition is no genuine pressure at all so as to make a transfer, which otherwise appears fraudulent, a bona fide transfer. 1950 Ker L T 573 : 1950 T C L R 707 : AIR 1951 Trav-Co 55 (70) (Pt J) (Pr 43) (DB).

4. "For valuable consideration".

——S. 53 — "Valuable consideration", meaning of — Gift for 'obedience and submission' to donor is not transfer for valuable consideration — Contract Act, S. 2 (d).

A valuable consideration, in the sense of the law, may consist either in some right, interest, profit or benefit accruing to the one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss or responsibility, given, suffered, or undertaken by the other. The obedience and submission to donor referred to in the deed of gift might be a motive or ground for the gift in favour of the donee; but the obedience and submission cannot be said to have been suffered by her as a consideration for the gift. (1875) 10 Exch 153, Rel. on.

It is well settled that a transfer in consideration of natural love and affection is not a transfer for consideration within the meaning of S. 2, Contract Act. In law a consideration in a contract for sale, as in all other contracts under the Contract Act, must be a good and valuable consideration. Therefore, a meritorious or a gratuitous consideration such as natural love and affection or obedience and submission by way of respect or love may at best be a meritorious or a gratuitous consideration and in no case can be a good consideration or valuable consideration. AIR 1929 Pat 591; (1758) 28 E R 647, Rel. on. ILR 34 Pat 440 : AIR 1955 Pat 458 (461) (Pt A) (Pr 10) (DB).

——S. 53—"Valuable consideration"—Acceptance of liability by donee.

The mere acceptance of the liability on the part of the donee to discharge the debts of the donor and to maintain him till his lifetime out of the income and profits of the properties transferred to her does not amount in any way in law to a valuable consideration and satisfies the condition of 'quid pro quo'. (1888) 20 Q B D 732; (1908) 2 K B 169, Disting; AIR 1925 Oudh 28; AIR 1917 Mad 102, Doubted

Anything done or to be done by a universal donee under a transfer in the form of the mere management of the properties transferred so as to save them from the liabilities standing against the transferor at the time of transfer cannot in law amount to a valuable consideration as contemplated by the expression 'quid pro quo' or within the meaning of S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act.

The obligation, therefore, in law arising under S. 128, T. P. Act against a universal donee is not a valuable consideration at all for the transfer made to the donee. ILR 34 Pat 440 : AIR 1955 Pat 458 (464 to 466) (Pt E) (Prs 18, 21, 22) (DB).

5. Transfer in favour of wife.

——Ss. 53, 4—Insolvent gifting away properties to his wife—Properties gifted given by way of security by the husband insolvent in an execution case against him—No inference that the gift deed was not genuine could be drawn from the fact unless it was proved that the properties were given in security within the knowledge of the wife and that she took no objection to it despite her knowledge. ILR (1964) Cut 274.

——Ss. 53 and 4 — Gift of property by husband in favour of his wife—Wife taking no steps for mutation in her name — Husband declared insolvent subsequently — No inference about benami character of gift transaction could be drawn merely from such non-mutation or from payment of municipal taxes and rent of the property through her husband. ILR (1964) Cut 274.

6. Transfer from insolvent's transferee.

——S. 53 — Transfer from insolvent's transferee—Right to challenge.

An alienation in favour of a transferee from the transferee of an insolvent cannot be challenged by the Official Receiver under S. 53. It can be challenged if at all only under S. 4 and in order to make the decision binding, the transferee from the transferee must be made a party to these proceedings. If the transferee from the transferee establishes that he is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the Insolvency proceedings, the transaction in his favour will have to be upheld. 1959 Ker L T 93 : 1959 Ker L J 78 : ILR (1959) Ker 803.

——S. 53—Scope—Transfer set aside — Effect of, on rights of transferee from insolvent's transferee.

If a transfer is set aside under S. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, it becomes ineffective only from the date of application for setting it aside, and it cannot affect the rights of transferees from the transferee prior to that date who were not made parties to the application. ILR (1955) Mad 744 : (1955) 1 M L J 322 : AIR 1956 Mad 19 (25) (Pt C) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Ss. 53, 4—Scope—Transfer from insolvent's transferee.

It cannot be said that S. 53 of the Insolvency Act does not apply to a transfer by a transferee from the insolvent. If the transfer to a transferee from the insolvent is declared invalid and not binding on the Official Receiver and if the later transfer by the transferee from the insolvent is held to form only a link in the chain of a fraudulent scheme to defraud the other creditors of the insolvent, the insolvency Court has clearly the power to annul the second transfer as not binding on the Official Receiver not only under S. 53 of the Act, but also if necessary by the exercise of its powers under S. 4. AIR 1936 Bom 176 and AIR 1938 Mad 370 and AIR 1935 All 671, Rel. on. 1957 Knt L J 86 : 35 Mys L J 274 : I L R (1957) Mys 147 : (1958) 2 Lab L J 613 : AIR 1958 Mys 35 (39) (Pt C) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 53—Applicability—Sale in favour of purchaser from transferee of insolvent—Validity of.

Where the transfer in favour of A is itself hit by S. 53 because of the absence of valuable consideration for it, then the transfer in favour of B, transferee of A, is equally hit by that section. However, this does not mean that in no case a purchaser from a transferee under a transfer made by the insolvent can in law sustain his title for the simple reason that the original transfer made by the insolvent is itself hit by S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act. He may in certain circumstances defend his title on the equitable principle of being a purchaser for value without notice. ILR 34 Pat 440 : AIR 1955 Pat 458 (467) (Pt H) (Pr 26) (DB).

——Ss. 53 and 55 (c) — Transfer from insolvent's transferee.

If the original transfer is found to be sham or fictitious the subsequent transfer must also fall with it. In a proper case it may, however, be possible to protect a subsequent transfer if it falls within the purview of S. 55 (c). With respect to transfers falling within the scope of S. 53, there is, however, no express protection clause. Even if the subsequent transfers were annulled, if it afterwards turns out the sale-proceeds of the other properties were sufficient to pay off the creditors, the transferees will have to be reinstated to their former position. If the sale did not bring in the amounts needed, subsequent transferees can at that stage step in and make good the deficit with a view to retain unhampered the transfers in their favour. ILR (1955) T C 764 : AIR 1956 Trav-Co 61 (62) (Prs 4, 5) (DB).

——S. 53 — 'Purchaser'— (T. P. Act (1882), S. 54)—(Sale of Goods Act (1930), S. 4).

The expression 'valuable consideration' as used in S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, has to be read in a manner consistent with the implication of the words 'purchaser' and 'incumbrancer' used therein along with it.

The word 'purchaser' means a 'buyer' in the ordinary commercial sense and a purchaser in the legal sense of the word. The consideration for the transfer need not be necessarily something equivalent to what is transferred under the contract, but it must be valuable consideration in the sense that there must be 'quid pro quo'. In other words, something should be paid for something. Looked at from these considerations a donee, in whose favour a gift is made for 'obedience and submission', cannot be called in law a purchaser as there is no 'quid pro quo' at all, which means that nothing passed from the side of the donee for what is given to her under the gift deed. (1879) 10 Ch D 622 ; (1888) 20 Q B D 732 ; (1908) 2 K B 169; (1871) 6 Ch A 228, Rel. on. I L R 34 Pat 440 : A I R 1955 Pat 458 (462, 463) (Pt B) (Prs 11, 14) (DB).

8. Conditions of avoiding transfer under S. 53.

——Ss. 53, 54 and 55 — Scope and effect of—Kuri security bond — Payment by paid-up subscribers to non-prized subscribers under direction of foreman—Effect of his default—(Travancore Insolvency (Amendment) Act (1108)).

Under Travancore Insolvency Act after amendment in 1108 protection was given only to payments made prior to the presentation of the petition which when applied to an administration suit would be the date of the institution of the suit. Prior to it the law protected moneys realised before the actual adjudication. The rule of relation back does not under the Travancore or Cochin Acts or under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, relate to a period anterior to the presentation of the petition. Transactions which do not come under that rule are prima facie valid unless they can be voided under some express statutory provision, e g. Ss. 53 and 54, Insolvency Act (these sections are the same under Travancore Cochin and the Provincial Insolvency Acts) or S. 53, Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The avoidance of a voluntary transfer under S. 53, Insolvency Act, is confined to cases where the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years after the date of the transfer and S. 54 covers only cases where the presentation of the petition in insolvency is within three months of the transfer.

In 1104 three plaintiffs instituted administrative suit against the foreman of a Kuri. One of the plaintiffs was appointed receiver. The receiver instituted suits against paid-up subscribers to enforce Kuri security bond. The defendants pleaded discharge effected by payment made to certain non-prized subscribers as per foreman's directions and after his death by directions of his legal heirs. The Munsif accepted the defendants' plea. The findings were confirmed by the District Court in appeal. In second appeal the concurrent findings were challenged and the validity of payments made to certain subscribers in preference to others after the default by the foreman was questioned.

Held that the Court in second appeal would not go behind the concurrent findings on the plea of discharge which was supported by registered documents and which was corroborated by formal evidence.

Held further that the relevant clause of the Kuri Vaimpu that the Kuri assets shall in the first instance be applied to discharge the liabilities of the Kuri transaction. It did not create any property interests over the said assets in favour of the non-prized subscribers or even create a charge or a trust in their favour. There was no evidence that the Kuri Vaimpu was registered. The proposition that the moment that foreman commits default to conduct the Kuri he ceases to have any authority to deal with the assets of the Kuri was unwarranted by the terms of the vaimpu. To uphold it would be to create an impossible position with respect to conduct of Kuries and to extend the rule of 'relation back' even beyond its scope and amplitude under the bankruptcy law in England or under the Presidency-Towns Insolvency Act. No doubt if the Kuri assets were alienated in such a way as to defeat or delay the non-prized or unpaid prized subscribers such alienations would be voidable at the instance of such subscribers. The law does not go beyond that. AIR 1951 Trav Co 97, Foll ; 25 Trav L J 1288, Dist. I L R (1953) Trav Co 326 : 1953 Ker L T 682 : AIR 1953 Trav-Co 321 (322) (Prs 5, 6) (DB).

9. "Voidable as against the receiver".

——S. 53 -'Voidable against the receiver'—Meaning and effect of.

A transfer of property made by an insolvent two years prior to the filing of the petition to be adjudged insolvent is only voidable. The property so transferred does not vest in the Official Receiver; but within two years the Official Receiver may apply for setting aside that sale. It is incumbent on him to establish that the sale was not in good faith and for valuable consideration. If so much is proved, it is in the discretion of the Court to annul the sale in which case it is not binding on the receiver. It follows that the sale is valid till set aside. 10. Transfer annulled—Rights of transferee.

——S. 53—Rights of transferee.

Once it has been found by the insolvency Court at the time of adjudication that the transfer was an act of insolvency then the alleged transferee can no longer contend that the transfer was not void on that ground. This principle applies not only to cases where the transfer is declared automatically void by the insolvency Court at the time of adjudication but also to a case where the Official Receiver subsequent to a debtor's adjudication makes an application under S. 53 for having a document adjudged void. The order of adjudiction is conclusive and the aggrieved third party's remedy is to prefer an appeal against the order of adjudiction. ——S. 53—Transfer annulled—Rights of transferee.

Where the consideration for the transfer annulled under S. 53 consisted of two debts one on the prior mortgage and the other on the promissory note and both the debts were discharged by the transferee, the transferee is entitled to have a charge for the mortgage amount and to rank as a secured creditor to the extent of the amount paid. But he can rank only as an ordinary creditor in respect of the amount covered by the promissory note A I R 1926 Mad 672, Foll. 1959 Ker L J 302: 1959 Ker L R 248 : AIR 1959 Ker 380 (381) (Pt C) (Pr 5) (DB).

Cash items of consideration in transfers set aside by the Insolvency Court advanced at the time of the execution of a fraudulent transfer cannot be allowed to be proved as a debt as the same are advanced for the purpose of carrying out the fraud. But when a transfer is annulled the alienee may prove just antecedent debts which existed before the fraudulent transfer but were included in the consideration therefor. Whether the alienee could rank as a secured creditor would depend upon whether the antecedent debt was itself secured or not. 1950 Ker L T 573 : 1950 T C L R 707 : A I R 1951 Trav. 11. Defence to an application under this section.

——S. 53—Defence.

It would not be open to transferees to urge a contention that out of the consideration paid to the insolvent by transferees large number of creditors were paid, as a result of a composition between the creditors and the insolvent, by way of an answer to an application under S. 53 of the Act when they had not opposed the application for the adjudication of the insolvent on that ground. 35 Mys L J 274 : 1957 Knt L J 86 : I L R (1957) Mys 147 : (1958) 2 Lab L J 613 : A I R 1958 Mys 35 (38) (Pt E) (Pr 10) (DB).

12. This section and S. 53, T. P. Act.

——Ss. 53 and 54 — Applicability — Dissolution of partnership — 'Transfer' — Dissolution to give preference to one creditor—Effect.

A suit under S. 53, T. P. Act has to be instituted on behalf of or for the benefit of all the creditors and it does not hit a transaction by which one creditor is given preference over others for which contingency proceedings will have to be had under some other law. See T. P. Act (1882), S. 53. 1960 Cr L J 1134 : AIR 1960 Punj 417.

——S. 53 — Good faith — Mortgage for pre-existing debt — Creditor aware of precarious financial position of debtor at time of mortgage — Plea of good faith, if can stand—T. P. Act (1882), S. 53.

The fact that a transfer by way of a mortgage of the only property of the debtor was made to one of the creditors, who was a relative of the debtor in consideration of pre-existing debts, (almost equal to the value of the property) even though the debtor had notice of the debtor's precarious financial circumstances may be a complete answer to a suit against the creditor under S. 53, T. P. Act. But when the creditor's good faith is questioned under S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act that the fact that he had notice of the financial position of the debtor and that he made no contemporaneous advance would be sufficient to destroy his plea of good faith even though the creditor in fact acted honestly and attempted to secure what was due to him. Such a mortgage in favour of the creditor is voidable against the receiver. 50 Mad 943, Rel. on. AIR 1939 Cal 503, Commented and not Followed. A I R 1952 Sau 47 (48, 49) (Pt B) (Prs 5, 8) (DB).

——Ss. 53, 4, 5, 28 (6) — Jurisdiction of insolvency Court to issue injunction—(Civil P. C. (1908), O. 39, R. 1).

Though an insolvency Court will not restrain mortgagee or other secured creditor in the exercise of his legal remedies under S. 28 of the Act it has jurisdiction in proper cases to restrain him under O 39, R. 1, Civil P. Upon a true construction of S. 35 of the Travancore (Insolvency) Regulation, 1090, the onus is upon the Official Receiver to prove that a conveyance which he is seeking to set aside is not made in good faith and for valuable consideration: A I R 1930 P C 265 and A I R 1931 P C 75 and AIR 1934 P C 8, Foll. An application by the Official Receiver under S. 53 for annulment of transfer can be allowed on proof either that there was no consideration for the transaction or that the consideration was so inadequate as to raise the presumption of want of good faith. Alternatively, the Receiver may also succeed on showing that though there was valuable consideration for the transaction impeached, there was want of good faith in the sense that the transferee knowing all the circumstances of the transferor who had since been adjudged an insolvent entered into the transaction with a view to screening the assets of the insolvent from the Receiver in whom the insolvent's property vests for the benefit of the creditors. Where the intention clearly is to shield the assets against the claims of creditors, though the transfer may have been for consideration, either adequate or otherwise, having been entered into with a view to defraud or delay the creditors, the transferor and the transferee sharing the common intention, the transaction must be annulled and the assets must be brought into the common hotchpot for the benefit of the insolvent's creditors. ——Ss. 53, 54 — Avoidance of transfers as fraudulent —Burden of proof — Reliance on circumstantial evidence — Duty of Court — Inference of fraudulent nature—When made — Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101-104.

In a proceeding to set aside fraudulent transfer under the Insolvency Act, the burden of proof is on the Official Receiver, but, such burden can only be discharged by showing circumstances from which strong inference can be drawn that the transfer impugned was made either mala fide or in the absence of valuable consideration. When the Official Receiver discharges the prima facie burden which lay upon him, it is for the transferee to explain the case which gives so many and so obvious grounds for suspicion, and to show that there was in fact an explanation for the transfer which the Court could deem to be satisfactory.

The fraudulent nature of the transaction in insolvency cases can scarcely ever be proved by direct evidence. The petitioning creditor or the Receiver has to rely on circumstantial evidence in most cases, and usually that is to be found only in the conduct of the parties. It is therefore more than ever the duty of the Court carefully to examine all the surrounding circumstances; and in any case if a Judge considers that the burden of proof lies on a particular party, it is incumbent on him at least to examine the facts on which that party's case is based. A I R 1938 Nag 216, Rel. on. Where a transfer challenged as fraudulent is shown to have taken place immediately after the insolvent had been served with summonses in some suits and after one or two decrees had also been passed against him, and the transfer is one of four or five transfers by which he got rid of all his immovable properties, and which had been practically admitted to be fraudulent ones, the circumstances certainly require a very full explanation by the transferee to avoid the inference of fraudulent transfer. AIR 1936 Rang 506, Rel. on. AIR 1965 Ker 156 (158, 159) (Pt A) (Prs 10, 12).

——S. 53—Good faith—Proof.

Question of determining good faith with respect to a transfer under S. 53 depends not alone on the recitals and covenants contained in it; the circumstances surrounding the transaction and the conduct of the parties at the time of and after the execution of the deed should be taken into account. The facts should be considered in relation to each other and weighed as a whole. 1959 Ker L J 302 : 1959 Ker L R 248 : A I R 1959 Ker 380 (381) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Ss. 53, 6, 27 — Transfer by insolvent challenged —Burden of proof.

The burden of proof in insolvency proceeding is not upon the transferee but is on the official receiver or the creditor who challenges the transfer. The burden is discharged as soon as it is shown that the property stood in the name of the debtor. It is then for the transferee to show that he was the real owner and the debtor was only a benamidar. 1961 Jab L J 193 : 1960 M P C 682 : 1961 M P L J 708 : AIR 1961 Madh Pra 15 (20, 21) (Pt G) (Prs 24, 25) (DB).

——Ss. 53, 4 — Gift by insolvent to his wife, challenged — Onus of proof is on receiver or assignee — Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101-104.

In insolvency proceedings the burden of proof lies on the assignee or receiver who challenges a transaction by the insolvent as a fictitious and a nominal one. AIR 1958 S C 1, Followed.

The insolvent had obtained certain properties in a partition on 28-7-48 and purchased another property on 14-10-48. All these properties were transferred by him by a deed of gift dated 16-11-48 in favour of his wife who alleged that she had accepted the gift and obtained possession of the same. The transaction was challenged by the receiver as a colourable one entered into to save the properties from the creditors, but there was no affidavit filed by the receiver, in that regard.

Held, that the onus to prove that the transaction was merely a colourable one was on the receiver and since there was no evidence laid to show that the insolvent was over head and ears in debt at the time of the transaction, no inference adverse to the insolvent could be drawn from the mere fact that the transaction in favour of the wife was entered into immediately after the properties under gift were obtained by the insolvent. ILR (1964) Cut 274.

——Ss. 53 and 4—Transfer in favour of wife — Statement made by insolvent in his cross-examination — Its admissibility against wife — Non-production of documents in party's possession—Effect — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114.

An application for enquiry under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, was made by the Receiver with a view to set aside the transfer of his property made by the insolvent in favour of his wife intended to defraud his other creditor which in this case was the Income-tax Department. The Department, a party to this enquiry, alleged that the insolvent was in heavy arrears of payment of income-tax. For this purpose, it wanted to rely on the statements made by the insolvent in his cross-examination by the counsel for the Department that there were proceedings for reassessment of his income in the states in 1940 and there was a demand against him of heavy amount of income-tax.

Held that this statement of the insolvent could not be relied upon in the absence of more direct evidence not being produced by the Department itself which had been in custody of the relevant documents. The Department could not, under these circumstances, ask the Court to accept the replies made in cross-examination of the insolvent so as to bind the wife. It was incumbent upon the Income-tax Officers to produce documentary evidence in their possession to show that there was actually a demand at or about the time when these transfers were made and that the transfers were made benami to avoid payment of tax, and in the absence of filing of these documents an adverse inference should be drawn against them and their contention should not be accepted. ——S. 53—Good faith—Onus of proof.

——S. 53 — Annulment proceedings—Finding in adjudication proceedings not res judicata — Burden of proof lying on Receiver continues — Burden when discharged.

A finding arrived at by the Insolvency Court while adjudging a person as an insolvent is not res judicata in a subsequent annulled proceeding. The burden still lies on the Receiver in the first instance, who seeks to annul the alienations, to show that the necessary ingredients of S. 53 of the Act were present. That is to say he must show that the alienations in favour of the purchaser were not made in good faith and for valuable consideration. A I R 1958 S C 1, Rel. on.

Held, on facts that the Receiver had discharged the initial burden that lay on him to show that the alienations were not made in good faith and for valuable consideration. The very fact that all the properties of the insolvents were alienated by six sale deeds executed on two successive dates, though possession was not delivered to the alienees, leads to the reasonable conclusion that the main object was to screen the property from the clutches of the creditors by transferring them in the name of friends, relatives and co-villagers of the insolvents. Moreover the alienees in respect of the transactions were fully aware that the genuineness of the transactions was objected to by the creditors and they never took the precaution of paying the consideration money to the creditors, instead of to the insolvent, though it was recited in the sale deeds that the alienations were made for the purpose of discharging debts. I L R (1962) Cut 484 : 28 Cut L T 343 : A I R 1963 Orissa 37 (38, 39) (Prs 4, 8).

Held that as a result of the order of adjudication other creditors would be able to make an application under S. 53 or 54 of the Act and that would very prejudicially affect the right of the person who was said to be the creditor to whom fraudulent preference was given. He was therefore a person aggrieved by the order of adjudication and had a right to appeal. ILR (1958) 8 Raj 221 : AIR 1958 Raj 223 (224) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

19. Scope of enquiry—Duty of Court.

——Ss. 53, 28 (2) and (5) — Scope — Gift deed by insolvent of sir land in favour of son prior to adjudication — Land not liable to attachment and sale in view of S. 155, M. P. Land Revenue Code — Annulment of transfer — Inquiry—If barred under S. 53.

An insolvent had executed a deed of gift in favour of his son of certain sir land prior to his adjudication in 1955. There was an orange garden on the land yielding a substantial income. A creditor applied under S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act for annulment of transfer. The application was dismissed on the ground that the property was not liable to attachment and sale by virtue of the bar under S. 155, M. P. Land Revenue Code :

Held, that the bar of attachment and sale created by S. 155, M. P. Land Revenue Code is a bar which is in derogation of the normal right of a creditor to realise his debts out of the properties of his debtor, and therefore that bar must be strictly construed. When S. 155 refers to any land, it cannot possibly apply to the income or usufruct of that land, and therefore to the extent that the orange garden yields an income from its crop, a receiver could be appointed.

To that extent, therefore, that part of the property of the insolvent would under the provisions of S. 28 (2) read with S. 28 (5) of the Provincial Insolvency Act vest in the Insolvency Court and an inquiry under S. 53, so far as the gift deed is concerned is not barred. 49 M L J 244; A I R 1925 P C 176, Applied. 1960 Nag L J 341 : A I R 1960 Bom 477 (478) (Prs 3, 4).

——S. 53—Fraudulent sale—Evidence—Non-payment of consideration—Intention of parties — Inadequacy of consideration—Doctrine of 'lucky purchase'—(T. P. Act (1882), Ss. 53 and 54).

Specific evidence of a convincing nature must be adduced to show that a sale deed reciting the payment of consideration was really executed for no consideration and that no consideration was intended to be paid. No doubt, a piece of evidence tending to show that will be the recital of the receipt of the consideration when no consideration has, as a matter of fact, been paid as recited. But such a recital will not be conclusive. A Court has to go into the whole evidence and come to its own conclusion. It will be inadvisable for Courts to apply the doctrine of inadequate consideration proving fraud by shocking the conscience of the Court where there is no evidence as to the real worth of property. It is better to apply in such cases the doctrine of 'lucky purchaser' adumbrated in some cases. Often the 'lucky purchaser' gets a property for less than 1/4th its value. That, by itself, will not prove any fraud. Only, a careful scrutiny should be made of the circumstances to see whether the purchaser is a 'lucky purchaser' or a 'fraudulent purchaser'. 1957 Mad W N 483 : (1957) 2 Mad L J 414 : A I R 1957 Mad 630 (630) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 53, 55 —Amendment of assignment — Transferee of assignee not made party — His title will not be affected.

A had assigned the plaint property to his brother B. On A's adjudication as insolvent the Official Receiver applied under S. 53 for annulment of the assignment, and on such annulment sold the property to C. Even before the motion of annulment B had transferred that property to D and though D had come into possession thereof he was not made a party to the annulment proceedings. In the suit filed by C for recovery of property from D, the transfer to D by B was found to be bona fide for value and without notice of the insolvency proceedings against A.

Held, that the assignment in favour of B was valid till it was annulled and B was therefore competent to transfer the property till annulment. The transfer made by him to D was therefore valid in law and D's title could not be affected by the motion of the Official Receiver to annul the title of B to which proceedings D was made no party. ——S. 53—Transfer of property by A to B—In insolvency proceedings against A, Official Receiver impugning such transfer — Transfer set aside by order of Court — At private auction held by Official Receiver for realisation of insolvent's assets C becoming purchaser of the property—Suit by C—Concurrent findings by lower Courts that though the order of Court setting aside the transfer did not bind transferee from B being no party to the order, the transfer was nominal or fictitious transaction — Held it could not be contended on behalf of transferee from B that under the insolvency law, the Official Receiver alone could impeach a transfer by the insolvent and that the plaintiff who was but an assignee from him, was not competent to do so, as the plaintiff could allege grounds and seek a declaration that defendant transferee had obtained no title, because his predecessor-in-interest himself had derived none under the transfer and could not convey any—This was the effect of the concurrent findings that the transfer was sham and inoperative. 1962 Ker L J 3 : (1962) 1 Ker L R 139 : AIR 1963 Ker 176 (177) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

——Ss. 53 and 54—Scope and effect of—Mortgage by debtor set aside as partially void and fraudulent preference — Mortgagees if can prove for debt as unsecured creditors—Member of joint Hindu family — Liability of — If can be enforced in insolvency proceedings.

Though a mortgage deed is annulled under Ss. 53 and 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act as not fully supported by consideration and as intended to be a fraudulent preference of some creditors over others, the mortgagee thereunder could rely on the debts included in the mortgage deed and prove those debts in insolvency as an unsecured creditor.

In order to prevent a person who has been a party to a fraudulent transaction from pleading his own fraud, the intended fraud must have been effected or there must have been a substantial part-performance of the intention to defraud and a mere fraudulent intention evidenced by the transaction is not sufficient. The mortgagee need not plead any fraud for proving the debts as for proving the mortgage. The debts included in the mortgage deed can be dissociated from the security.

The law undoubtedly is that a person liable for debts merely on the ground that he is a member of a joint family and that the debts are payable by the joint family cannot be adjudicated an insolvent for those debts, and those debts cannot be proved in his insolvency and will have only to be allowed for in a partition suit brought by the purchasers of the other share or shares (for example by the proving creditors who have purchased the minor coparceners' shares). But there are undoubtedly circumstances which will make such persons personally liable for the debt, such as his being a member of a trading firm and holding himself as a partner, and the debts being contracted for that trade. There is no need to wait then for a partition suit for allowing such debts which can be proved in the insolvency of the person who had made himself personally liable for the debts in addition to being liable for them from out of his share in the joint family properties. 64 Mad L W 438 : (1951) 2 M L J 32 : AIR 1952 Mad 504 (2) (507) (Pt C) (Pr 12) (DB).

1. Scope and applicability.

——S. 54 — Sale proceeds of sale earmarked for payment of debits for which pressure was the greatest — Transfer can be impugned under Insolvency Law and not under S. 53. See Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 53. AIR 1963 S C 1150.

——S. 54—Applicability.

In order to be governed by S. 25A (1), Cl. (b) of the Madras Act an order imposing liability and sought to be amended should be a decree. An order passed on an application made to the Insolvency Court under Ss. 53 and 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act does not come within the definition of 'decree.'

The decision can only be an order and since it is only decrees that can be amended under S. 19, Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, an order falling outside it cannot come under S. 25A (1) (b) of the said Madras Act. See Debt Laws — Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 25-A (1) (b). (1958) Andh L T 896.

——Ss. 54 and 53 — Annulment of transfers under these sections are not identical.

The approach to a solution of the problem presented when a transfer is annulled under S. 53 as distinguished from annulment under S. 54 is not identical. 1962 Nag L J (Notes) 32.

——S 54—Applicability — Transfer under S. 231, Companies Act.

It is payments which fall within the mischief of S. 54 that are referred to as a fraudulent preference in S. 231 of the Companies Act (1913). Where transfers were not within three months preceding the date of winding of application, there is no scope for the operation of the provisions of S. 231, Companies Act. 58 Cal W N 545 : AIR 1955 Cal 338 (340) (Pt A) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

——Ss. 54, 6 (c) — Fraudulent preference alleged as act of insolvency — Court is competent to determine it under S. 6. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 6 (c). AIR 1961 Madh Pra 15 (DB).

——S. 54—Interpretation — Value of English decisions — (Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (1909), S. 56).

The insolvency law is one borrowed from England, and, the language of the Indian enactment being in terms of the corresponding English statute, English decisions on the interpretation of the terms of the enactment can be safely applied to cases arising in India under S. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and S. 56 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. 68 Mad L W 720 : (1955) 2 M L J 441 : ILR (1956) Mad 505 : AIR 1956 Mad 33 (37) (Pt A) (Pr 13A) (DB).

——S. 54 — Scope—Sale by Hindu father on his own behalf and on behalf of two minor sons — Adjudication of father as insolvent — Setting aside of sale — Effect of — What passes to alienee.

On the adjudication of an insolvent what vests in the Official Receiver is the interest of the insolvent and when a transaction entered into by the father of a joint Hindu family not merely in his own behalf but on behalf of others (here two minor sons) who are not adjudicated and whose property does not vest in the Official Receiver is set aside, what vests in the Official Receiver as the result of such setting aside is merely the interest of the insolvent father and not that of the non-insolvents. In so far as the insolvent's share of the property is involved in the alienation, the Official Receiver would get it back when the alienation is set aside, but if under the power vested in the insolvent father under the general law he alienated the interests of his sons who were not insolvents and were minors, no order of the Insolvency Court under S. 54, Provincial Insolvency Act, could get back from the alienee and vest in the Official Receiver the interest of persons who had not been adjudicated. The power vested in the Official Receiver for discharging antecedent debts of fathers enacted in S. 28-A is irrelevant for consideration of a question like the one here where the father instead of the Official Receiver had sold the properties on his own and his sons' behalf.

——S. 54 — Transfer executed with a view to defeat claims of creditors—It is an act of insolvency affording cause of action to file a petition under S. 9. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 6. AIR 1963 Mys 257.

——Ss. 54, 6, 53 — Distinction between and scope of inquiries under indicated. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 6. AIR 1955 Pat 413 (DB).

——Ss. 54, 53 — Applicability — Tests — S. 54, if controls S. 53 — Transfer in consideration of pre-existing debt.

There is nothing either in S. 53 or S. 54 to justify the construction that the provisions of S. 54 which are meant to meet the specific case of the debtor's fraudulent act controls in any way the general provisions of S. 53 or that the latter section makes any exception in favour of the creditor's transfer in favour of a creditor in consideration of a pre-existing debt is as much subject to S. 53 as any other transfer provided that the conditions laid down in that section are fulfilled. AIR 1952 Sau 47 (48) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Ss. 54, 6 (b), 53—Act of insolvency.

Where the circumstances of a case leave no room for doubt that the transactions were resorted to by the debtor with a view to defeat his creditors that would be an act of insolvency. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 6 (b). AIR 1954 Trav-Co 419 (DB).

——Ss. 54, 53 and 55 — Protection order — Position before and after Travancore Insolvency Amendment Act (1108) — Rule of relation back — Avoidance of transactions under Ss. 53 and 54 and T. P. Act, S. 53 — Kuri security bond — Payment by paid-up subscribers to non-prized subscribers under direction of foreman after his default — Under Travancore Insolvency Act after amendment in 1108 protection was given only to payments made prior to the presentation of the petition which when applied to an administration suit would be the date of the institution of suit. Prior to it the law protected moneys realised before the actual adjudication. The rule of relation back does not under the Travancore or Cochin Acts or under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, relate to a period anterior to the presentation of the petition. Transactions which do not come under that rule are prima facie valid unless they can be avoided under some express statutory provision. AIR 1953 Trav-Co 321 (DB).

——S. 54—Applicabllity.

Once the consideration is found to be real and not illusory the transfer goes outside the scope of S. 53 whether or not it will come under S. 54. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 53. AIR 1954 Vind Pra 11.

2. Evidence and burden of proof.

——Ss. 54, 53—Avoidance of transfers as fraudulent—Burden of proof—Reliance on circumstantial evidence—Duty of Court—Inference of fraudulent nature — When made — Burden is on the Official Receiver — After he discharges this burden it is for the transferee to explain the case—Fraudulent nature of transaction can be shown by circumstantial evidence —Court should examine carefully all the surrendering circumstances—Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101-104— See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 53. AIR 1965 Ker 156.

——S. 54—Burden of proof—Fraudulent intention—Onus.

The burden of proving fraudulent motive on the part of the debtor naturally falls on the receiver who tries to annul the transfer. AIR 1954 Vind Pra 11 (12) (Pt C) (Pr 10).

3. Fraudulent preference.

——S. 54 (1)—Creditor if includes secured creditor —Transfer of hypothecated and unhypothecated items to secured creditor—Fraudulent preference—Sale if can be split up.

A secured creditor, no doubt, is not a creditor within the meaning of S. 54.

But where the property transferred to the secured creditor under a single transaction consists of hypothecated and unhypothecated items, the deed of transfer cannot be separated into two transactions one dealing with items in respect of which the vendees held the position of secured creditors and the other dealing with items which were not hypothecated to them from before. The entire sale deed must stand or fall as a fraudulent preference. 1950 All W R 315 : AIR 1950 All 479 (480) (Pr 7).

——S. 54—Ex parte decree for maintenance obtained by aged and blind mother against son—Charge on family properties—Son adjudicated insolvent—Application to set aside decree—Maintainability.

One G was adjudicated as insolvent in 1953. His mother, who was an old and blind woman aged about seventy years filed a suit in 1952 against G for her maintenance which she was entitled to obtain from out of the family properties. The suit was decreed ex parte and a charge was created on the family properties in respect of the decree amount. The Official Receiver having filed an application under S. 54, Pro. Ins. Act to set aside the decree on the ground that it was collusive and intended to defraud the general body of creditors :

Held (1) that it being common knowledge that a mother is entitled to be maintained out of the family properties enjoyed by her son and that the family properties could be charged for ensuring the payment of that maintenance the burden was heavily on the Official Receiver to establish that S. 54 applied to the case and that the maintenance decree could be struck down as a fraudulent preference; (2) that the passing of the decree for maintenance itself could not be claimed to be collusive; (3) that the creation of a charge on entire family properties for the payment of maintenance being recognised by the law it could not be said that the maintenance-holder had been unduly preferred and the mere fact that G was ex parte did not by itself indicate that it was fraudulent or collusive. AIR 1960 Andh Pra 144 (145) (Pr 4).

——Ss. 54, 6 (e) — Fraudulent preference— What constitutes—Impugned transfer itself creating debt —Cannot constitute fraudulent preference — See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 6 (c). AIR 1961 Madh-Pra 15 (DB).

——S. 54—Interpretation—"With a view of giving that creditor a preference over the other creditors"—Meaning—Transfer by insolvent in favour of one creditor to save himself from imminent criminal prosecution—Transfer not fraudulent preference.

In order to determine whether a transfer is a fraudulent preference the test is to find what is it that eventually and effectually operated in the mind of the insolvent or what is the compelling force that induced him, or what is the immediate cause for the insolvent to enter into a transaction of this nature. There is only one test for understanding the meaning of "with a view", that is, if no other consideration prevailed but the only object was to prefer one creditor, then it could be said it was done voluntarily nothing else influencing his decision to make the preference. If the sole view or the only view was to prefer the creditor, then undoubtedly the transaction could not be supported. Equally the bona fides or otherwise of the preferred creditor are immaterial.

Considerations such as whether the transfer results in stifling criminal prosecution and as such against public policy under S. 23 of the Contract Act are all extraneous to the only point to be decided, viz. whether the transfer has been made with a view of giving that creditor a preference over other creditors under S. 54.

The Court must, therefore, in each case consider as a question of fact what was the real and dominant motive of the insolvent in making the payment or transfer, and, if the Court comes to the conclusion that the bankrupt's real motive was, e. g., to save himself from exposure or from a criminal prosecution, the payment or transfer is not a fraudulent preference. 68 Mad L W 720 : (1955) 2 M L J 441: ILR (1956) Mad 505 : AIR 1956 Mad 33 (37, 40, 41) (Pt B) (Prs 14, 29, 30, 32) (DB).

—S. 54—Applicability—Fraudulent preference—What is.

Where a decree-holder for Rs. 30,000 who has expended a great deal of money in obtaining decrees is rather blatantly disregarded and preference given to the simple creditors to pay whom a transfer of property is effected by the insolvents, the transfer is fraudulent preference within the scope of S. 54. (1953) 2 M L J 303 : AIR 1954 Mad 93 (93) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——S. 54—Transfers pursuant to prior agreement—Validity.

Transfers pursuant to prior agreements are held valid where the agreements are made contemporaneously with the advance of the loan or with the debtor incurring obligation in any other manner and not where the debtor transfers the whole or a substantial portion of his properties to a creditor for the purpose of securing payment of a past debt which act itself might or would constitute an act of insolvency.

Further, it is only transfers given in performance of a prior valid agreement that would take the transfer beyond the purview or the mischief of the Insolvency law. 1950 Ker L T 573 : 1950 T C LR 707 : AIR 1951 Tra-Co 55 (66, 67) (Pt I) (Prs 34, 37) (DB).

4. Intention to prefer.

——S. 54—Fraudulent preference—Dominant motive to prefer.

In order that a transfer may be avoided as a fraudulent preference the law requires that the dominant motive with which the transfer is effected was to prefer the creditor in whose favour the transfer is made. 1950 Ker L T 573 : 1950 T C L R 707 : AIR 1951 Tra-Co 55 (68) (Pt H) (Pr 33) (DB).

——S. 54—Intention to prefer—Proof of—Test.

For the applicability of S. 54 the most important test is the state of mind of the debtor-transferor. Obviously every creditor of an embarrassed debtor will be anxious to get a preference; to penalise that would be futile. On the other hand, the motive of the debtor is to be examined to ascertain whether he is actuated by the substantial and dominant motive of preferring this creditor and depriving others of the benefit of rateable distribution of the assets thus transferred.

Another form of the same test is whether the circumstances show that there was a real pressure brought to bear on the debtor by the creditor and whether he was acting under that pressure.

Thus where the mortgage in question was created on pressure by the creditor to replace a security given under an agreement made at the very inception of their business dealings and the dominant intention of the debtor was not to give any undue advantage to creditor nor was he voluntarily making a transfer.

Held, that the mortgage was not fraudulent preference as defined under S. 54. AIR 1954 Vind Pra 11 (12, 13) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 18).

5. "Within three months."

——Ss. 54, 9 (1) (c), 53 — Date of transfer is date of registration and not date of execution of transfer deed — Fiction of relation back does not apply — Registration Act (1908), Ss. 47 and 75. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 9 (1) (c). AIR 1962 Andh Pra 226 (DB).

——Ss. 54, 9 (1) (c), 6 (b)— Transfer in favour of one creditor — Registration after three weeks — Date of transfer—(Registration Act (1908), S. 47).

As a transfer does not become effective till the document was registered, the date of registration should be regarded as the date of transfer. The transfer cannot be anti-dated by operation of S. 47 of the Registration Act for the purposes of S. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. AIR 1938 Mad 801, Foll. Further, having regard to the terms of Ss. 60 and 61, Regn. Act, the registration is complete only after the certificate of registration is signed, sealed and dated by the Registrar and the registration cannot date back to the date of the presentation of the document. 1956 Andh W R 339 : AIR 1957 Andh Pra 535 (536) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 6).

——S. 54 — 'Date of transfer' — Date of registration is date of transfer and not the date of execution. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 28 (7). AIR 1954 Mad 93.

——S. 54—"Date of transfer"—Meaning of.

In the expression 'the date thereof' in S. 54 the word 'thereof' relates to 'transfer' so that time must be computed not from the date which the instrument bears, but from the date when the instrument becomes effective as a transfer. Where the law enjoins that before a transfer can be effective, the document in question must be registered, the transfer would become complete in the eye of law only on the date the document is registered. Hence, if the date of the execution or the document is different from the date on which it is registered then the date on which it is registered shall constitute the starting point for the computation of time.

In the case of compulsorily registered documents S. 75, Registration Act, provides that registration shall take effect from the time when the document was first duly presented for registration. It follows that in such cases the time must be computed from the date of the presentation of the document for registration. 58 Mad 166 and (1938) 2 M L J 362, Rel. on. 6. "Void."

● ——Ss. 54, 28 — Scope — Transfer of property — Transfer stands valid till annulled — Exercise of rights by transferee is in accordance with law —

Assuming that when an order is made under S. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act annulling a transfer (transfer of a decree in this case), the transfer stands annulled as from the date it was made, even so, the transfer stands till it is annulled and therefore, till then, the transferee has all the rights in the property transferred. So long as the transferee has such rights he is competent to exercise then and such exercise would be legal and fully in accordance with law. Sub-ss. (2) and (7) of S. 28 cannot have the effect of vesting the property in the receiver till its transfer has been annulled. Even where the order of adjudication is based on an act of insolvency constituted by a transfer of property found to be a fraudulent preference, the transfer stands till it is set aside. A separate order annulling the transfer would be necessary even in such a case. 1960 S C J 128 : (1960) 1 M L J (S C) 41 : (1960) 1 Andh W R (S C) 41 : (1960) 1 S C R 616 : AIR 1960 S C 70 (72, 73) (Pt A) (Prs 11, 13, 18).

——Ss. 54, 34, 53—Mortgage declared void — Effect on debt.

The mere fact that a mortgage is declared void under Ss. 53 and 54 does not make the debt included in it void. Though the mortgage deed is annulled under Ss. 53 and 54 the mortgagee thereunder can rely on the debt included in the mortgage deed and prove the debts in insolvency as an unsecured creditor— The mortgagee deed not plead any fraud for proving these debts as for proving the mortgage. 64 Mad L W 438 : (1951) 2 Mad L J 32 : AIR 1952 Mad 504 (2) (507) (Pt C) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Ss. 54, 75, 9 and 53 — Who may appeal —Person aggrieved—Who is.

As a result of order of adjudication other creditors would be able to make an application under S. 53 or S. 54 and that would very prejudicially affect the right of the person who was said to be the creditor to whom fraudulent preference was given. He was therefore a person aggrieved by the order of adjudication and had a right to appeal. ILR (1958) 8 Raj 221 : AIR 1958 Raj 223 (224) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——S. 54-A — Right to apply — Receiver not appointed — Non-scheduled creditor if can apply for annulment.

The right of the creditor to move the Court under the section does not fall within the purview of O. 22, Rr. 3 and 4, Civil P. ——S. 55—Protection to bona fide payments.

Section 55 is concerned with the validity of payments made by or to insolvents by persons who do so bona fide. The proviso makes provision for taking out of the protection of the substantive part of the section payments and transactions which would not be bona fide, the test of bona fides being knowledge of the presentation of a petition. The knowledge which the section postulates would necessarily be actual knowledge. The constructive notice which S. 19 (2) postulates would be wholly an insufficient basis depriving a person of the protection afforded by S. 55. 1958 Mad W N 388 : 71 Mad L W 367 : (1958) 1 Mad L J 424 : AIR 1958 Mad 486 (487) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

——Ss. 55 (c) and 53 — Transfer from insolvent's transferee.

If the original transfer is found to be sham or fictitious the subsequent transfer must also fall with it. In a proper case it may however be possible to protect a subsequent transfer if it falls within the purview of S. 55 (c). ILR (1955) T.C 764 : AIR 1956 Trav-Co 61 (62) (Prs 4, 5) (DB).

Under Travancore Insolvency Act after amendment in 1108 protection was given only to payments made prior to the presentation of the petition which when applied to an administrative suit would be the date of the institution of suit. Prior to it law protected moneys realised before the actual adjudication. The rule of relation back does not under the Travancore or Cochin Acts or under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, relate to a period anterior to the presentation of the petition. Transactions which do not come under that rule are prima facie valid unless they can be avoided under some express statutory provision. In order that the property of insolvent should vest in the receiver it is essential that the the insolvent should have an interest in praesenti to dispose of the same. The power of disposition must be unconditional. Where according to the provident fund rules of the company, the member has no disposing power over his fund except under certain conditions and the members cannot compel the trustees to make payments of the fund upon the insolvency of the member the Court or receiver cannot remove the trustees from the custody of the same as enjoined by the proviso to S. 56 (3). A Court sale of insolvent's property at the instance of an unsecured creditor is void if the sale has been conducted after the order of adjudication. In such a case it is open to the official receiver to request the Court for an order directing the auction purchaser to put the official receiver in possession of property sold under S. 4 and it is open to the Court to grant such relief under S. 56 (3). 1950 T C L R 125 : AIR 1951 Trav-Co 193 (195) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 57 (2)—Removal of official receiver—Grounds—[Hyderabad Insolvency Act, S. 58 (2)].

It is of general importance that all insolvencies should be kept within the control of the Official Receiver, unless very exceptional reasons such as reasons connected with the personality of the Official Receiver are put forward to deprive him of the control. Where no application or affidavit has been submitted to remove the official receiver assigning any special reasons, the mere statement of the Court that the creditors have complained against him that he is not acting with diligence is not enough to justify removal. ——S. 59—Sale by receiver—Sale to secured creditor —Validity.

If a secured creditor agreed to have the sale conducted free of his encumbrance so that he could realise his debt from the amount realised by sale and the receiver conducted the sale accordingly such a procedure cannot be said to be not warranted by law. If at such a sale the secured creditor offered the highest bidding and that was accepted and a sale-deed executed in his favour without any objection either from the insolvent or the other creditors, such a sale cannot be assailed on the ground that the receiver had no jurisdiction to sell the property to a secured creditor. The mere fact that the amount realised was sufficient only to satisfy the claim of the secured creditor and there was nothing available to satisfy the claims of the simple creditors cannot render the sale invalid. 1957 Ker L J 533 : 1957 Ker L T 532 : ILR (1957) Kerala 808 : AIR 1957 Ker 144 (145) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

Insolvent after discharge cannot be said to have become the owner of the property and he is not entitled to recover the possession. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 41 (2) (c). AIR 1957 All 262 (DB).

——S. 61 (6)—Applicability to all debts entered in schedule.

Section 61 (6) is intended to provide that if there is a surplus after payment of all the debts entered in the schedule then all the creditors are to be treated equally and for the deprivation during the pendency of the Court proceedings they are to be compensated at a fixed rate. The section therefore applies to all debts entered in the schedule whether there was or was no stipulation between the creditors and the debtors as regards some of the debts about payment of interest.

The words 'all debts entered in the schedule' can be interpreted only to mean that the legislature had intended that all debts so entered must carry interest at 6 per centum per annum and as the proceedings after the date of adjudication affect all the creditors in the same way there is no reason why a difference should be made between one set of creditors and another set of creditors. Held, as the insolvent firm was neither a member of the governing body nor was it one of the trustees under the Societies Registration Act, it cannot be said that the insolvent firm which at best was an ordinary member was by reason of such membership in the position of a trustee in respect of moneys belonging to the society as such. 64 Mad L W 654: 1951 Mad W N 353 : (1951) 1 M L J 548 : AIR 1951 Mad 875 (875) (Pr 2) (DB).

—S. 61 (6) — Rate of six per cent per annum mentioned in sub-section applies when insolvency is not annulled—Higher rate is admissible where adjudication of insolvency is annulled under S. 35.

After the annulment of insolvency under S. 35 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the debtor is liable to pay interest at the contract rate, and where the contract rate is usurious, at such rate as the Court thinks reasonable. Sub-s. (6) of S. 61 of the Act is applicable to cases where the order of adjudication is not annulled and the assets of the insolvent in the hands of the Receiver are found to be surplus. Section 43(2) of the Act which deals with proof of interest expressly provides that the creditor may prove for interest 'at a rate not exceeding six per cent, per annum without prejudice to the right of a creditor to receive out of the debtor's estate any higher rate of interest to which he may be entitled after all the debts proved have been paid in full.' Therefore, a creditor, where an order of annulment of insolvency is passed, is entitled to a rate of interest from the debtor in excess of six per cent per annum. —S. 61 (3)—Applicability—Interim receiver taking charge of debtor's movables kept in house belonging to stranger—Rent of premises—Priority.

In the course of the insolvency proceedings the Official Receiver was appointed an interim Receiver on 26-3-1949. He was directed to take charge of the properties of the debtor. Accordingly the Receiver took possession of some machinery belonging to the debtor kept in a rented house belonging to the appellant, locked it and sealed the premises on 29-3-1949. He was thus in possession of the premises from that date till the articles were sold. The order of adjudication was passed on 24-2-1951 :

Held, that the rent due from the date on which the interim receiver took possession of the movables and locked and sealed the premises, up to the date of the movables had to be treated as 'expenses of administration or otherwise' within the meaning of S. 61, sub-cl. (3) of the Insolvency Act.

Held further that the rent and other incidental expenses had to be deducted out of the gross proceeds of the sale in order to arrive at the net proceeds. The rent due to the appellant should, therefore, be paid out of the amount realised by the sale. 34 Mys L J 2 : ILR (1954) Mys 327 : A I R 1955 Mys 29 (30) (Prs 3, 4).

—S. 67—Devolution of property on undischarged insolvent — Insolvent obtaining absolute discharge —Suit for recovery of property thereafter—Suit held maintainable subject to conditions laid down by S. 67.

On consideration of the scheme of the Act, it is clear that an insolvent is entitled to get back any undisposed of property as surplus when an absolute order of discharge is made in his favour, subject always to the condition that if any of the debts provable under the Act have not been discharged before the order of discharge, the property would remain liable to discharge those debts and also meet the expenses of all proceedings taken under the Act till they are fully met.

There is nothing in the Act which takes away the right of the insolvent to sue in Courts after he has been granted a discharge, for he then becomes a free man. In such a situation he would certainly be entitled to sue in Court for recovery of his undisposed of property, if it is in the possession of a third party, after his discharge and such property cannot for ever remain vested in the Court or receiver. All that justice requires is that in case the conditions of S. 67 have not been fulfilled such property should be subject to those conditions.

Therefore, an insolvent on whom property devolves when he is an undischarged insolvent can maintain a suit for the recovery of the property after his absolute discharge. F. A. SECTION 68 ——Ss. 68 and 75—Sale by receiver—Power of Court to set it aside — Nature and extent of — Grounds on which the sale can be set aside — Power of High Court in revision — Question to be considered in revision.

The fact that the act of the receiver in selling properties under S. 59 (a) is subject to the control of the Court under S. 68 does not mean that the Court can arbitrarily set aside a sale decided upon by the official receiver. It is true that the Court has to look in insolvency proceedings to the interest in the first place of the general body of creditors; in the second place, to the interest of the insolvent, and lastly, where a sale has been decided upon by the official receiver to the interest of the intending purchaser in that order. Unless there are good and judicial grounds for interfering with the discretion exercised by the official receiver, a sale should not be set aside.

The jurisdiction of the High Court to interfere in revision under the proviso to S. 75 arises only if it is of opinion that the District Judge's order was not according to law.

Held on facts, that as the High Court did not consider the question whether the order of the District Judge was according to law or not the High Court had no jurisdiction to interfere with that order. The decision of the Madras High Court in C. R. P. No. 90 of 1955, dated 27-7-1956 (Mad.), Reversed. P. Srinivasa Naicker v. ——Ss. 68, Provisos, 75 (4) and 78 (1)—Delay in presenting petition under S. 68 — Application for condoning delay under S 5, Limitation Act, can be entertained — Proviso to S. 68, compared with Ss. 75 (4) and 78 (1) and with S. 48, Civil P. C. — Limitation Act (1908), S. 5.

The delay in filing an application under S. 68 for setting aside a sale held by an Official Receiver can be condoned under S. 78 (1), on an application under S. 5, Limitation Act, provided sufficient cause is shown therefor. Under the proviso to S. 68 there is no absolute prohibition against the entertainment of an application after the lapse of twenty-one days. The concept of the proviso is similar to the one underlying S. 48, Civil P. C., which embodies a rule of limitation. It follows that what is enshrined in the proviso is a period of limitation. Consequently, an application under S. 68 comes within the sweep and range of S. 78 (1) and no exception can be taken to the entertainment of the petition for the purpose of dealing with the question whether the delay can be condoned or not. Delay can be excused under S. 5, Limitation Act. ILR (1957) A P 538, Differed from. AIR 1958 Andh Pra 426; AIR 1935 Lah 60; AIR 1924 Oudh 294, Disting. ——Ss. 68, Proviso and 4 — Properties of insolvent sold by Official Receiver—Application by third party to set aside sale and claiming share in such properties—Nature of — Application not an appeal under S. 68—No question of limitation.

The petitioner, who was the mother of two insolvents, filed an application before the Insolvency Court, under Ss. 4 and 68 of the Insolvency Act, claiming a one-third share in the properties which were sold by the Official Receiver as belonging to the insolvents and for setting aside the sale. She also filed another application for condoning the delay in filing the above application. On the question whether the application purporting to be filed under Ss. 4 and 68 of the Act is exclusively an appeal under S. 68 and as such cannot be filed beyond the period of 21 days from the sale by the Official Receiver :

Held, — The petitioner has not made any claim before the Official Receiver; and even if she chose to make any such claim in respect of her interest or right to the properties sold by the Official Receiver, the Official Receiver has no right whatsoever to decide upon such claim petitions. So, the present application cannot be taken in any sense to be an appeal against the act of the Official Receiver as such. It is a case where the petitioner approached the Court to determine the question of her title, which it is competent to do only under S. 4 of the Act. As the application is not an appeal under S. 68, no question of bar of limitation will therefore arise. (1963) 1 Andh W R 70 : AIR 1963 Andh Pra 296 (297) (Prs 3, 6, 7).

——S. 68—Limitation—Limitation Act (1908), S. 5).

The section contains a mandatory provision which requires the acts of the receiver to be questioned within 21 days. Such being the case, there is no inherent power in a Court to receive a petition filed after the lapse of 21 days. AIR 1935 Lah 60, Rel. on. S. 5 of the Limitation Act cannot be extended to such application as it is not applicable to those applications. ILR 35 All 410, Rel. on. ——S. 68—Proceedings under—Applicability of O. 1, R. 10, C. P. Code.

As there is no express provision in the Act prescribing a procedure different from that laid down in the Civil P. C. or excluding the application of that procedure to proceedings under S. 68, S. 5 attracts the provision of C. P. Code. Therefore a new party may be added to an application under S. 68 if conditions laid down in O. 1, R. 10, C. P. Code are complied with. AIR 1955 N U C (Andhra) 4816.

——Ss. 68, 59 (a)—Sale—Setting aside of.

Sale by receiver without notice to petitioning creditor—Sale is irregular—Petitioning creditor offering to pay nearly fifty per cent. more than the price offered by auction-purchaser — Sale should be set aside and fresh sale ordered. See Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 59 (a). AIR 1954 Mad 79.

■ ——Ss. 68, 75 and 50—"Aggrieved person"—Insolvent's right to apply under S. 68 and appeal under S. 75—S. 50, if bars application under S. 68 — Remedies under Ss. 50 and 68, 49 Mad 461; AIR 1926 Mad 558: 94 I C 642 (FB), Overruled.

In view of the explicit and all-embracing language of Ss. 68 and 75, it cannot be maintained that the insolvent can never apply to the Court under S. 68 questioning the acts of the Official Receiver or appeal under S. 75 from an adverse order of the Court passed on such application. If there is a flagrant case of a sale by the receiver for a gross undervalue, if a sale or lease is granted secretly and without public notice for a wholly inadequate price or rental, or if a sale or lease is granted in favour of a benamidar or a person in whom the receiver is personally interested without disclosing that fact to the Court, if property on which there is no subsisting encumbrance is sold for an undervalue as if it were subject to prior encumbrances, if there is a concealment of material facts or a misrepresentation of such facts so as to prevent purchasers from having a fair idea of the real value of the property sold, if the property sold is so incorrectly described as to mislead purchasers into thinking that its value is negligible when in fact it is valuable, in cases like these, the insolvent is an "aggrieved person" and would have a remedy by way of an application to the Court under S. 68 and an appeal under S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act: AIR 1926 Mad 558 (FB), Overruled.

The remedies under Ss. 50 and 68 are different in their scope and S. 50 does not exclude the applicability of S. 68 or disable the insolvent from objecting under that section to a debt admitted by the Official Receiver. The only limitation is that the application under S. 68 must be made within 21 days of the act or decision of the receiver unlike an application under S. 50 which can be made at any time during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings.

——S. 68—Sale of property — Mistake as to encumbrance in proclamation due to error committed by Official Receiver—Property fetching low price—Sale can be set aside by Insolvency Court at instance of Official Receiver under Court's inherent powers.

An Official Receiver cannot invoke the provisions of S. 68, to have his acts or decisions reversed, or modified, by the Insolvency Court. But an Insolvency Court has inherent powers vested in it outside the provisions of S. 68, to rectify the defects, mistakes, or errors committed by an Official Receiver. It cannot be said that the Court is powerless to prevent an injury being done to the general body of creditors and the insolvent in consequence of a mistake committed by the Official Receiver in the conduct of an auction sale held by him, merely because the person who applies to the Court to have the mistake rectified is the Receiver himself and not a creditor or the insolvent.

Consequently, Official Receiver who discovers that a property has been sold under an erroneous proclamation of sale, due to an error committed by him, mentioning therein that the property was subject to an encumbrance of Rs. 7,000 while in fact the encumbrance was only up to Rs. 3,500, is entitled to have the sale set aside by an order of the Insolvency Court on the ground that owing to the said mistake the property fetched a very low price (in this case a sum of Rs. 255 only). It cannot be disputed that if the insolvent, or any of the creditors, had applied to the Court to have the sale avoided by reason of the obvious mistake committed by the Official Receiver in notifying the encumbrance to which the properties of the insolvent were subject, the Court could have set aside the sale. It does not make any difference in this case that the person that sought to have the sale set aside on the ground of an error committed is the Official Receiver himself who was responsible for the mistake and not an insolvent or a creditor or any other person aggrieved by it: AIR 1946 Mad 89; AIR 1920 Lah 361; AIR 1914 Cal 885 and 9 I C 344 (Bom), Rel. on. ——Ss. 68, Proviso and 4 — Claim-application under S. 4 on attachment of property by Receiver:— Application made more than 21 days after attachment—It is barred under Proviso to S. 68.

It is not obligatory on a stranger to apply to the Insolvency Court at all to establish his title to property, possession of which is taken by the Receiver; he can go to the ordinary Court to establish his title within the ordinary period of limitation. If, however, he does want a relief to be given to him against what he considers to be an improper act of the Receiver, he must comply with the provisions of S. 68 and take the consequences that follow with regard to the finality of the orders, as provided under Ss. 4 and 75 of the Act. Where as an effect of an order of adjudication the natural consequence indicated in S. 28 (2) flows and there is no specific order of the Court to the Receiver to take possession of the particular property in respect of which a claim application is filed under S. 4 in the Insolvency Court, the application, if made more than 21 days after the attachment by the Receiver of the property, is barred by time under the Proviso to S. 68. 65 Pun L R 184: I L R (1963) 1 Punj 557: AIR 1963 Punj 243 (245) (Pt. ——Ss. 69 (a) and (c) (ii), S. 2 (d)—'Property'—Test to determine—Lease-hold interest in land — Transfer after insolvency petition—Offence.

The term 'property' is a generic term for all that a person has dominion over. In order to determine what is 'property', the test is; whether the insolvent has a disposing power over the interest in the property or not. Where an insolvent has a lease-hold interest in a certain land, which he possessed, he having an absolute disposing power, it falls within the definition of the word 'property' under S. 2 (d) of the Act. Therefore, if he transfers this right after the filing of the insolvency application and before he is adjudged an insolvent with a view to keep it away from the list of assets which has to be placed at the disposal of the Receiver, he commits an offence as provided in S. 69 (a) and (c) (ii). ——Ss. 70, 75 — Appeal — Decision of Insolvency Court not to prosecute debtor—Receiver—If "person aggrieved"—by decision and entitled to appeal.

Neither a creditor nor the Official Receiver is a "person aggrieved" by a decision of the Insolvency Court declining to make a complaint against a debtor under S. 70 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and has no right of appeal under S. 75 (1) of the Act. 1. Applicability and scope.

—S. 75 (1) — Applicability and scope — Order appointing interim receiver — Appeal — Maintainability.

An order appointing an interim receiver affects the rights of the parties inasmuch as the receiver would be under the order entitled to take over possession of certain properties and to realise rent therefrom. Such an order can hardly be said to relate to the procedure of the court and therefore is appealable. AIR 1942 Mad 305 : (1942) 1 M L J 113, Disting ; AIR 1952 Pun 49, Foll. AIR 1955 Ajmer 26 (26) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

—S. 75 — Powers of District Judge under — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 47, R. 7 — Applicability.

A District Judge sitting as an appellate Court in insolvency proceeding has the same powers as an appellate Court under the Code of Civil Procedure. If he reviews the judgment in appeal, an appeal from that order will only lie if the provisions of O. 47, R. 7, Civil P. C., are applicable. There is no difficulty in applying the provision of S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act as well as the provisions of O. 47, R. 7, Civil P. C., to appeals of this nature. Although S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act provides for appeals of this kind, disposal of such appeals will be governed by O. 47, R. 7, Civil P. C. AIR 1922 All 206, Foll. 1964 All L J 812 : ILR (1964) 2 All 867.

—S. 75 — Cross-objections — Competency — (Civil P. C. (1908). O. 41, R. 22).

There is no provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act for a cross-objection to be filed within 30 days after service of notice as under O. 41, R. 22 and there is nothing in the Provincial Insolvency Act making the provisions of O. 41, R. 22 applicable to an appeal under S. 75. 1954 All L J 90 : 1954 A W R (HC) 101 (1) : AIR 1954 All 419 (419 420) (Pr 5) (DB).

—S. 75 — Applicability — Application to bring respondent on record — Rejection — Appeal — Mysore Insolvency Act, S. 75.

Section 75 of the Act enables "any person aggrieved by a decision come to or an order made in the exercise of the insolvency jurisdiction" to prefer an appeal. The right of appeal is substantive and when by the Act it is allowed with respect to "any" decision or order, the right cannot be taken away or curtailed by the restrictive provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. The words in S. 75 are wide enough to make an appeal possible though the Civil P. C., denies it in some cases. Hence an order rejecting an application filed under O. 22, R. 3, Civil P. C., for the respondents 1 and 2 being brought on record in place of a deceased petitioner in an insolvency case is appealable. AIR 1948 Mad 520; AIR 1946 Nag 42; AIR 1937 Lah 568, Rel. on. ILR (1954) Mys 330 : 34 Mys L J 23 : AIR 1955 Mys 97 (97) (Prs 1, 3).

—S. 75 — Second appeal and revision against order under S. 25, Provincial Insolvency Act.

No second appeal lies against an order passed under S. 25. The High Court may however in certain circumstances treat the second appeal as revision and examine the order of the District Judge and determine its legality and correctness. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 25. AIR 1954 Mys 133.

—S. 75 — Applicability — Order refusing review — Appeal.

The result of the provisions for review in the Act is only that before the Court can review its own order, the power so exercised should have been conferred on it by some provisions of Civil P. C. In other words unless the case falls under O. 47, R. 1, the Court will have no power of review. 1954 Ker L T 525 : ILR (1954) T C 1042 : AIR 1955 Trav-Co 49 (51) (Pt E) (Pr 10) (DB).

—S. 75 (3) — Scope of — Travancore Insolvency Act (8 of 1105), S. 77 — Distinction.

Section 77, Travancore Insolvency Act, imposes no limitations whatever as to appeals against orders passed in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction. Unlike the Provincial Insolvency Act no leave of the Insolvency Court or the High Court is required to entertain an appeal against any order in insolvency. ILR (1954) Trav-Co 1042 : 1954 Ker L T 525 : AIR 1955 Trav-Co 49 (51) (Pt F) (Pr 10) (DB).

2. Who may appeal — Person aggrieved.

—S. 75 — "Person aggrieved" — Insolvent, if.

Where an insolvent is impleaded in his individual capacity as a party to proceedings initiated by the opposite party, the insolvent's estate being represented by the Official Receiver and an order is passed against the insolvent personally and not against his estate, he will be deemed to be a person aggrieved within the meaning of S. 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. AIR 1952 All 356 (357) (Pr 10) (DB).

—S. 75—Petition by creditor invoking jurisdiction of lower Court dismissed — Appeal lies — (Hyderabad Insolvency Act (8 of 1351-F), S. 78).

Section 78 of the Hyderabad Insolvency Act provides that a debtor or a creditor or a receiver or any person feeling aggrieved by the order of insolvency Court can prefer an appeal against such an order. The words of the section are very wide. An appeal lies on dismissal of a petition in the lower Court filed by the creditor for invoking the insolvency jurisdiction of that Court. Ramdayal v. Shankarlal, I L R (1952) Hyd 196 : AIR 1952 Hyd 80 (84) (Pt C) (Pr 8) (FB).

—S. 75 (2)—'Person aggrieved'.

Where the Court passes an adjudication order and holds that the transfer by the insolvent amounts to a fraudulent preference, the order affects the rights of the transferee. It declares the nature of the transaction and to that extent determines absolutely the rights and liabilities of the insolvent, receiver and the transferee. The order operates in rem and as such binds the transferee also, not only as regards the fact of insolvency but also as regards the transfer on which it is based. Hence tha transferee being a person aggrieved can appeal against such order. —S. 75 (1)—Insolvency Court declining to make complaint against debtor under S. 70 — Appeal by Receiver—Receiver whether is "person aggrieved".

A debtor, creditor or Receiver has not an unqualified right of appeal from any decision or order of an insolvency Court, but a right of appeal only if he is aggrieved by that decision or order. Thus, under S. 75 (1) the only person entitled to appeal is "a person aggrieved" by the decision or order of the Court. However, the Receiver is not a "person aggrieved" by the decision of the Insolvency Court declining to make a complaint for an offence under S. 69 against a debtor under S. 70 of the Act. 1951-1 Mad L Jour 484 (FB), Foll.; I L R 1942 Bom 67: I L R 1941 Lah 779 : AIR 1941 Lah 248, Appr. ● ——S. 75 (1)—"Person aggrieved"—Who is.

A person against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully refused him something which he had a right to demand, would be an "aggrieved person". The grievance may not be personal or pecuniary and may yet be a legal grievance. A creditor or receiver who is under the provisions of the Act empowered to make and who makes an application to the Insolvency Court for a relief or who is brought before the Court to submit to its decision is, if the decision goes against him, thereby an 'aggrieved person'. However, not every person who has suffered some disappointment or whose expectations have not been realised as a result of the decision or order of an Insolvency Court can claim to be an aggrieved person. ——Ss. 75, 28 — "Person aggrieved" — Insolvent — Right of.

Under S. 75 read with S. 28, an insolvent cannot be said to be a person aggrieved by an order directing sale of property alleging it to belong to him and hence he has no right of appeal. ——S. 75 (1) — Person aggrieved — Meaning of — Receiver – Appeal by receiver.

The word 'aggrieved' in S. 75(1) means something more than merely 'disappointed'. It must mean being deprived of something which the person who wishes to file an appeal was entitled to claim. AIR 1951 Mad 935 (FB), Rel. on.

Where, therefore, an Official Receiver moves the Court under S. 70 for proceeding against the insolvent for any of the offences under S. 69 and the Court declines to make a complaint, the Receiver cannot be said to be a person who is aggrieved by the order and no appeal lies under S. 75(1) at his instance. ——Ss. 75, 9, 53 and 54—Appeal—Right of—'Person aggrieved'.

The right of appeal under S. 75, Insolvency Act, is given not only to creditors but also to any person aggrieved by a decision come to or an order made in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction.

One of the acts of insolvency was that the insolvents had given fraudulent preference to the Banks who were also creditors. After the order of adjudication and the appointment of a receiver the Banks made an application that no notice under S. 19 (2) was issued by the Court and therefore the Banks could not appear and contest the petition and show to the Court that it was not a case of fraudulent preference to the Banks. That application was dismissed on the ground that no notice under S. 19(2) was necessary when the application was by a creditor. On objection to the appeal preferred by the Banks against that order:

Held, that as a result of the order of adjudication the creditors would be able to make an application under S. 53 or 54, Insolvency Act, and that would very prejudicially affect the rights of the Banks who were said to be creditors to whom fraudulent preference was given. They were therefore persons aggrieved by the order of adjudication and had right to appeal. I L R (1958) 8 Raj 221 : A I R 1958 Raj 223 (224) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

3. "Order of Court subordinate to District Court".

——Ss. 75, 3 (1) and 4—Order of Assistant Judge—Appeal—Forum—Notification under S. 3 investing subordinate Court with insolvency jurisdiction —Effect —Distinction between appellate and revisional jurisdiction of High Court.

It is clear from S. 75(1), Provincial Insolvency Act, that, if any order is passed by a Court subordinate to a District Court, in the exercise of its insolvency jurisdiction, then an appeal does not lie to the High Court, but it lies to the District Court. The expression 'concurrent jurisdiction' in S. 3 (1) of the Act only means that even though a Court subordinate to a District Court may be invested with jurisdiction under the Act, the District Court would still continue to possess jurisdiction under the Act. Therefore, notwithstanding the fact that the Assistant Judge may have been invested with jurisdiction under the Act by a notification issued under S. 3, sub-s. (1) of the Act, he would still be a Court subordinate to the District Court. Nor can such Court be a 'District Court' within the meaning of S. 5 of Saurashtra District and Subordinate Civil Court Ordinance, 1948 because there can be only one District Court in a District. He does not, therefore, cease to be subordinate to the District Court.

Further, the proviso to S. 75 (1) is clear that the jurisdiction of the High Court to call for a case and pass such order as it thinks fit, is a revisional jurisdiction of the High Court quite distinct from an appellate jurisdiction. An appeal contemplated by the further proviso to S 75(1) is an appeal from a decision of a District Court which decision itself must have been arrived at from a decision of a Subordinate Court, and it must be a decision under S. 4 of the Act. Where, therefore, a decision is of a Court subordinate to the District Court and that too, is not under S 4 of the Act, the provisions of the further proviso to S. 75 (1) cannot be invoked. 60 Bom L R 1197 : ILR (1959) Bom 1115 : AIR 1959 Bom 47 (48, 49) (Prs 2, 3, 4) (DB).

——S. 75 (1) (3)—Order of Court subordinate to District Court — Conferment of concurrent jurisdiction on subordinate Court—Effect — Maintainability of appeal and revision to High Court.

Where a subordinate Judge's Court which is vested with insolvency jurisdiction concurrent with the District Court passes an order under S. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act, confirming the decision of the Official Receiver rejecting a claim of the creditor, the order is appealable to the District Court under S. 75 (1) and not to the High Court under S. 75 (3). The mere vesting of concurrent jurisdiction in the subordinate Court does not make the Court cease to be subordinate to the District Court. AIR 1919 Cal 900, Distinguished.

In such a case a revision to High Court against the order of the subordinate Court would be incompetent inasmuch as an appeal lies to the District Court. 5. Revision.

● —Ss. 75, 68—Sale by receiver — Power of Court to set it aside—Nature and extent of — Grounds on which the sale can be set aside—Power of High Court in revision—Question to be considered in revision.

The jurisdiction of the High Court to interfere in revision under the proviso to S. 75 arises only if it is of opinion that the District Judge's order was not according to law. If the High Court comes to that conclusion, it can then pass such order as it may think fit. AIR 1962 S C 1141.

——S. 75 (1), Proviso 1—Scope — Correction of decision—If can be canvassed.

It is not the correctness of the the decision but illegality or the material irregularity in procedure that can be pointed out in a revision application. The contention that the District Judge in an appeal under S. 75 adopted an incorrect procedure cannot therefore be accepted in revision. AIR 1953 S C 23, Rel. on.

Similarly, where the District Judge has given reasons for the order interfering with the exercise of the discretion by the first Court the order being within his jurisdiction cannot be challenged in a revision petition. AIR 1955 Ajmer 26 (27) (Pt B) (Prs 3, 4).

——S. 75 (1), First Proviso—Final order in appeal in favour of party—Party cannot go in second appeal against adverse finding against him—He can file revision under First proviso to S. 75 (1) against such adverse finding.

The petitioning creditor filed an application under S. 53 for annulment of certain transfers made by the insolvent. The trial Court held that the transferee could challenge the order of adjudication on the ground that petitioner was not a creditor of the insolvent. In the final order the Court found that the transfers were liable to be annulled under S. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Against these orders the transferee preferred appeal before the District Judge under S. 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The District Judge affirmed the finding of the Insolvency Court that the transfers were liable to be annulled under S 53. The District Judge also held that the transferee proved that the insolvent did not owe any debt to the creditor. In spite of these adverse findings against the creditor, however, the appeal was dismissed by the District Judge. The transferee did not challenge the order of the District Judge. It was the creditor, however, who had come up to the High Court in revision purporting to invoke the jurisdiction of the High Court under the first proviso to S. 75 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Held, that as the District Judge finally rejected the appeal and confirmed the operative part of the order, namely annulment of transfers passed by the Insolvency Court the applicant could not have a further right of appeal for challenging the adverse findings of the District Court. There being no right of second appeal even against an unsuccessful appellant, the only mode in which the order could be challenged was by way of revision application. Such jurisdiction vested only in the High Court and could be invoked under the first proviso to S 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. If the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court could be invoked in a given case, then, it could be validly invoked by a person in the position of the present applicant against whom two adverse findings had been recorded in the proceedings under S. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for annulment of transfers. 1933 Mah L J 89 : 65 Bom L R 39 : ILR (1963) Bom 173 : AIR 1963 Bom 212 (213, 214) (Pr A) (Pts 2, 10).

Section 75 is a special provision which provides for revision by High Court only from the appellate order passed by the District Court and not from the orders passed by the Court of original jurisdiction and as such the remedy for setting aside the adjudication order passed by the Subordinate Court lies in appeal to the District Court and not to the High Court in revision : AIR 1948 Mad 520, Rel. on. 6. Appeal.

——S. 75 (1) — Question whether statutory presumption is rebutted is a question of fact — High Court cannot interfere.

Where a creditor made a claim based on a promissory note and the District Judge considering the evidence produced, inferred from the facts found that the statutory presumption under S. 118, Negotiable Instruments Act, had been weakened and the burden which lay upon the insolvent was discharged, it is not open to the High Court exercising jurisdiction under S. 75 (1), Proviso 1, nor even under Proviso 2, to set aside the judgment of the Court as the question whether a statutory presumption is rebutted is a question of fact. ——S. 75 (1)—Insolvency Court deciding that it has jurisdiction to entertain application — 'Decision come to or order made' — Maintainability of appeal to District Judge.

The provisions of S. 75 (1) make a distinction between a decision and an order made by the insolvency Court, suggesting that not merely an order but a decision which does not require compliance is contemplated within the meaning of S. 75 (1). The section does not speak of a final decision but merely a decision. Having regard to these considerations the contention that an appeal against the decision of an Insolvency Court must be against a final determination cannot be accepted. A decision come to, in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction includes a finding upon an issue material to determination of the entire case. An appeal lies against the finding of an Insolvency Court that the petition is maintainable. ——Ss. 75 (2), 4 and 21 — Attachment of debtor's property before adjudication — Objection — Court determining not merely question of possession of debtor but also question of title — Appeal against order competent.

National Planning certificates in possession of the debtor were attached under S. 2 (2) before adjudication at the instance of the petitioner-creditor. An objector claimed release of the certificates on the ground of their transfer to him before attachment. The Insolvency Court determined not merely the question of possession of the certificates but also held that the transfer in favour of the objector was valid and ordered their release. The petitioner-creditor preferred an appeal under S. 75 (2) and made an application for permission to appeal in case the order was not treated as one under S. 4 of the Act.

Held, that the Insolvency Court ought not to have enquired, prior to the passing of the order of adjudication, whether the transfer in favour of the objector was valid, but since it had determined the validity of the transfer in favour of the objector, an appeal under S. 75 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act was competent. A second appeal is competent if the order passed by the insolvency Judge is 'a decision come to or an order made in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction'.

The expression 'decision' occurring in S. 75 (1) means a decision whether it is final or otherwise.

That order did not merely deal with the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Judge to entertain the application under S. 4. In making that order, the Insolvency Judge had found against A on various other pleas touching the question of restitution of an amount to be made by him.

Held, that the order passed by the Insolvency Judge was not merely an order regulating procedure but decided questions arising on the merits of the application; that order must, therefore, be deemed to have been passed in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction and thus came within S. 75 (1). ——S. 78 (2) — Limitation Act (9 of 1908), Art. 182 (5)—Execution petition filed within three years from date of annulment—Exclusion of period of insolvency —Starting point of — Not date of insolvency petition but date of adjudication — Steps-in aid taken before Insolvency Court—Relevancy.

The period that can be excluded under S. 78 (2) of the Insolvency Act is only the period from the date of the order of adjudication to the date of the order of annulment. The section can be invoked only if the suit or the execution petition is not barred by limitation on the date of the order of adjudication.

On the question whether the filing of an insolvency petition by a creditor should be deemed to be a step-in-aid of execution of the decree:

Held, the phrase "made in accordance with law to the proper Court" in Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act is to be read also along with the concluding words "to take some step-in-aid of execution". The Insolvency Court is not the proper Court for execution and therefore any so-called steps-in-aid taken in that Court cannot extend the period (1963) 2 Andh W R 249.

——S. 78 (2)—Applicability — Period to be excluded is from the date of adjudication order to its annulment and not from filing of insolvency application.

Before S. 78 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act can be invoked, the following conditions must be satisfied: —(1) An order of adjudication must have been passed and annulled; (2) the period of limitation can be excluded in respect of suits or applications for execution of the decree, which might have been brought or made but for the making of an order of adjudication; (3) the period to be excluded is from the date of the order of adjudication to the date of the order of annulment; (4) even if the conditions mentioned in S. 78 (2) are satisfied, it shall not apply to a suit or application in respect of a debt which is provable but which has not been proved under this Act.

The period that could be excluded under S. 78 (2) is not from the date of filing of insolvency petition but only from the date of adjudication order to its annulment. AIR 1954 Bom 436. Foll.; AIR 1939 Mad 19, Rel. on. (1963) 2 Andh W R 249.

—Benefit of S. 78 (2) — If available — Ss. 33, 34, 49; 62 and 79.

The expression 'debts provable' in the Act means the debts whose proof is offered with a view to entitle the creditors to be included in the Schedule with a view to their participating in the assets of the insolvent and not the proof for any other purpose. The use of the same expression in S. 28 (2) and the proviso to S. 78 (2) should not carry a different meaning. The definition of proved debts under R. 3 of the Rules framed by the Madras High Court under S. 79 (1) is not ultra vires the Act. The word 'proved' in the proviso to S. 78 (2) is used in the technical sense of proof or debt for the purposes of claiming distribution in the assets of the insolvent before the Insolvency Court, and would include admission in the Court and also affidavit of debt under S. 49. S 78 (2) can only be taken advantage of where creditor's purpose for furnishing proof of his debts is that of claiming a share in the dividend. An affidavit for purposes of permission under S. 28 (2) would not amount to a debt being proved within the meaning of S. 78 (2). AIR 1947 Mad 331 : AIR 1940 Mad 716, Rel. on; AIR 1934 Mad 465. ——S. 78 (2)—'Provable'—Mortgage suit — Mortgage if entitled to deduction of period under S. 78 (2) — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, R. 6).

Secured creditors are not affected by proceedings in insolvency and unless they realise the security or surrender or value it under S. 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, it cannot be said that their debts are provable in insolvency. Thus if the mortgagee has no debt provable in insolvency, then the ban on the institution of suits or proceedings for the realisation of debts imposed by S. 28 (2) does not operate and the mortgagee cannot avail himself of the provisions of S. 78 (2) of the Act and claim to deduct the time between the date of the adjudication and the date of the order of annulment in computing the period of limitation for a suit to enforce the mortgage

The application by the mortgagee under O 34, R. 6, Civil P. C., is an application in the mortgage suit itself and the personal remedy would be available only if the suit had been filed within six years of the date due for the payment of the mortgage money, subject to any acknowledgment or part payment extending the period of limitation. Hence the contention that though in so far as the relief for the sale of the hypotheca was concerned, the mortgagee was not entitled to the benefit of S 78 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act he was entitled to invoke the aid of that provision in respect of his claiming a personal decree against the mortgagor cannot be accepted. ——S. 78 (2) — "The date of the order of adjudication."

——S. 78 (2), Proviso—Proof of debt.

The debtor's statement in the application for being adjudged insolvent that the amount is due to the creditor under a decree by itself does not constitute proof of the debt and the creditor is not entitled to claim the benefit of the section on the basis of such statement. In the absence of a copy of the decree it cannot be assumed from the bare reference to the decree in the debtor's petition that there is subsisting decree or that the amount said to be due is correct. Case Law discussed. ('51) 55 Mys HCR 152 (DB).

——Ss. 78 (2), 37—Unconditional order of adjudication—Powers of Court.

Properties automatically revert to insolvent—Court however is not functus officio — It can subsequently pass orders to make properties formerly vested in Court available to distributors amongst creditors upon their application — S. 78 (2) does not apply to exercise of such powers by the Court. See Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 37. AIR 1950 Orissa 233 (DB).

——S. 78 (2), Proviso—Applicability.

For the purpose of claiming the exclusion of time under S. 78 (2) there must be proof of the debt in the insolvency proceedings after the order of adjudication and before the order of annulment. The admission by the judgment-debtor of the debt in his application to declare him an insolvent does not amount to proof of the debt within the meaning of the section.

Thus where the decree-holder did not give the proof of his claim, he could not claim exclusion of time under this section in order to take out the case out of the bar under S. 48 Civil P. C. ——S. 79 (2) (c)—Applicability—Joint Hindu family firm—If can be adjudicated.

Acts of insolvency are acts which when committed create personal liablility. The reason why a joint Hindu family as such cannot be adjudged insolvent is that although the manager of a joint Hindu family can act on behalf of the family but the liability which he can create is restricted to the extent of joint family property. He cannot impose any personal liability on any other member of the family. In this view of the matter any act of insolvency committed by the Manager is to be considered as an act of insolvency committed by him alone and not by other members of the family. PREAMBLE ——Preamble—Validity — Government of India Act (1935), Sch. VII, List, Item 12, List III, Item 21.

The "pith and substance" of the Amending Act is clearly within the scope of item 12 of List 3. "Bankruptcy and insolvency". The true nature and character of the legislation, the scope and the ambit of it obviously relate to legislation in regard to bankruptcy and insolvency. The fact that it incidentally infringes on some other items such as item 21 in the Provincial List does not affect its validity. Further it will be seen that whenever the Legislature intended to exclude agricultural lands it said so in definite terms. The non-exclusion of agricultural lands from Item 12 is an indication that the iegislation used the words "bankruptcy and insolvency' in a comprehensive sense so as to empower it to enact laws in regard to bankruptcy and insolvency in respect of agricultural lands also. Hence the Amending Act of 1948 is intra vires of the Dominion Legislature. Case law discussed. 64 Mad L W 906 : 1951-2 Mad L J 438 : A I R 1952 Mad 27 (30, 31) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

3. Suits of small cause nature.
4. Suits excepted from small cause jurisdiction.

1. Nature of suit.

——S. 15 — Money suit cognizable by Small Cause Court — Second Appeal—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 102).

Held, that regard being had to the nature of the dispute in the instant case, the defence raised and the change of law effected by the operation of the West Bengal Non-agricultural Tenancy Act, 1949, the Money suit was cognizable by a Small Cause Court and was not excepted therefrom on account of the provisions of Art. 35 (ii) of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The fact that Money Suit was tried by the Munsif in his ordinary jurisdiction did not take away the prohibition as to appeal contained in the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. ILR (1910) 33 Mad 323 (FB), Dissented from. (1960) 64 Cal W N 172.

——S. 15 — Jurisdiction has to be determined on allegations in plaint and not on defence. Even though no objection is raised, the Court is to see whether it has got inherent jurisdiction. ——S. 15 — Scope — Madras Civil and Village Courts (Amendment) Act (16 of 1951) — Effect of — Pecuniary jurisdiction prescribed by S. 15 is subject to provision of any enactment — Section does not stand in the way of local or special enactments taking effect. The section does not affect S. 28 of the Madras Civil Courts Act and the right of legislature to amend it cannot be denied. There being no repugnancy between the material sections of Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and S. 28 of the Madras Civil Courts Act, there is nothing unconstitutional in the amendment of S. 28 — Even if there is any repugnancy, Art. 254 of the Constitution does not stand in the way of its operation. See Madras Civil and Village Courts (Amendment) Act (16 of 1951), S. 1. AIR 1959 Andh-Pra 3 (DB).

——Ss. 15, 25, Sch. II, Art. 15 — Question of jurisdiction — Issue as to — Duty of Court — Nature of suit — Determining factor — (Civil P. C (1908), S. 115, O. 14, R. 2).

After giving notice to the vendor that the house which was the subject-matter of the contract was likely to be acquired by the Municipality and having received no reply to it the vendee filed a suit in the Court of Small Causes to recover back the earnest money paid by him. The vendor in his written statement stated that in form and in substance it was a suit for specific performance of the contract and for its rescission and so the Court of Small Causes had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The Judge however passed the decree without framing the issue as to jurisdiction. On revision:

Held (i) that the issue of jurisdiction did obviously arise on the written statement and it was the duty of the Judge to have raised that issue; (ii) that the question of jurisdiction must be decided solely by reference to the plaint. The plaint described the circumstances under which the contract became void, or, in the alternative voidable. The plaintiff did not come to Court with a clear and unambiguous allegation that the contract became void. Alternatively he alleged that the contract became voidable. Thus he wanted the Court to decide that the contract had become void and on that basis he wanted a decree for the refund of the earnest money in terms of the contract itself. Such a claim would inevitably attract the provisions of Art. 15. Being a suit for specific performance and for rescission of the contract it was outside the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes; (iii) that the decree was therefore liable to be set aside. AIR 1956 Bom 254 (255) (Pr 3).

——S. 15 — Suit for rent — Court in deciding whether there was contractural relationship of landlord and tenant can decide question of title.

A Court of Small Causes is entitled to decide even questions of title relating to immovable property provided the suit in form does not ask for a relief relating to title to immovable property, but for payment of a sum of money. Hence in a suit for rent, the Court in deciding whether there was contractual relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, can embark upon an enquiry as to title. ——Ss. 15 (3), 3 (c) — Power of local Government to raise pecuniary jurisdiction above Rs. 1,000—S. 3 (c) —(Madras Civil Court Act (III of 1873), S. 28).

The Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is an Act of 1887, whereas the Madras Civil Court Act is one of 1873. S. 15 (3) of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act does not affect, in view of the rule of construction contained in S. 3 (c), the power that is given to the local Government under the Madras Act to raise the jurisdiction. 1957 Mad W N 171 : 70 Mad L W 288: (1957) 1 Mad L J 186: AIR 1957 Mad 673 (674) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 15, 16 and 27 — Small Cause suit tried as ordinary suit by Court having small cause jurisdiction—Nature of decree—Appealability.

Where suit is clearly of a civil nature of which the value does not exceed Rs. 500 it is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and by no other Court. The jurisdiction to try it as a regular civil suit has been expressly barred by the provisions of Ss. 15 and 16, Small Cause Courts Act, and it is not within the competence either of the parties or the High Court to confer jurisdiction on a tribunal on which jurisdiction has not been conferred by the Legislature.

Hence where a judicial officer invested with Small Cause Court jurisdiction tries a suit filed as a regular civil suit, which he might have tried under the summary procedure, in the ordinary manner, the character of the suit is not altered. The decision arrived at in the suit should be deemed to be a decision given by a Court of Small Causes and should be treated as such. The decree passed is not appealable even though the plaintiff may have raised no objection to jurisdiction in the lower appellate Court and may have been agreed to amend the plaint. 3. Suits of small cause nature.

——S. 15 and Sch. II, Art 41—Lease of certain lands —Lessees sub-dividing the lands and holding distinct shares — No joint ownership — Rent due to lessor paid by plaintiff alone — His suit for contribution is cognizable by the Small Cause Courts.

The plaintiff and defendants were lessees of certain lands under a single patta. They sub-divided the lands into distinct shares and the sharers were liable to pay rent to the lessor in proportion to their shares. The plaintiff paid the entire rent due to the lessor and filed a suit for contribution in a Small Cause Court.

Held, that the suit was cognizable by the Small Cause Court as the plaintiff and defendants were not joint owners of the lease-hold interest at any time, much less on the date of the suit and hence Art. 41, Sch. II of the Act did not apply to the case.

As a rule suits for contribution are cognizable by the Small Cause Courts, except where a case falls under Art. 41, Sch. II of the Act which applies only to claims for contribution by sharers in a joint property. Where the respective shares are in the exclusive enjoyment of the sharers the mere fact that the sharers are jointly and severally liable by reason of the patta of the lands being single, would not exclude the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. If in such a case, the rent is paid by one of the sharers he is entitled to sue the other sharers in the Small Cause Court for contribution. ——S. 15 and Sch. II, Cl. 15 — Compromise decree declaring rights of parties—Plaintiff getting right to recover amount of money from defendant—Suit to recover such amount—If Small Causes.

Where a compromise decree is only a declaratory decree declaring the rights of the parties to the suit not only to the property but also to the income thereof, and if, any income is received by the defendant from the property then the plaintiff cannot seek to recover that amount by executing the decree but must necessarily file a suit for the purpose of recovering that amount. Such a suit cannot be called a suit for specific performance of any agreement. And if the claim in such suit is less than Rs. 500 in value, the suit is exclusively triable by the Court of Small Causes. Such a suit being thus exclusively cognizable by the Small Causes Court cannot be regarded as having changed its nature by reason of its having been registered and tried as a regular suit, even though it it is so registered and tried with the consent of the parties to the suit. 11 Bom L R 817, Rel. on. S purchased cloth from R's shop in 1950 and pledged certain articles for the price. In 1951 R sued S on a pro-note and for the price of cloth purchased. S pleaded pledge of the articles but R denied the pledge. The Court decreed R's suit though it held that the articles were kept by S as 'Amanat'. On 25-3-57, S paid up the decretal amount and then sued R for return of the pledged articles.

Held, that the suit was triable by the Court of Small causes; that the suit was not barred by O. 2, R. 2. Civil Procedure Code and that the limitation started on 25th March 1957 and not in 1951. 1960 Nag L J (Notes) 24 (Bom).

——S. 15 — Suit for mesne profits — Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

The plaintiff and the defendants were the shebaits of a certain deity. The suit lands formed a tenancy under the deity landlord and the shebaits used to collect their share of the rent separately. The defendants shebaits sued the tenants for their share of the rent and in execution of the decree purchased the tenancy as shebaits, that is to say, on behalf of the deity. The plaintiffs claimed their proportionate share of the produce of the suit lands.

——S. 15 and Sch II, Art. 13 — Suit for recovery of municipal taxes — Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court —Municipalities—Bengal Municipal Act (15 of 1932) S. 167.

A suit by a Municipality to recover arrears of taxes which are due to the Municipality by force of a statute and not by reason of any interest in immovable property is not a suit coming within Sch. Though by virtue of S. 167, Bengal Municipal Act, the Municipality has charge on the holding in respect of which the taxes are claimed the Municipality is entitled to recover them as a simple money-decree and is not bound to enforce its rights as a charge holder. 54 Cal W N 416 : A I R 1950 Cal 415 (416, 417) (Pt A) (Prs 8 to 10) (DB).

——S. 15—Jurisdiction—Small Cause Court—Suit of small cause nature — Madhya Bharat Notification No. 1567 (3rd March 1948) — Notification does not bar jurisdiction of Court of Small Causes in cases within its pecuniary jurisdiction—Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 6 and 15.

The jurisdiction of the Court depends upon the nature of the suit as originally brought and not upon the character which it ultimately assumes. What the defence of the defendant in his written statement will be is irrelevant consideration in the determination of this question.

Madhya Bharat Notification No. 1567 (3rd March 1948) does not bar the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes in cases which are within its pecuniary jurisdiction.

Hence, a simple suit for damages for less than Rs. 500 against a railway company for shortage of goods so far as the city of Indore is concerned, is cognizable by the Small Cause Court Indore. A I R 1950 Madh B 14 (14) (Prs 6, 7).

—S. 15 and Sch. II, Art. 31 — Civil P. C. (1908), S 2(12) and O. 20, R. 12—Suit for liquidated amount of mesne profits—Suit is not suit for accounts and is not excluded from cognizance by Court of Small Causes—Suit for accounts—Test.

In Art. 31 to Sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act the words used are 'a suit for profits on immovable property' and not 'a suit for mesne profits'; nor is the full definition of mesne profits in S. 2 (12) of Civil P. C inserted. The exclusion is not of every suit for mesne profits per se but of a suit 'for account for the profits on immovable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant.' If one clearly bears in mind the basic concept of mesne profits on the one hand and an account suit on the other, it will become clear that a suit for mesne profits as such is not excluded; if any suit or as for that matter a large proportion of suits for mesne profits have been excluded it is on the ground that they involve the taking of accounts.

The test to determine whether a suit is for accounts is not whether in course of the trial the Court is going to examine accounts in evidence but whether the plaintiff's own claim is indeterminate and implies that further proceedings have to be gone through before the ascertainment of what is payable. If that is the position the Small Cause Court has no competency to start independent proceedings for the ascertainment of accounts and it cannot exercise jurisdiction over account suits for that claim. It however the plaintiff is able to claim a liquidated amount without invoking any proceedings in account it is difficult to see how the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court is excluded. In view of S. 15 read with Arts. 7 and 8 of Sch. Articles 4 and 11 of Sch. II are clearly inapplicable. Nor does the suit come under Art. 35 (ii). In order to constitute an offence of theft, mischief or misappropriation, criminal intention is a necessary ingredient. A wrongful or illegal act is not necessarily motivated by criminal intention. 36 Mys L J 836 : ILR (1958) Mys 826 : A I R 1959 Mys 162 (163, 164) (Prs 7, 8, 9).

Where the plaintiff has a prima facie right of recovering the value of half the fruit of trees, a suit for half the fruit or for damages in lieu thereof, is not a suit which is barred from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court, even though the defendant raises the question of title by denying the plaintiff's title. In such a case the question of title is only incidental and when such is the case it is in the discretion of the Court of Small Causes whether to try the suit itself or to return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. It cannot be said that in exercising its discretion to try the suit itself, the Court commits any error. 1953 Nag L J 529 : A I R 1954 Nag 128 (128) (Prs 3, 4).

—S. 15 and Sch. II, Art. 8—Suit to recover grazing fee—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

Where the same land is used by a large number of persons for grazing their cattle and the only charge made is a fee per head of cattle, there cannot be said to be a tenancy nor a lease of the land. The charge made must be treated as a bare fee and would not strictly fall within the conception of 'rent'. The license to graze cattle would not in these circumstances amount to a lease since no right to the land is created, and the persons grazing their cattle are not tenants. A suit for recovery of grazing fee is, therefore, not a suit for rent which is barred under Art. 8 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Such a suit is within the competence of the Court of Small Causes. 1951 Nag L J 237 : ILR (1952) Nag 115 : A I R 1951 Nag 50 (51) (Pr 15).

—Ss. 15 (3), 16, 23 and Second Schedule, Arts. 8 and 44—Suit to recover arrears of rent—Question of fixation of standard rent raised by tenant—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts is not ousted — (Houses and Rents — Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act (38 of 1952), S. 33)—(Interpretation of Statutes) — (Civil P. C. (1908), Pre. and S. 9),

In view of Ss. 15 (3) and 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and Arts. 8 and 44 of the Second Schedule to it, a suit to recover rent falls exclusively within the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts, and the jurisdiction is not ousted by the defendant raising the question of the fixation of the standard rent. Where such a defence is raised, the Court of Small Causes has the power to determine it for the purpose of the suit which it has jurisdiction to try, unless, of course, the jurisdiction is barred by any other enactment.

The effect of S. 33 of the Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act is that the Court of Small Causes shall not be competent to hear and decide any plea raised or an application made under the Act. It does not amount to saying that the Court of Small Causes ceases to be competent to try the suit, which was within its exclusive jurisdiction, merely because of the plea raised or application made by the defendant. There being nothing in that Act to oust the Court of Small Causes of its exclusive jurisdiction to hear and decide a suit for the recovery of house rent, the plain terms of law must be adhered to even at the risk of possible injustice in special causes or to particular litigants. In such cases the plaint cannot be returned for presentation to the proper Court. 76 Punj Re 1909 (FB), Foll.; A I R 1951 Bom 294 and A I R 1958 S C 677 and A I R 1949 E P 44, Disting. 61 Punj L R 932 : A I R 1960 Punj 11 (13, 14) (Prs 8, 9, 12) (DB).

——S. 15 — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 8, R. 6 — Adjustment and set-off — Difference between — Held on facts that what was claimed by defendants was adjustment and could be tried by Small Cause Court.

The difference between an adjustment and a set-off or counter-claim is that the former takes place before the suit, whereas when a defendant claims a set-off he claims an adjustment in the suit itself. A plea of adjustment is tantamount to a plea of payment and no Court-fee is payable.

The plaintiffs supplied Til worth Rs. 6,665 to the defendants who paid Rs. 6,350 towards the price of it leaving a balance of Rs. 315. The plaintiffs filed a suit against the defendants for its recovery. The defendants pleaded an adjustment of this amount. They alleged that there was another contract for the supply of Til between the parties which the plaintiffs failed to fulfil and that there was an agreement between them before the institution of the suit, under which the plaintiffs agreed to pay Rs. 605 to the defendant as damages for breach of that contract, and that out of this amount a sum of Rs. 315 would be adjustable towards the price of Til already supplied, leaving a balance of Rs. 289 which the plaintiffs had promised to pay to the defendants. The trial Court held that what the defendants had in fact pleaded was a counter-claim to the extent of Rs. 605 and as its pecuniary jurisdiction extended upto Rs. 500 it refused to try the counter-claim.

Held, that what was claimed by the defendant was not a counter-claim but an adjustment which could be tried by the Small Cause Court. A I R 1925 Rang 22, Disting 1965 Raj L W 465 : A I R 1966 Raj 177 (178) (Prs 5, 6).

——S. 15 and Sch II, Cl. 35 (ii)—Suit for compensation for dishonest removal of tree belonging to plaintiff valued at Rs. 200 — Plaint disclosing offence under Chap. 17, Penal Code — Civil Court has jurisdiction — Finding of Criminal Court that defendant had committed no offence is irrelevant in determining question of its own jurisdiction — Allegations in plaint should only be looked to.

The verdict of a Criminal Court cannot operate as res judicata when the Civil Court has to decide the question of its own jurisdiction.

The Court can determine the question of its jurisdiction only by examining the plaint and deciding whether the relief claimed by the plaintiff falls within the prohibited categories of Cl. (35) of Sch. II, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

A suit for compensation of Rs. 200 for the removal of a tree belonging to the plaintiff on the allegation that the defendant had dishonestly removed it and stole the timber falls within Cl. 35 (ii) of Sch. II, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act as the allegations disclose an offence under Ch. 17, Penal Code. The fact that a criminal Court had acquitted the defendant on the ground that the tree belonged to him cannot be considered in determining whether the plaint discloses a cause of action triable by the Court. The civil Court is not bound by the verdict of the criminal Court and to accept its finding irrespective of its own opinion on the question whether the plaint disclose an offence punishable under the Penal Code. Article 31 is concerned with a suit which is a suit for an account and not merely a suit for the recovery of profits of immoveable property which have been wrongfully received. Whether a suit is one for accounts within the meaning of Art. 31 must depend upon the relation in which the parties stand to each other, and the nature of the investigation required to afford relief to the plaintiff. C.—Jurisdiction is barred—Proper procedure is to return plaint for presentation to proper Court and not to dismiss suit.

For the purpose of determining the question of jurisdiction, the averments in the plaint alone should be the guide. It does not depend upon the defence. Even though no objection is raised, the Court is to see whether it has got inherent jurisdiction. Where there is lack of jurisdiction, there cannot be waiver of it nor can it be conferred by consent. 13 Ind App 134 (PC) and 14 Ind App 160 (PC), Rel. on.

A suit for damages were filed in the Small Cause Court on the allegation that the defendants dishonestly and forcibly, without the consent of the plaintiff, cut away 32 palm leaves from the palm trees belonging to and in the possession of the plaintiff. In the written statement the defendants alleged that the palm leaves belonged to them and that they did not remove the palm leaves on the date of occurrence (22nd April, 1963). The suit was dismissed on merits as well as for want of jurisdiction.

Held, that on the allegations in the plaint, the acts alleged against the defendants made out an offence under S. 379, I. P. C. The suit therefore was excluded from the cognizance of Small Cause Court under Sch. II, Art. 35 (ii) read with S. 15 (1). Even though the defendants did not raise any objection in the written statement, that the Court had no jurisdiction, and the plaintiff by filling the plaint, submitted to the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court the said Court lacked inherent jurisdiction on the allegations made in the plaint and the S. C. C. Judge should have returned the plaint to be filed in proper Court. (1965) 7 O J D 192 : ILR (1965) Cut 597 : 32 Cut L T 94 : AIR 1966 Orissa 84 (85, 86) (Prs 5, 7, 8, 9).

The question as to whether a suit is cognizable by a Small Cause Court has got to be decided on the plaint as instituted, that is to say, upon the nature of the claim as initially filed; it does not depend upon the defence set up by the defendant, or giving up of a portion of the claim by the plaintiff, or the findings arrived at by the Court. A suit for ejectment of tenant and arrears of rent is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court and the fact that a decree for arrears of rent on withdrawal of claim for eviction has been passed would not make the decree of the trial Court a decree of the Court of Small Causes. An appeal against such a decree would be competent. Even if the appeal is dismissed as incompetent a second appeal and not a revision would be competent against the dismissal of the appeal. 1963 B L J R 175.

If the Small Cause Court were to try a suit excepted from its jurisdiction, its decree will clearly be without jurisdiction. On the other hand, if a suit triable by a Small Cause Court being of Small Cause nature were to be tried by the same Judge sitting on the regular side, it would at the most amount to an irregularity. Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act provides that suits triable by a Small Cause Court shall not be tried by any other Court. —S. 17 (1), Proviso — Security bond presented beyond 30 days of ex parte decree—Validity.

If the security is furnished within 30 days of the ex parte decree, the application for setting aside the decree though in fact presented earlier may also be deemed to have been presented on that day and both may be deemed to be within time. But if the security bond is presented after the expiry of 30 days the application it must be rejected for non-compliance with the proviso. 1953 All L J 413 : 1953 All W R (HC) 419 : AIR 1953 All 758 (758, 759) (Prs 3, 4).

It is provided in S. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act that as far as possible the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure will apply to the trial of cases under that Act. And it is nowhere laid down in the Civil Procedure Code that in Small Cause Court suits issues need not be framed nor the framing of issues is prohibited in the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Hence, the Judge of Small Cause Courts should frame issues before recording evidence of parties so that they may know which matters are in dispute and on which points they have to adduce evidence. Framing of issues is also necessary to narrow down the points in dispute. Similarly, in cases where the facts are somewhat complicated the Small Cause Court can direct the parties to adduce further and full particulars and can also examine them under O 10, C. P. Code. AIR 1956 Bhopal 9 (9) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

—Ss. 17 (1), 25—Judgment, meaning of — Reasons for decision in brief to be given.

The word 'Judgment' as used in R. 4 of O. 20 of C. P. Code means judgment as defined in S. 2 (9) of the Code and must always contain a statement, by the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, of the grounds on which the decree or order is passed by him. Rule 4 of Order 20 does not authorise the Court merely to give a final pronouncement on the points of determination involved in a case in its judgment without anything more.

In order to enable the High Court to exercise jurisdiction vested in it under S. 25 of the Act, it has to be presumed that every decree or order which can be revised by the High Court, must be supported by some reasons, however brief they may be.

Where questions of law or mixed questions of law and fact are involved, Judge of the Court of Small Causes should always set out at least so much of his reasoning on which his findings are based as would throw at least some light on the path by which he had reached his conclusions. Interference in revision under S. 25 of the Act being possible even on a question of fact, it is desirable that a Court of Small Causes should at least briefly indicate the reasons for its decision and the process by which it has reached the conclusions recorded in its judgment. 1965 Cur L J 884 : AIR 1966 Punj 227 (228) (Prs 7, 8, 9).

2. Proviso — General.

—S. 17, Proviso and S. 35—Ex parte decree passed by Small Cause Court — Afterwards said Court abolished — Application to set aside ex parte decree —Application made to ordinary Court under S. 35—S. 17, applies.

Where a Munsif deals with a Small Cause Court decree under S. 35 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act under his ordinary jurisdiction, the decree does not become a decree of the regular Court. It remains a decree of the Small Cause Court and consequently the proviso to S. 17 of the Act would apply. Where, therefore, an ex parte decree is obtained from the Court of Small Causes and the Court is subsequently abolished and the application for restoration becomes entertainable by the Munsif, provisions of S. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act apply. An application to set aside the ex parte decree should, therefore, conform to the procedure laid down in S. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. That means along with the application the applicant has to deposit in Court the amount due under the decree or he has to furnish a security for the performance of the decree as required. —S. 17, Proviso—"Security"—Acceptance of mere personal bond of debtor—Propriety.

In cases in which a personal liability to pay a certain amount has been created by a decree, Courts should not ordinarily accept a personal bond of the debtor himself because such a bond gives no security worth the name to the decree-holder. The bond merely creates a personal liability which has already been created by the decree. 1950 All L J 685 : 1950 All W R 642 : AIR 1951 All 424 (425) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

—S. 17, Proviso — Compliance when sufficient — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 13).

The provisions of the proviso to S. 17 are mandatory. But it is sufficient compliance if, when the application under O 9, R. 13, Civil P. —S. 17 — Scope and effect of — Security bond in favour of Court — Registration whether necessary — (Registration Act (1908), S. 17).

A security bond required no order of the Court to make it effective and the Court's order of acceptance of the bond only indicates that the Court considers the security sufficient and does not give validity to the bond. It necessarily follows that execution of a bond in such circumstances is not a step of judicial procedure or a part of judicial proceedings. Hence, where a security bond given under S. 17, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, on the face of it, purports to create right, title and interest in properties valued over one hundred rupees, the bond requires registration and where it is not registered, it is not a valid and effective bond. ——S. 17—Application for setting aside ex parte decree together with application to furnish security filed within 30 days — Order passed beyond limitation —Security accepted—Validity.

Ex parte decree was passed on 29-10-1958. Judgment-debtor applied for setting it aside on 27-11-1958 together with an application seeking direction of the Court to permit him to furnish security. As the Judge was not in the station, the hearing was fixed for 1-12-1958 when the Judge was to return. On that day security was furnished and accepted by the Court. Decree-holder contended that neither the security was furnished nor the decretal amount deposited within 30 days and as such, provisions of S. 17 of the Act were not complied with.

Held, that if a party took the necessary steps as were permitted by law, then he cannot be punished if the Judge happened to be absent and his application could not be disposed of before expiry of the period of 30 days. 1960 M P L J (Notes) 59.

——S. 17—Judgment-debtor giving security without applying to be allowed to furnish security — Court referring to Nazir to verify surety and staying execution of decree, amounts to permitting defendant to give security instead of depositing cash for setting aside ex parte decree. 1959 M P L J (Notes) 208.

——S. 17—Scope of— Requirement—Security bond—Compliance with — What amounts to—Draft bond is not sufficient.

What section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act requires is that within the period of 30 days security should be placed in the hands of the Court by the applicant in such manner that if ultimately accepted it should be sufficient to enforce the obligation upon him and make the money assured readily recoverable. The bond which should be filed into Court within the time should be a duly executed one. A draft bond executed by the judgment-debtor cannot satisfy the purpose. Security bond can be held to be duly tendered, if without any further voluntary act on the part of the judgment-debtor the security bond could be legally enforced. While filing of a draft security bond may not be sufficient compliance with the requirements of the section, where the fair bond is filed within the time, though accepted or registered later, the applicant must be deemed to have complied with the section. The words 'give such security' in the section may be construed to mean 'tender the security.' (1965) 2 Mad L J 556.

——Ss. 17 (1), Proviso and 25 — Finding of fact—Finding that summons was not duly served and that defendant knew of ex parte decree only on service of notice of execution — Interference — Application to set aside ex parte decree — Security furnished and fair bond executed within one month—Bond accepted within time but registered only after — Effect — S. 17 (1), proviso, if complied with.

A finding by the trial Court, that the defendant in a suit had not been duly served with summons as the building to the outer door of which the summons was affixed was not the place where the defendant was ordinarily residing at the time of the alleged affixtures, is one of fact and cannot be interfered with in revision under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, when the trial Court has not failed or omitted to take into account anything material on the point. Likewise a finding that the defendant did not know of the ex parte decree until service of the notice ot execution is a finding of fact and should not be disturbed.

Where at the time of filing an application for setting aside an ex parte decree, the defendant files a draft security bond giving a list of immovable properties offered as security, and after the security is tested and found sufficient, the defendant executes a fair bond and files it in Court in accordance with the direction of the Court within the time limited by the proviso to S. 17 (1) of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and it is accepted by the Court, it must be held that the security has been given in time and that the requirements of S. 17 (1) proviso have been satisfied. The circumstance that the bond is registered only subsequently after the period of 30 days from the date of knowledge of the decree does not affect the matter, as the bond when registered would take effect and date back to the date of execution. (1958) 2 Mad L J 594 : 72 Mad L W 127.

——S. 17, Proviso — Compliance — Application on date of decree — Security tendered next day and Court accepting same — Application then registered — There is compliance.

On the 3rd January 1949 an ex parte decree was passed. On the same date an application for setting aside the ex parte decree was made. Along with it was filed an affidavit of one S that he was offering security for the decretal amount. The clerk of Court made endorsement that security should be furnished first. On the 4th January 1949 security of one L was tendered in Court. The Court asked the nazir to verify his solvency and this was certified. On the 6th January 1949 the application was registered. ——S. 17 (1), Proviso — Civil P. C.—Time for filing security — Power to extend.

An applicant applying for a review of judgment or for an order to set aside an ex parte decree of a Small Cause Court must at the time of presenting his application do one of the two things, namely, either deposit in Court the amount due under the decree or give such security for performance of the decree as the Court may have directed on a previous application made by him in this behalf. When a valid security bond on which the Court could act was not filed within a period of thirty days from the date of the ex parte decree, the subsequent filing of the security bond with the permission of the Court or having it accepted by the Court would not enable the petitioner to comply with the provisions of S. 17. In such a case the provisions contained in the proviso to S. 17 cannot be said to have been complied with. Civil Revn. ——S. 17 — Application to set aside ex parte decree — Conditions to be fulfilled — Court cannot extend time — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 13).

Under the proviso to S. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, a person applying for a review of judgment for an order to set aside an ex parte decree must at the time of presenting his application do one of the two things, namely, either deposit in Court the amount due under the decree or give such security for performance of the decree or give such security for performance of the decree as the Court may have directed on a previous application made by him in this behalf. If he does not make the previous application, he must put in the decretal amount in full. If he has made the previous application and succeeded in getting an order for security, he can, instead of depositing the decretal amount in cash furnish the security directed by the Court. It is no longer open to the Court to extend the time within which the deposit is to be made or the security furnished : AIR 1953 All 758, Foll. ; AIR 1956 Mad 422, Disting. (1959) 1 Orissa J D 604.

——S. 17—Defective application filed with deposit of chalan — Chalan passed and amount deposited after period of limitation — Application for setting aside ex parte decree cannot be allowed.

The petitioner filed an application under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., for setting aside the ex parte decree on the last day of the prescribed period of limitation. On the same day he filed another insufficiently stamped application along with a chalan to deposit the decretal amount as required by the proviso to S. 17, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The chalan was, however, passed and the money was actually deposited in the treasury only after the expiry of limitation.

Held, the petitioner had not complied with the requirements of the mandatory provisions of the proviso to S. 17 of the Act. When there was no compliance with the requirement of that provision either in substance or in law the application for setting aside an ex parte decree could not be allowed : AIR 1932 Pat 342 and AIR 1960 Pat 31, Disting. The mere filing of the chalan was not a valid tender of the money in Court. It was true that the procedure prescribed in R. 10 onwards and specially in R. 11 of Chapter I of Part X at page 193 of the General Rules and Circular Order (Civil) of the Patna High Court Vol. I did indicate that in ordinary course some time was bound to elapse between the filing of the chalan and the passing of it by the Court. But if the petitioner chose to file a chalan with a defective application on the last day of the limitation, it could not be held that by merely filing the chalan he tendered the money for deposit in Court according to law and that it should be held to be tantamount to a deposit of money in Court. If the petitioner had taken steps to get the chalan passed on the very date on which it was filed and if the chalan had been actually passed on that day, the fact that the money was physically put in the hands of the cashier of the Court or the treasury a day later, might not have mattered. 1964 B L J R 399 : AIR 1964 Pat 502 (503, 504) (Prs 3, 4, 5).

——S. 17 (1), Proviso—Requirement as to deposit — Substantial compliance sufficient — Setting aside ex parte decree — Application filed before preparation of decree sheet — Deposit of estimated amount less than actual decretal amount — Held, there was substantial compliance.

Section 17 requires a deposit to be made along with an application for setting aside an ex parte decree, as a guarantee of the judgment-debtor's bona fides. It is not intended that there should be a literal compliance with the provisions of this section where such literal compliance will have the result of defeating the ends of justice. Substantial compliance with provisions of the section is sufficient : AIR 1916 Cal 464 (2) and AIR 1922 All 29, Not followed.

A judgment-debtor who applies for setting aside an ex parte decree before the decree sheet has been prepared cannot possibly know at the time of making the application what is the exact decretal amount and, therefore, it the deposit of an amount calculated by him, on the basis of estimated costs, is found to be less than the actual decretal amount, it must be held that the judgment-debtor complied substantially with the requirements of S. 17, for otherwise it would entail undue hardship and injustice upon him. ILR (1961) 2 Punj 507 : AIR 1963 Punj 206 (207, 208) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

——S. 17 (1)— Proviso—Deposit, if should be made at time of making application.

In order to comply with the first part of the proviso, it is not essential that the deposit should be made at the time of making the application to set aside the decree ; it is sufficient if the deposit is made within the time allowed by law for setting aside the decree. AIR 1951 Simla 230 (231) (Pr 10).

4. Direction of Court.

——S. 17 (1), Proviso — Application for permission to furnish security—When to be made—Actual direction of Court — If to be previous to such application —Failure of Court to give direction at proper time—Exercise of inherent powers.

Held, tentatively, Under the proviso to S. 17 (1), Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, an application for being permitted to give security should be previous to the application for setting aside an ex parte decree but the actual direction of the Court to furnish security need not necessarily be previous to the application for setting aside the ex parte decree. This interpretation in addition to being possible on the language of the proviso would be in line with the principle that a statute should be so interpreted as not to defeat the rights of any party for no fault of his own.

The applicant, due to intervening vacation moved an application on the last day of limitation for a direction from the Court permitting him to furnish security and also applied on the same day for setting aside the ex parte decree. The Court, however, did not pass any order on that day but after three days allowed the application for furnishing security and finally accepted the security. On objection by the decree-holder the Court ultimately dismissed the application under O. 9, R. 13, C. P. Code, for not obtaining a direction as required by proviso to S. 17 (1), Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Held, that the applicant had done all he could do within the period of limitation and his right to be heard on the application for setting aside the ex parte decree was defeated by the lower Court simply because that Court itself delayed the making of the direction which was sought by an application made within time. In such a case, instead of dismissing the application for restoration, the Court should have exercised its powers under S 151 C. P. Code so as to mitigate the hardship being caused to the applicant as a result of the fault of the Court itself. ——S. 17, Proviso – Compliance with—Order to file personal security bond—Personal security bond filed containing also a hypothecation clause but not registered—Validity.

Where an ex parte judgment debtor applicant was "permitted" by the Court to file a personal security bond, and he in fact files a proper personal security bond, the fact that it also contained a hypothecation clause and it was not registered would not affect the validity of the bond required to be filed. It satisfies the order of the Court. 1950 All L J 685 : 1950 All W R 642 : AIR 1951 All 424 (425) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 17—Proviso — Furnishing security in lieu of depositing amount in Court — Filing of written application for Court's direction prior to filing application for setting aside ex parte decree—Necessity.

The filing of a draft bond along with an application for setting aside the ex parte decree made in a Small Cause suit is sufficient compliance with the Proviso to S. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The Act does not contemplate filing of a written application for furnishing security in lieu of the deposit of the amount in the Court. The application may be oral.

In the instant case, from the fact that the draft bond was filed on the same day along with the application to set aside the the decree and an order to test the draft bond was made, it must be held that the Court had virtually allowed the petitioner to furnish security in lieu of depositing the amount in cash. (1964) 2 An W R 275 : AIR 1964 Andh Pra 544 (545) (Pr 4).

——S. 17 (1)—Proviso — Security — Filing of draft bond without obtaining order—Sufficiency.

A mere filing of a draft bond without obtaining an order from the Court regarding its acceptance would not satisfy the requirements of the proviso. I L R (1955) 1 Cal 88.

——S. 17—Judgment-debtor giving security without obtaining prior permission—Petition held proper — (C. P. Code (1908), O. 9, R. 13).

The defendant moved a petition under O. 9, R. 13, C. P. Code, for setting aside an ex parte decree, along with a security bond as required bv S. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The plaintiff contended that the security bond was without the prior permission of the Court. The trial Court accepting the plaintiff's contention, dismissed the petition.

Held, that the trial Court took a very highly technical view of the matter. Although S. 17 requires that furnishing of the security bond should be with prior permission of the Court, yet that permission can be oral and so long as the bond is filed within the period of limitation, the requirements of law would be deemed to have been complied with. 1960 M P L J (Notes) 4.

——S. 17 (1), Proviso — Security bond under — Essentials.

The word 'security' has not been defined either in the Civil Procedure Code or in the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act or in the General Clauses Act. It means and includes the filing into Court of an enforceable document for the purpose of giving assurance to the decree-holder about the payment of the money due to him under the decree. Such a purpose can be achieved only if the bond put into Court by the obligor could be converted into a legally enforceable security without any further act to be performed by him.

The filing of a mere draft bond written on unstamped paper cannot therefore be deemed a sufficient compliance with the order of a Court directing security of immovable property to be furnished by a particular date. 71 Mad L W 257 : (1958) 1 Mad L J 330 : ILR (1958) Mad 590.

5. Liability of surety.

——S. 17 (1), proviso—Security under—Object of — Liability of surety for decree in suit.

The surety under the proviso to S. 17 (1), Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, cannot be proceeded against in execution of the decree passed on merits after the ex parte decree, for which the surety has been furnished, had been vacated. The surety is only for the purpose of the application and not for the benefit of the decree that may be passed in the case.

The object with which provisos are put in legislation is to except from the operation of the main section something which would otherwise be subject to it. It would be straining the language used in the proviso to hold that the legislature intended the security to endure for the decree which may be ultimately passed in creditor's favour. I L R (1957) Andh Pra 162.

——S. 17—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 145 and O. 38, R. 2 —Security for the performance of any decree.

Money suit in Small Cause Court — Attachment before judgment—A executing surety bond undertaking to pay decretal amount, if suit was decreed—Ex parte decree passed — Defendant ordered in his application for setting aside ex parte decree, to furnish security—B executing surety bond—Ex parte decree subsequently set aside and suit decreed—Held as security given under S. 17, Provincial Small Cause Court Act ended with ex parte proceeding, B could not be held liable after these proceedings and that A who stood surety for paying the amount that might be decreed continued to be liable till the suit was decided and became liable for the amount decreed under the terms of the bond — Case law relied on. AIR 1954 Hyd 24 (25) (Prs 2, 3).

——S. 17—Application to set aside ex parte decree made and security given—Application dismissed — Surety liable to pay decretal amount in the ex parte decree.

Held, that under the proviso to S. 17, the defendant had to take one of the two steps contemplated in the proviso, when he made an application for setting aside an ex parte decree. Security was the substitute for the deposit. In the expression 'deposit in the Court the amount due from him under the decree' spoken of was the ex parte decree and it could not be read as the decree which might eventually be passed after the ex parte decree was set aside. It was the same decree which was referred to in the alternative steps, 'such security for the performance of the decree . . . '. It was, therefore, quite clear that the decree referred to in the proviso to S.17 of the Act meant the ex parte decree which was sought to be set aside and not the decree which might eventually be passed, if the ex parte decree was set aside. In fact, where an ex parte decree was set aside, the surety's liability came to an end and he could proceed against under S. 145, Civil P. C., when a new decree was passed against the defendant. SECTION 23

——S. 23—'Plaint'—Meaning of—Transfer of small cause suit to ordinary Civil Court under S. 23 — Effect—Civil Court to try suit as framed — Plaintiff cannot be required to amend plaint by basing his suit on title also.

'Plaint' in S. 23 means the plaint as filed in Court of Small Causes.

An order under S. 23 does not have the effect of converting the suit from one of small cause nature to a title suit. As soon as the Small Cause Court Judge exercises his discretion under S. 23 of the Act and returns the plaint to be presented to a Court having jurisdiction to determine the issue relating to title the bar of S. 16 is removed and the Civil Court is authorised to entertain the plaint as such and to try the suit as framed. The Civil Court cannot require the plaintiff to amend his plaint so as to raise a question of title also. It has to receive the plaint and try it as such. ——S. 23—Where a contract of sale of immovable property falls through, suit to recover the part price is triable by Small Cause Court.

When a contract of sale of immovable property falls through and the vendee sues to recover back the purchase money from the vendor, such a suit is small cause. The question whether a suit is of a small cause nature is to be determined by the relief which the plaintiffs claim and not by the nature of the defence. It is not in the power of the defendant to oust the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court merely by raising a plea involving a dispute about title to immovable property. It is for this reason that where such a dispute is raised, S. 23 of the Act vests in the Small Cause Court a discretion either to determine that question of title or to return the plaint for presentation to the Court having jurisdiction to determine the question of title. AIR 1926 Nag 65, Foll. 1963 MPLJ (Notes) 138.

——Ss. 23 and 25—Question of title involved—Small Cause Court can return plaint for presentaiion on regular side—Order of Small Cause Court not arbitrary or capricious—High Court will not interfere.

Held, on facts, that if in the opinion of a Small Cause Court the case involved a question relating to proof or disproof of a title to immovable property or other title, the Court was empowered to return the plaint. In the case, the only obstacle in the way of non-applicant was the decree passed in the earlier suit, which was passed on admission and on account of which the non-applicant would be estopped from challenging the petitioner's title on account of the fact that he acknowledged the petitioner as landlord in that suit. The decision of the question of title would be unnecessary in the present case. But the non-applicant had filed civil suit for setting aside the decree in that earlier suit on the ground that it was obtained by fraud. It was this aspect which persuaded the High Court not to interfere with the order of the Small Cause Court. 1956 Nag L J (Notes) 25, Foll. 1962 M P L J (Notes) 59.

——Ss' 23 and 25 — Suit dismissed as not cognizable by Small Cause Court — S. 23 does not apply — Revision — Suppression of material fact by applicant—High Court would not remit case to regular Court in exercise of its discretion.

Seetion 23 would be attracted where the suit be cognisable by a Small Cause Court, but at the same time, the Court is required to decide a question of title relating to immovable property. The section would not apply to a suit not triable by a Small Cause Court.

The powers under the section are discretionary and the applicant, by suppressing a material fact, has disentitled himself to indulgence at the revisional stage. 1961 Jab L J 570: 1961 MPLJ 175 : AIR 1961 Madh Pra 152 (153) (Pt B) (Pr 8).

——S. 23 — Applicability — No question of title between parties inter se — Effect.

Merely because the question of title was raised by the defence, not between themselves and the plaintiff but betwen themselves and a third person who was not a party to the suit, Section 23 cannot be invoked by them. Had it been between the defendant and the plaintiff, S. 23 could be invoked. 1958 MPLJ (Notes) 123.

——S. 23—Suit involving question of title—Jurisdiction.

A suit for refund of consideration on the failure of the consideration is not exempted from the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court. It is however a different matter if the Court thinks that a question as to the title to immovable property being involved, the suit should be tried by a regular Court. In that case it has power under S. 23 of the Act to return the plaint and the regular Court would then get jurisdiction and will be bound to try the suit by the regular procedure. But that is not the same thing as saying that the Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit. AIR 1959 Manipur 14 (14) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——S. 23—Breach of covenant for title — Suits for damages—Jurisdiction.

A suit for damages for breach of covenant for title is not excluded from the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes. It is not the rule that the vendee cannot bring an action for breach of covenant of title until actual eviction. 'AIR 1922 Mad 300 and AIR 1928 Bom 427, Foll.' ——S. 23 (1)—Suits involving proof of title to immovable property—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

The controversy between 2 sets of defendants (landlord and tenants) inter se as to whether the latrine tax was payable by the owner or occupier does not amount to any dispute of title to the premises concerned. Similarly, the validity or otherwise of the latrine tax imposed by the special officer of a Municipality does not amount to a proof or disproof of title to immovable property within the meaning of S. 23 (1). Simply because a complicated question regarding the jurisdiction of the Special Officer to assess the latrine tax had to be decided in a suit of Small Cause nature would not entitle a Small Cause Court Judge to return the plaint for presentaion to proper Court. 62 Cal L J 530, Rel. on. 1956 BLJR 204 : AIR 1958 Pat 22 (23, 24) (Pt C) (Pr 6) (DB).

——Ss. 24 and 25 — Powers of revision under section 25 are independent of a right of appeal under section 24—High Court can entertain revision even though appeal against the order be competent.

Powers of revision under S. 25 of the Act are not curtailed on account of the fact that a separate remedy by way of appeal is available under S. 24 thereof. Though an appeal against the order imposing compensatory costs lies to the District Judge under S. 24 of the Act, the High Court may entertain a revision application under S. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act. AIR 1926 All 554; AIR 1933 Oudh 477 and AIR 1947 Nag 247, Foll. 1965 M P LJ (Notes) 57.

1. Scope.

——S. 25 (substituted by U. P. Amending Act 17 of 1957) — Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act (1887), Ss. 40 (2) and 8 — Scope of S. 40 (2)—Additional District Judge appointed under S. 8 can decide revision under S. 25.

Section 40 (2), Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act means that Ss. 15, 32, 35, 38 and 39 which have been applied to the Provincial Small Couse Courts by sub-section (1) are the only sections which are applicable to cases when being tried by Courts of Small Causes. This section has nothing to do with the decision of cases by Courts other than the Courts of Small Causes and on the basis of this section, therefore, it cannot be contended that the Additional District Judge has no power to hear revisions which the District Judge may transfer for decision to him. Under section 8 of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, whenever business pending before the District Judge requires aid of Additional District Judges, such Additional Judges can be appointed and they are empowered to discharge any of the functions of the District Judge which the District Judge may assign to them. Therefore the Additional District Judge can decide a revision under S. 25 of the Act, if transferred for decision to him by the District Judge. 1965 All W R (H C) 645 : 1965 All L J 989.

——S. 25 — Decision of Judge, Small Cause Court not according to law — District Judge declining to exercise revisional jurisdiction under S. 15—Non-exercise of jurisdiction vested in District Judge would empower the High Court to entertain revision. See Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115. 1965 All W R (HC) 596.

——S. 25 (as applicable to U. P.) — Additional District Judge can also exercise power of revision — General Clauses Act (1897), S. 3 (17).

It is for the purpose of clearing the arrears that Additional District Judges can be appointed under S. 8 (1) of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, and such Additional District Judges can exercise the same powers as the District Judge with regard to cases transferred to them, or the work which is assigned to them. When S. 8 (2) of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act permits cases triable by the District Judge to be heard by the Additional District Judges, there is no reason why a case under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act be also not heard by the Additional District Judge.

The definition of the word 'District Judge' as given in S. 3 (17) of the General Clauses Act can be made applicable to the Small Cause Courts Act only if there is nothing repugnant in the subject or context. Subject includes a question like the hearing of a case after its presentation or even the presentation of Memo of Appeal or Grounds of Revision. When cases within the jurisdiction of the District Judge can, on transfer, be heard by the Additional District Judge, there exists something repugnant in the subject and a literal meaning as contained in S. 3 (17) of the General Clauses Act cannot be given to that word. ——S. 25 (as amended by U. P. Act 17 of 1957) — Revisional jurisdiction of High Court under S. 115, Civil P. C. against orders of District Court passed under S. 25 of Provincial Small Cause Courts Act — Distinction between revisional jurisdiction under S. 115, Civil P. C. and S. 25, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act pointed out. See Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115. (1965) 2 ITJ 740 (All).

——S. 25 — Revision admitted and listed for hearing —Cannot be subsequently held to be not properly presented. See Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115. AIR 1962 All 485.

——S. 25 (as amended by U. P. Act (17 of 1957) — Additional District Judge appointed under S. 8 (1) of Bengal, Agra, Assam Civil Courts Act — Power of, to dispose of revisions transferred to him by District Judge — Bengal, Agra, Assam Civil Courts Act (12 of 1887), S. 8 (1).

Whenever an Additional District Judge has been appointed under S. 8 (1) of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act for the speedy disposal of cases and the cases have been transferred to him, the very order of appointment coupled with the order of transfer of cases entitles such Additional District Judge to dispose of cases transferred to him. A separate order of assignment of the functions of disposing of the cases is not necessary to be passed. An Additional District Judge, so appointed, is therefore competent to hear and dispose of revisions under S. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act transferred to him by the District Judge. ● ——S. 25 (as substituted by U. P. Act 17 of 1957) — Revision application filed in High Court before 4-6-1957—Jurisdiction of High Court to entertain.

Where applications in revision are filed in the High Court under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act prior to 4th June, 1957, then in spite of the substitution of S. 25 by the U. P. Act 17 of 1957 whereby the jurisdiction conferred on the High Court is transferred to the District Courts, the High Court retains its jurisdiction to hear applications in revision filed in the High Court under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act prior to 4th June, 1957, in all cases in which prior to that date the High Court had directed the record to be called for. ● ——S. 25 (as substituted by U. P. Act 17 of 1957) — Application in revision — If vested right — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115).

There is no authority for the proposition that an application in revision stands on exactly the same footing as an appeal, and that both are vested rights which can be taken away only by express enactment or necessary intendment. Om Prakash Moti Lal, 1958 All L J 210 : 1958 All W R (HC) 239 : ILR (1958) 1 All 70 : AIR 1958 All 409 (411) (Pt B) (Pr 3) (FB).

Section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act as it was before its substitution by U. P. Act, 17 of 1957 did not confer any right or privilege on any person. In this respect neither Cl. (c) nor Cl. (e) of S. 6 of the U. P. General Clauses Act is attracted. AIR 1958 All 404, Approved. Om Prakash v. Moti Lal, ILR (1958) 1 All 70 : 1958 All L J 210 : 1958 All W R (HC) 239 : AIR 1958 All 409 (411) (Pt C) (Pr 4) (FB).

● —S. 25 — Application for revision — High Court calling for record — Effect of — 'Thing duly done' — (U. P. General Clauses Act (1 of 1904), S. 6 (b)) — (General Clauses Act (1897), S. 6 (b)).

Per Mootham, C. J. : Where the High Court has called for the records of the cases filed under the old S. 25 for the sole purpose of enabling it to determine whether it shall exercise its revisional powers then with respect to such cases there is considerable force in the argument that if the High Court is now no longer able to exercise such powers in respect of these cases, a 'thing duly done', namely the calling for the records, is affected within the meaning of Cl. (b) of S. 6, U. P. General Clauses Act, because the purpose of the action is wholly frustrated.

Per V. Bhargava and M. L. Chaturvedi, JJ. : Clause (b) of S. 6, U. P. General Clauses Act, should be interpreted as covering anything duly done not only by parties litigating or claiming the right but also anything duly done by the Court before which the remedy or legal proceeding is commenced. The consequence of the applicability of the provisions of S. 6 (b), U. P. General Clauses Act, therefore, is that the High Court having validly called for the record and its order not being affected by the subsequent amending Act, it continues to have jurisdiction to pass further orders in pursuance of that valid Act and, consquently, to pass such order with respect to the case as it may think fit. —S. 25 (as amended by U. P. Act 17 of 1957) — Applicability to pending actions — (Interpretation of Statutes—Retrospective effect).

A suitor has no right to apply in revision; as a matter of fact, there is nothing like a right to apply in revision. The Amendment Act does not say anything about its effect or enforcement except that it was to come into force at once. The obvious meaning of the Act coming into force on 4-6-1957 the date of its publication, was that on and after the date the District Judge had the power of calling for a case decided by a Court of Small Clauses and revising a decree or order made by it. There was nothing in the Amendment Act to suggest that it would not apply to a case instituted or decided before it came into force and it would not be open to the Court to read any such qualification in it. —S. 25 — Revision — Interference in — When made.

The plaintiff, who as a common carrier was entrusted with certain goods by their owner for carriage from place A to place B employed another common carrier for carrying them to place B. The latter common carrier in his turn handed over the goods to his driver for being carried to B. The goods never reached their destination. The plaintiff therefore sued the driver and his employer defendant No. 1 for recovering damages from them for loss of the goods. Decree against the latter common-carrier (defendant No. 2 was sought on the basis of his statutory liability under the Carriers Act. Suit having been allowed defendant No. 1 filed a revision petition against the decree under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The essential requirement for making a person liable under the Carriers Act being that the plaintiff must be the owner of the goods. The plaintiff could not have sustained the action for damages for loss of the consignment. Consequently passing of the decree against defendant No. 1 had occasioned manifest injustice, justifying interference under the section. AIR 1960 Andh Pra 89, Distinguished. —S. 25 — Himachal Pradesh Courts Order (1948), Para. 35 (1) (b) — Relative scope — (Obiter).

Section 25 of Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is wider in some respects but narrower in others than Para 35, H. P. Courts Order, 1948. It is narrower as while para. 35 permits interference by the High Court if there has been unwarranted usurpation of jurisdiction or failure to exercise jurisdiction or material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction there is no such provision in S. 25. The aforesaid section is wider to this extent that while clause (b) to para. 35 (1) of the Order 1948 provides for the filing of an application in revision if an important question of law or custom is involved the section permits interference if the Court has not acted according to law and secondly that while the section provides for interence in a case irrespective of its value, an application in revision cannot be entertained under para. 35 if the value of the suit is below Rs. 1,000. AIR 1964 Him Pra 12 (14) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

—Ss. 25 and 3 (c) — Section 2 and (Himachal Pradesh (Courts) Order (1948), Para. 35) — Special law.

Section 25, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, affords ground for interference within an ambit wider than that provided by para. 35 of the Himachal Pradesh (Courts) Order. Hence, S. 25 of the Act cannot be said to affect the special law contained in Para. 35 of the Order within the intendment of S. 3 (c) of the Act. AIR 1953 Him Pra 68 (69) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

—S. 25—High Court's power of revision — Refusal of—Amendment—Revision.

The power of revision under S. 12 of the Hyderabad Small Cause Courts Act is wider than that under S. 115, C. P. Code. Under S. 115, C. P. Code the High Court cannot interfere when the lower Court having jurisdiction has arrived at a wrong decision on a question of fact or even on a point of law. But the powers conferred under S. 12, Hyderabad Small Cause Courts Act, are wide enough to justify an interference in some cases on a question of fact and law also.

Thus, where the lower Court has wrongly refused to allow amendment of the plaint the High Court has power to interfere in revision under S. 12. I L R (1953) Hyd 366 : A I R 1953 Hyd 212 (215) (Pt E) (Pr 17).

The powers of revision under S. 25 are wider than those under S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. It is no doubt true that the powers of revision conferred under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, are wider than the powers under S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But it certainly is not equivalent to an appellate power and even if the High Court is of the view that a particular conclusion upon facts could well have been different it would not be ground for the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction. —S. 25—Scope—Powers of High Court.

The High Court under S. 25 has wider powers of interference than under S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure — Of course, the High Court cannot reverse the decision of the trial Court on a question of fact unless the judgment is perverse, or, has overlooked essential evidence, but it can interfere where the trial Court has taken an erroneous view of law. In revisions under S. 25 questions of law can certainly be raised as they are raised in second appeals under S. 100, C. P. Code, even if such a question of law was not raised in the first Court, provided it does not involve an investigation of facts. 1956 B L J R 636 : 1956 Pat L R 393 : ILR 35 Pat 986 : AIR 1957 Pat 168 (172) (Pt B) (Pr 31) (DB).

——S. 25 — Case decided — Order under O. 11, R. 18, Civil P. C.—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115, O. 11, R 18).

An order for inspection of accounts passed under O. 11, R. 18, Civil P. C., does not dispose of the whole case or any part of it. It does not even indirectly amount to an order which will have material effect on the final disposal or decision of the case. Simply because the plaintiff may not carry out the orders passed by the Court and may thus invite rejection of his plaint, the order does not amount to a case decided within S. 25, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. 1954 A M L J 112 : AIR 1956 Ajmer 32 (32) (Pr 5).

——S. 25 — Revision against interlocutory order — Suit finally decided — Maintainability—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115).

If a remedy is provided against an interlocutory order and if a party has the right to challenge that interlocutory order within the period allowed by the statute of limitation, it would not be correct to deprive him of that right merely because before he could secure the remedy in the superior Court, a final order is passed by the trial Court. For, the aggrieved person cannot be deprived of his legal right merely because he was unable to persuade the trial Court to stay its hands or the superior Court to issue an order staying the proceedings in the trial Court. If the law grants a right that right must not be negatived merely because the trial Court has proceeded further and has heard or even finally decided the suit in which the interlocutory order was passed. ——S. 25 — 'Case decided' meaning of — Interlocutory order — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115) — (Words and Phrases) — 'Case decided.'

The words 'case decided' in S. 25 must be liberally construed and must be taken to include decision on all questions materially affecting the rights of the parties, though, not all interlocutory orders would amount to a 'case decided.' It will be a question of fact in each case whether the question decided amounts to a 'case decided' or not. Where the Court assumes jurisdiction which it does not legally possess, the order will amount to a 'case decided' and a revision lies against it. 1956 A M L J 76: AIR 1956 Ajmer 9 (10) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——S. 25 — 'Any case decided' — Order directing plaintiff to implead certain parties—No revision lies.

Under S. 25 a High Court has revisional powers when any case is decided by a Court of Small Causes. Unless a case is decided, this section would have no application.

An order directing the plaintiff to join certain parties cannot be said to be a decision of the case. It gives the plaintiff an opportunity to join additional parties. If he does so, the suit would proceed. If he does not do so, the Court would have to consider what the effect of the non-joinder of the parties would be. The Court may even dismiss a suit if it feels that it cannot properly decide the matter in the absence of certain necessary parties; but at the time when the Court directs a plaintiff to join certain parties, it cannot be said that the Court has decided a case. Such an order is not therefore open to revisional jurisdiction under S. 25 of the Act. AIR 1955 Kutch 23 (23) (Prs 3, 5).

Held, that it was quite competent for a Court in exercise of its jurisdiction under O. 6, R. 17, Civil Procedure Code to refuse the amendment of plaint by addition of co-plaintiffs after the claim against the defendant has become barred by limitation. 1959 M P L J (Notes) 220.

4. "According to law."

——S. 25—Scope—'According to law'—Meaning of—Finding of fact—Interference by High Court.

A decree or order of the Court of Small Causes cannot be said to be according to law: (1) Where the decision of the Small Cause Court is not based on any evidence. (2) Where the decision is based on an erroneous and improper appreciation of the evidence on record, amounting to a gross misappreciation of the evidence. (3) Where the decision is based on evidence on which no reasonable man would come to the conclusion reached by the Small Cause Court Judge. (4) Where the decision is based on an erroneous view of the law. (5) Where the decision is based, ignoring the rules as to burden of proof. As regards the restraint on the powers of the High Court, exercising jurisdiction under this Section, it is to be noted that it may not be open to the High Court to interfere with the finding of fact reached by the Court of Small Causes, merely because it takes a different view. Such a right is, of course, open to the High Court in a first appeal, but not in a revision under S. 25. 1961 Andh L T 404 : AIR 1961 Andh Pra 461 (465) (Pt D) (Prs 11, 12).

The phrase 'according to law' implies according to the forms of law prescribed for ensuring a fair trial. Where an ex parte decree is set aside on the term of payment of costs, the party accepting the costs cannot afterwards object to the order by way of revision under S. 25 of the Act. ——S. 25 — Case proceeded ex parte — Court should warn if no prima facie case made out—Court acting erroneously with regard to its practice to the prejudice of a party—High Court can interfere in revision—(Civil P. C. (1908), O. 20, R. 4)—(Practice and Procedure).

Plaintiffs filed a suit for recovery of money on a bond. The defence was that the loan had been repaid by giving a buffalo and some land on lease to the plaintiffs. The defendant remained absent after filing written statement. The plaintiff No. 1 alone entered the witness-box and admitted the receipt of buffalo and land but stated that it was in satisfaction of another loan. The Judge however dismissed the claim.

Held, that when the defendant did not appear and the Court required the plaintiff to adduce prima facie evidence, the Court ought to warn the plaintiff that such evidence as he had adduced was not in the opinion of the Court sufficient to establish a prima facie case. High Court would have power to interfere with a decree of Small Cause Court on a question of practice which went to the root of the trial when prejudice was caused to one of the parties on account of the mistake of the Court on a question of practice.

The admission of the plaintiff could be taken into consideration either in its entirety or not at all. The Small Cause Judge acted erroneously in dissecting the so-called admission of the plaintiff in his deposition. (1961) M P L J (Notes) 262. :

——S. 25—Powers of High Court — Nature of — No interference on pure question of fact.

It is true that revisional powers are reserved to the High Court under S. 25 but in exercising those powers the High Court will not, and is not intended to, perform the function of a Court of appeal and will not therefore ordinarily interfere on questions of pure fact. Not only is the trial Court in a better position to appreciate the evidence of witnesses whom it has actually seen and heard, but for the High Court to interfere on such grounds would be to stultify the whole object and intention of the Act which is designed to procure a speedy and final settlement of claims within the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts. ——S. 25—Revision under—High Court has no jurisdiction to investigate into questions of fact.

Under the provisions of S. 25, the High Court can only correct legal errors committed by the Small Cause Court. It has no jurisdiction to investigate into questions of fact and record different findings of fact from those recorded by the Judge of the Small Cause Court. AIR 1963 All 574 (578) (Pt E) (Pr 15).

——S. 25—Interference on questions of fact—Findings of Small Cause Court Judge found perverse—Re-assessment of evidence in revision permissible.

It may be ordinarily correct that a Judge sitting in revision cannot act like an appellate Court and cannot reassess the evidence once assessed by the Small Cause Court; but if the assessment of the evidence is wrong or the approach is wrong or the finding is perverse, the Judge sitting in revision has every right to give a judgment after correctly assessing the evidence. 1963 All W R (HC) 195 : A I R 1963 All 109 (110) (Pr 2).

——S. 25—Finding of fact.

Section 25 gives power to the High Court to interfere if the decision is not according to law. If a finding of fact is perverse the High Court can interfere. Interference in regard to appreciation of evidence should, in general, only be exercised when there is a very clear case of misappreciation which has resulted in injustice and makes the decree one that cannot be regarded by a revisional Court as 'according to law'. ——S. 25 — Question of fact — (C. P. Code (1908), S. 115).

The High Court has wider jurisdiction under S. 25 in entertaining revision application than under the provisions of S. 115, C. P. Code. But where the evidence makes it clear that a question of fact was gone into by the Judge and this decision is apparently in accordance with the evidence, the High Court will not usually interfere in revision merely because it is possible to take a different view of the evidence to that of the Court below. The decision of the Small Cause Court should not be interfered with in revision though it may appear even to be erroneous unless the conclusion is one which no Judge acting judicially could reasonably reach. ——S. 25—Question of fact—Interference.

A trial Court is in a far better position to judge the credibility of the oral evidence having an opportunity to hear and see the witnesses, which opportunity is denied to the High Court. The latter will not therefore interfere with the conclusion of the trial Court on a question of fact. 1957 Raj L W 411 : I L R (1957) 7 Raj 898 : A I R 1957 Raj 279 (281) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

——S. 25—Finding of fact.

A revisional Court does not ordinarily interfere with a finding of fact recorded by the Small Cause Court Judge. When, however, a finding is based upon a misinterpretation or brushing aside of a very valuable piece of evidence, e. g., not taking into consideration important admissions of the plaintiff, it is not only permissible but necessary for the High Court to vacate that finding in the interest of justice. A I R 1927 Nag 77 ; A I R 1933 Pat 145, Relied on. A I R 1955 N U C (Raj) 361.

——S. 25—High Court's power of revision — Question of fact—No interference.

Though the powers of the Court of Revision under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act are wider than those under S. 115, Civil P. C, yet the section ought not to be construed as giving the aggrieved party a right of appeal on points of law much less than on points of fact.

Where the question involved in revision is one of pure fact depending upon appreciation of evidence (viz., that the plaintiff's suit was false and ought not to nave been decreed) the High Court would refuse to interfere with the decision of the trial Court in the exercise of its discretionary powers under S. 25. 21 Bom 250 ; A I R 1938 Bom 223 ; A I R 1941 Bom 67. 10. Error of law.

——S. 25 — Scope—In revision under S. 25, question of law may be raised—In addition obvious perversity in deciding facts may also be corrected—This is also the scope of S. 35 of Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act, 1952, which is very similar to S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. A I R 1955 N N C (Ajmer) 4405.

——S. 25 — Interference by High Court — Obvious misapprehension of legal position resulting in miscarriage of justice—Interference justified.

Normally, in a revision filed under S. 25, the Courts are reluctant to inferfere, except in cases of grave injustice. Where there is an obvious misapprehension of the legal position resulting in miscarriage of justice, it is right to interfere with the order of the lower Court. (1962) 2 Andh L T 206 : (1962) 2 Andh W R 182 : A I R 1963 Andh Pra 24 (25) (Pt C) (Pr 10) (DB).

——S. 25—Finding that clerical mistake in document was corrected—There is no question of law involved. A I R 1955 N U C (Assam) 5528.

——S. 25 — Order wrong in law — Interference by High Court.

The use of the word 'may' in S. 25 suggests that even if the decree or order made in a case is not according to law, the High Court can refuse to interfere with the decree or order, especially when no injustice had been done to any party. When it appears to the High Court that interference under S. 25 will not be beneficial to any of the parties and will simply put them to extra expenses and inconvenience and will also cause delay in the disposal of the suit, it is but proper that the High Court should refuse to interfere with the order. Thus, where the Court wrongly orders the restoration of a suit dismissed by it on merits the order though without jurisdiction will not be interfered with by the High Court in the exercise of its discretion under S. 25 when the effect of setting aside the wrong order would be to put the parties to additional expenses and inconvenience. 11. Question of limitation.

See also Note 13.

——S. 25—Question of law — Interference on question of limitation.

In revisions under S. 25, questions of law may certainly be raised as they are raised in second appeals under S. 100, Civil P. C. In addition though the Court will not ordinarily interfere with decisions on fact it will interfere with a question of fact when it is obviously perverse. The High Court will therefore interfere in revision under S. 25 on a question of limitation : 1925 A M L J Sup 6 and 1946 A M L J 42 (1), Not foll.; AIR 1952 Ajmer 51 (2); 1936 A M L J 68 and S C C Revn. ——S. 25—Revision under—Wrong decision on question of limitation.

The Court certainly can revise a decision of a Small Cause Court on a question of limitation, where such decision is wrong and has resulted in an injustice to a party. 1952 A M L J 9 : A I R 1952 Ajmer 51 (52) (Pr 3).

——S. 25—Revision under — Powers of High Court —Extent of — Order contravening S. 3, Limitation Act—Must be set aside—Limitation Act (1908), S. 3.

The powers of the High Court under S. 25 are not limited to the question of jurisdiction but extend to the power to see whether the judgment has been rendered according to law. Section 3 of the Limitation Act being mandatory, it is indisputable that it has to be obeyed in full. Any decision contrary to that section must be open to interference in exercise of the powers of revision. A I R 1963 S C 698, Foll. (1964) 2 Andh W R 114 : A I R 1964 Andh Pra 462 (465) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

—S. 25 — Wrong decision on point of limitation—Interference in revision.

The power of revision under S. 25 is discretionary and the High Court will refuse to interfere with the trial Court's decision when no injustice has resulted therefrom to the applicant, even though there has been a misapplication of the law of limitation by the Court below and especially when injustice will result to the opposite party by such interference. Where the Small Cause Court negatives the plea of limitation raised by the defendant and decrees the suit and there is no doubt that the claim of the plaintiff is true and just, the High Court would not interfere with the decree in revision simply because the law of limitation has been erroneously applied by the Court below. A I R 1946 Cal 526 and I L R 15 All 139, Rel. on. 65 Cal W N 905 : 1961 All W R (Supp) 47 : 1961 All Cri R 279 : 1962 (1) Cri L J 139 : A I R 1962 Cal 97 (98) (Pt B) (Prs 5, 6).

—S. 25—Error of law or fact — Question of limitation—Revision.

—S. 25—Laches in making application — Point of jurisdiction incorrectly decided by trial Court — Interference in revision.

Though the power under S. 25, Small Cause Courts Act is discretionary, and if a long time has elapsed since the decree was passed the High Court should not exercise its discretion in favour of the defendants, when the point of jurisdiction was raised in the trial Court and was incorrectly decided there is no reason why the incorrect decision should be maintained. 1958 All W R (H C) 351 : 1958 All L J 876.

—S. 25 — Decree passed by Small Cause Court without jurisdiction — Question of jurisdiction not raised in trial Court — It can be raised in revision — Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 115, 9.

Where the question of jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court was not raised in the trial Court, it can still be raised before the High Court in revision. AIR 1965 Guj 131, Rel. on.

It is a fundamental principle that a decree passed by a Court without jurisdiction is a nullity. Its invalidity can be set up whenever and wherever it is sought to be enforced or relied upon, even at the stage of execution and even in collateral proceedings. A defect of jurisdiction whether pecuniary or territorial, or in respect of the subject-matter of the action, strikes at the very authority of the Court to pass any decree, such a defect cannot be cured even by consent of parties. AIR 1965 Manipur 52 (53) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 35—Small cause suit—Munsif having jurisdiction succeeded by Munsif without Small Cause Court powers—Direction of District Judge to try it as regular suit — Not an order under S. 24, Civil P. C. —Decree in such suit — Maintainability and appealability — Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 24, 96.

A Munsif without Small Cause Court powers who succeeds Munsif having Small Cause Court jurisdiction, has no jurisdiction to try a Small Cause suit as a regular suit if it has been instituted in the Court of the previous Munsif as Small Cause Court suit, when at the time of the transfer of the previous Munsif there is at that place as Subordinate Judge who exercises Small Cause Court powers, even though there is direction of the District Judge to try the suit of small cause nature as a regular Civil Suit. Such direction of the District Judge is not an order under S. 24, Civil P. C. When such a case has been tried as a regular suit by a Munsif without jurisdiction, an appeal against the decree and judgment therefrom does lie. AIR 1931 All 574 (FB) and AIR 1925 Oudh 101, Rel. on. ——S. 35—Small cause suit pending in Court with no small cause powers — Case transferred—Appeal —Civil P. C. (1908), S. 24 (4).

Held, that on the date of transfer of the suit, it was not transferred from the Small Cause Court because on that date the Judge presiding on that Court had no powers of a Small Cause Judge. It was also clear that the transfer was under S. 35 of the Small Cause Courts Act. In this situation the fiction created by S. 24 (4) of the Civil P. C. could not be applied to hold that the Court trying the transferred suit was to be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes. An appeal, therefore, lay to the District Judge against the decree of the trial Court. C. R. No. 1059, dated 2-2-60, Foll. 1961 M P L J (Notes) 124.

SCHEDULE II, ARTICLE 1

——Sch. 2, Art. 1—Suit for refund of fees on export of cotton seed levied and collected by State — Levy challenged as illegal — If cognizable by Small Cause Court.

In a suit filed for refund of the amount recovered by the State on account of permit fees levied by the State Government on cotton seed meant for export outside the State, it was contended by the plaintiff that the levy of the fees was illegal and without jurisdiction. The suit was filed in the Court of Small Causes.

Held, that Art. (1) of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act was broadly worded and excludes from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court a suit concerning any act done by or by order of the Government. The plaintiff claimed a right to get back his money which was recovered from him in the form of illegal levy. The Court had to investigate if the act of the State Government of levying permit fees and appropriating that amount was authorised by law. Such a suit was excluded from the cognizance of the Court of Small Causes. 1959 Nag L J (Notes) 130.

——Sch. 2, Art. 1 — Civil Procedure Code, S. 102 —Consignment booked on Railway — Consignment not delivered — Suit for damages for non-delivery of consignment — Suit not excepted from cognizance of Small Cause Court.

Plaintiff's claim for damages of Rs. 600 on account of non-delivery of consignment was decreed. On behalf of the appellant it was contended that the suit was excepted from cognizance of the Court of Small Causes by the provision contained in Art. 1 of the II Schedule of the Act.

Held, that the act of refusing to deliver the consignment was not an act which could be said to have been done by or by the order of the Central Government. Orders passed by the officers of the departments of Government which were commercial in their nature were not acts done or orders passed by an officer of the Government in official capacity. 37 Mad 533 and 17 Cal 290, Foll. A Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to entertain such a suit, it being a suit based on contract and not on tort. 28 Mad 213, Foll. The act of the Railway authorities of Katni refusing to deliver the goods (wheat in this case) might have been in pursuance of an order (Inter-Zonal Wheat Control Movement Order, 1957) in this case promulgated by the Central Government, but the refusal itself by no stretch of imagination be held to be that of the Central Government. Thus the present suit could not be said to have been excepted from the cognizance of the Court of Small Causes and, therefore, under S. 102, Civil P. C. second appeal was not competent. (Appeal dismissed). 1965 M P L J (Notes) 66.

——Sch. 2, Art. 2—Scope — Art. 2 applies to suits in respect of ministerial acts of officer.

Schedule 2, Art. 2 applies to a case where the suit is instituted against a ministerial act of an officer alleging that he has done something which was not lawful and the act purported to have been done by the officer in the execution of his duty. ——Sch. 2, Art. 2—Claim to recover amount paid to Government under decree later superseded — Suit does not fall under Art. 2.

Article 2 refers to acts done by persons not acting as suitors in pursuance of a judgment or order which gives permission so to act, but as ministerial officer or otherwise obeying the order of the Court. Where the essence of the action relates to the payment by the plaintiff himself as a mere suitor, i.e. as the defendant in the former suit of a certain sum of money to Government under a decree later superseded, the suit is not outside the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes as the suit does not fall under Sch. 2 Art. 2 : 1 Cal W N 140, Rel. on. SCHEDULE II, ARTICLE 7

——Sch. II, Arts. 7 and 8 — Suit for rent other than house rent.

A suit for arrears of rent in respect of a wooden cabin which cannot at all be used for residential purposes and in which a question of apportionment of rent arises is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court in view of Sch. II, Arts. 7 and 8 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. AIR 1927 All 194; A I R 1936 Pesh 55, Dist. 1952 A M L J 2: AIR 1952 Ajmer 47 (2) (47) (Pr 3).

——Sch. II, Arts. 7 and 31—Applicability.

Defendant took a lease of pasture lands from the Government subject to certain conditions. The defendant cultivated the land in breach of the conditions and the Collector imposed penalty upon him in accordance with the terms of the agreement. On failure of the defendant to pay the same, a suit for its recovery was brought on small cause side:

Held that the suit was one for damages for breach of contract pure and simple and was cognizable by Small Cause Courts, although in fixing the quantum of damages, the Collector had regard to the income or profits which the defendant might be expected to have received from the unauthorised use of the land. Neither Art. 7 nor Art. 31 was applicable. (1951) 1 Mad L J 164 : 64 Mad L W 261: A I R 1951 Mad 710 (710) (Prs 4 and 6).

SYNOPSIS

(Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), Sch. 2, Art. 8.)

1. Rent—Meaning of.
2. Suit for rent—Illustrative cases.
3. Suit not for rent—Illustrative cases.
4. Damages for use and occupation.
5. House rent.
6. "Court expressly invested with power."

1. Rent—Meaning of.

——Sch. II, Art. 8—Rent—Meaning of.

The word 'rent' is used in respect of immovable property like land, house and shops. The word 'rent' therefore, has distinct meaning from the word 'hire' and unless suits for hire are specifically excluded from the cognizance of Court of Small Causes it cannot be held that the suit for hire would not lie in the Court of the Small Causes. Thus the suit for the recovery of hire for boats is not excepted under Art 8. 7 Ind Cas 553, Rel. on. 10 J & K L R 82 : AIR 1952 J & K 15 (15) (Pr 2).

——Sch. II, Art. 8 — 'Rent' what is — Suit to recover hire charges.

The word 'rent' as occurring in Art. 8 of Sch. II has a reference to rent in respect of immovable property and it does not mean hire charges in respect of a movable property such as a loud speaker. Hence Art. 8 does not exclude from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Court, a suit for hire charges in respect of such a property. AIR 1927 Rang 94 and AIR 1957 Raj 279 and A I R 1952 J & K 15, Rel. on; 1950 Madh B L R 496, held not correct. 1957 M P C 717 : 1957 Jab L J 1045 : 1958 M P L J 56; AIR 1958 Madh Pra 52 (53) (Prs 5, 7, 8).

——Sch. II, Arts 7, 8 and S. 15—Case involving question of realisation of rent of immovable property — Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction. See Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), S. 15. A I R 1965 Manipur 52.

——Sch. II, Art. 8—Rent, what is.

Where the same land is used by larger number of persons for grazing their cattle and the only charge made is a fee per head of cattle there cannot be said to be tenancy nor a lease of the land. The licence to graze cattle would not in these circumstances amount to a lease since no right to the land is created, and the persons grazing their cattle are not tenants. A suit for recovery of grazing fee is not a suit for rent. 1951 Nag L J 237; I L R (1952) Nag 115; A I R 1951 Nag 50 (51) (Pr 15).

——Sch. II, Art. 8—Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 105—Rent—Share of fruit on mango trees.

Ancestors of A planted certain mango trees in the gairmazrua land of the landlord B, merely as trespassers, but there was agreement between B and the ancestors of A by which half the share in the trees and the fruit thereof was to be taken by B and the other half by the ancestors. B settled the land with C recognizing C as his tenant. C, by a registered sale deed transferred his rights to D who, by a suit in the Small Cause Court claimed half the share in the fruit trees on the land from A. The question was whether the share in fruit amounted to 'rent' within Art. 8 of Sch. II, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and whether D could claim the share:

Held, (i) that the word 'rent' was not defined by the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act but the share in fruit was not a payment for the use and occupation of any land and hence was not rent within the meaning of the Bihar Tenancy Act; nor was it rent within the meaning of S. 105, T. P. Act as the share was payable under an agreement between the parties which did not amount to lease. The suit for the share was therefore not a suit for rent within Art. 8 and hence was cognizable by the Small Cause Court: Case law discussed.

(ii) that on settlement of the land with C, the rights of the landlord B in the trees passed to C who had validly transferred them to D. D was, therefore, entitled to the half share of fruit of the trees: 24 W. R. 330 and AIR 1930 Pat 382, Rel. on. A I R 1950 Pat 284 (285 to 288) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 7, 8) (DB).

——Sch. II, Art. 8 — 'Rent' — Meaning of — Hire for movables — Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court — (Rajasthan Small Cause Courts Ordinance (8 of 1950), Sch. II, Art. 8).

Although the use of the word 'rent' in modern times is not confined to payment received for the use of immovable property only and it is used in connection with movables also, the primary meaning of the term is properly referable to a paymgnt for the enjoyment of immovable property only. It is in this latter sense that the term has been used in Art. 8 in the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act or its counterpart in Rajasthan namely, the Rajasthan Small Cause Courts Ordinance. The word 'rent' has not been used in the Article to cover suits relating to hire for movables and therefore a Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to try such suits. I L R (1957) 7 Raj 898: 1957 Raj L W 411: AIR 1957 Raj 279 (280) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 8).

2. Suit for rent—Illustrative cases.

——Sch. II, Art. 8—Suit for rent.

The plaintiff gave certain land to the defendant for a period of three years at a certain annual rent for the purpose of making bricks by excavating the earth therefrom and allowed the defendant to remain in possession. The plaintiff brought a suit for arrears of rent.

Held that the case was not one of mere licence of profit a prendre or even the sale of the earth. It was a case of demise of land and therefore the suit for rent was barred from the cognizance of Small Cause Court under Sch. II, Art. 8. 12 All L J 36; 22 All L J 339, Rel. on; I L R 31 All 342, Dist. 1952 All W R (H C) 326: 1952 All L J 664: AIR 1952 All 874 (874, 875) (Prs 3, 5).

——Sch. II, Art. 8 — Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court — Suit for recovery of rent other than house rent—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 102).

Article 8, Sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act excepts from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes suits for recovery of rent other than house rent unless the Judge of the Court of Small Causes has been expressly invested by the State Government with authority to exercise jurisdiction with respect thereto under Notification No. 3009 J, dated June 6, 1951. In the absence of such investiture, the bar under S. 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply. (1960) 64 Cal W N 172.

——Sch. II, Art. 8 — Suit for rent described as for damages.

Where the tenant agrees to give the landlord a fixed share of the produce as rent and not to appropriate the produce without first paying this share and the landlord sues the tenant for damages for loss suffered by misappropriation of the crop by the tenant the suit is really for rent and, as such, not cognisable by a Small Cause Court. AIR 1950 Kutch 61 (61) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

P. and Berar Municipalities Act, S. 76-A — C. P. Code (1908), S. 9. 1962 Nag L J (Notes) 23.

——Sch. II, Art. 8—Suit for rent.

A suit for recovery of the money value of the half share of produce of bhag cultivation from the defendant who is allowed to cultivate the land on the stipulation that he would be paid half the produce by way of wages is not a suit for rent and therefore is not excluded from cognizance of the Small Cause Court. 1953 B L J R 388: A I R 1954 Pat 32 (33) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

4. Damages for use and occupation.

——Sch. II, Arts. 8 and 31 — Tenancy terminated — Suit for damages for use and occupation is triable by Small Cause Court. 1959 Nag L J (Notes) 54.

——Sch. II, Art. 8 — Suit for damages for use and occupation in respect of non-agricultural properties would be triable by a Small Cause Court. Therefore a suit relating to rent against a tenant of such property would be triable by Small Cause Court. 1962 M P L J (Notes) 6.

5. House rent.

——Sch. II, Art. 8—Suit for arrears of rent in respect of wooden claim which could not at all be used for residential purposes and in which question of apportionment of rent arose, is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court in view of Arts. 7 and 8. A I R 1952 Ajmer 47 (2).

——Sch. II, Art. 8 — Suit for arrears of house rent is not a suit relating to immovable property and can always be filed in Small Cause Court though suit for immovable property cannot be filed there. AIR 1956 All 131.

——Sch. II, Art. 8—Suit for arrears of rent of a shop in cabin on municipal land is cognizable by Small Cause Court.

Held, on facts that having regard to the scheme of the Act and the meaning of Art. 8, Schedule II of the Small Cause Courts Act, there was no doubt that the Legislature did not exclude the rent of a shop from the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court. Therefore, a suit for arrears of rent of a shop was within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. (Revision allowed). 1959 M P L J (Notes) 68, Foll. 1964 M P L J (Notes) 186.

——Sch. II, Art. 8—Suit for rent of open plot—Land assessed to land revenue—Jurisdiction.

Claim in suit in the Small Cause Court was for recovery of rent of an open plot, for diversion tax and premium in respect thereof. The land was assessed to land revenue. The claim was decreed.

Held, that claim for only house rent was within the cognizance of the Small Cause Court. The suit for rent of a site was different from the one for house rent and was not cognizable by a Small Cause Court unless it was expressly invested with jurisdiction in that behalf. (Decree of Small Cause Court was set aside). (Revision allowed). 1964 M P L J (Notes) 71.

——Sch. II, Art. 8 — Property (house) mortgaged under usufructuary mortgage without interest—Mortgagor taking it on lease from mortgagee — Suit for recovery of rent was maintainable by Small Cause Court— S. A. 47/59, dated 26-10-62 (Gwalior Bench), Foll. 1964 M P L J (Notes) 55.

II, Art. 8 —Suit for arrears of rent filed as a small cause suit — Tenant praying for fixation of fair rent on ground that the rent was excessive—Jurisdiction of Civil Judge to try it as small cause suit not ousted. See Houses and Rents—Saurashtra Rent Control Act, S. 27 (2). (1956) 9 Sau L R 24.

6. "Court expressly invested with power".

——Sch. 2, Art. 8 — Judge not expressly invested to try suit—Effect.

Where the Judge of the Small Cause Court was not specially authorised under Art. 8, a decree passed by him for rent of a vacant land leased to defendant held was without jurisdiction. AIR 1951 Punj 389 (2) (390) (Pr 3).

SCHEDULE II, ARTICLE 11

——Sch. II, Art. 11 — Extent of tenancy — Suit in Small Cause Court for, but in respect of plot of land governed by T. P. Act—Defendant not disputing the amount of rent payable but disputing the extent of tenancy — Question being outside the scope of the suit, the Court should leave the same open for adjudication in future proceedings. AIR 1951 Cal 302 (302) (Pr 2).

——Sch. II, Art. 11 — Applicability — Test—Determining factor.

The question whether a suit does or does not fall within the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes has to be decided prima facie upon the language of the plaint. Where the plaintiff's suit is in essence and in substance a suit for payment of a sum of money as arrears of rent, the fact that incidentally the question of plaintiff's title to the property may have to be gone into does not take away the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. ILR (1954) Madh B 172 : AIR 1954 Madh B 34 (34, 35) (Pr 3).

——Sch. II, Art. 11 and S. 15—Suit for interest due on mortgage of house in form of rent suit—Not maintainable in Small Cause Court. See Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), S. 15. AIR 1961 Madh Pra 152.

——Sch. II, Arts. 11 and 31 — Suit for refund of earnest money as also for damages of breach of contract—Small Cause Court's jurisdiction.

A suit for refund of earnest money as also for damages on account of the breach committed by the defendant of a contract of lease, is not a suit falling within the purview of either Art. 11 or Art. 31 of Sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Such a suit is not excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court under any of the said Articles. 50 I C 629, Foll. 1961 M P L J (Notes) 3.

——Sch. II, Art. 11 — Suit for compensation for breach of covenant for title — Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

The plaintiff who had purchased 3 Khasra Nos. from the defendant and who was dispossessed from two of them by persons who claimed rights in the lands filed a suit for refund of Rs. 880 as compensation.

Held, that in this case the issue would be one of title, viz., whether the defendant had title in him to sell the two fields and in view of Art. 11 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the suit could not be considered to be one of a small cause nature. 1958 M P L J (Notes) 151.

——Sch. II, Arts. 11 and 35 — Suit for recovery of price paid for immovable property on being dispossessed by rightful owner—Jurisdiction.

A suit for recovery of the price paid to the defendant for the purchase of property on the ground that the plaintiff has been dispossessed by a claimant, whose claim had been recognised by a decree of Court is a plain and simple suit for damages when there is no prayer in that suit to determine the right or enforce the right or interest in any immovable property. It is not outside the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court under Art. 11. (1897) ILR 20 Mad 155, Distinguished. Nor does the suit fall under Art. 35 and therefore the Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit. ——Sch. II, Art. 15—Suit for "specific performance", what is, indicated — Plaintiff merely claiming money payable to him under a contract, the suit is in no sense to be treated as a suit for specific performance of a contract. AIR 1955 NUC (Madh B) 1311.

——Sch. II, Art. 15 — Suit for refund of money paid in a contract to sell property is cognizable by a Small Cause Court.

Held, on facts that what the plaintiff desired to obtain from the Court was not rescission of the contract but the recovery of the money advanced. Art. 15 which applies only to a suit for the specific performance or rescission of the contract would not exclude the suit from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court. AIR 1936 Pat 429, Foll. 1962 M P L J (Notes) 335.

——Sch. ——Sch. II, Art. 15 — Applicability — Suit for 'specific performance' — Meaning of.

Defendant, a member of an aboriginal tribe, governed by the C. P. Land Alienation Act, agreed to sell property to the plaintiff but the Deputy Commissioner did not sanction the transfer. Plaintiff sued in the Small Cause Court to recover the amount paid towards consideration.

Held, that the claim was not one for specific performance of the contract and it was triable by the Small Cause Court. 1959 M P L J (Notes) 15.

——Sch. II, Art. 15 — Applicability—Suit by vendor to recover balance of purchase money.

Generally speaking, a suit by a vendor to recover the purchase money or any balance alleged to be due on a sale of immovable property falls within the category of a suit for specific performance. Where therefore a suit is not even one to recover a specific unpaid amount but raises generally the question of how a specific contract of sale has been performed it is one which is not of a small cause nature and the decree passed by the Small Cause Court is accordingly without jurisdiction. AIR 1943 Mad 761 (FB), Rel. on. 19 Mad L J 220, Dist. (1953) 1 Mad L J 321 : 1953 Mad W N 338 : 66 Mad L W 230 : AIR 1953 Mad 559 (560) (Pr 2).

——Sch. II, Art. 15 — Suit for redemption of pledge for value of Rs. 70 — Nature of — Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court not excluded.

A suit for redemption of a pledge of the value of Rs. 70 is a suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court and does not come within the exception provided in Art. 15 of Sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The reason is that where the pawner sues for redemption of the goods pledged, whether after a valid tender of the loan or on ascertainment of the amount due, he cannot be deemed to be seeking a relief of specific performance of the contract. The suit by the pawner is one for delivery of specific goods which is not excluded from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court. AIR 1921 Oudh 124 (1), Not followed; AIR 1928 Lah 535, Followed. ——Sch. 2, Art. 15 — Suit to enforce award is not one for specific performance.

A suit to enforce an award, namely, for recovery of money payable under an award is not a suit for specific performance of a contract and hence is cognizable by a Small Cause Court. I L R 28 Pat 569 : AIR 1950 Pat 48 (49) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

——Sch. II, Arts. 19 and 43 — Suit for recovery of money wrongly realized by Customs and Excise Department as licence fee — Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

A suit claiming refund of licence fee for sale of liquor, wrongly realized under a demand by Customs and Excise Department, does not fall under Art. 43. The powers of the officers of the Customs and Excise Department do not include, according to the Rajasthan Excise Act, issue of process for recovery of any excise revenue. Article 19 also is not per se applicable as the plaintiff has not asked for any declaratory relief. The main relief is the recovery of the money wrongly realised, and in such cases the addition of the prayer for declaration even if made does not prevent the suit from being a nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court. 1958 Raj L W 107 : I L R (1957) 7 Raj 139 : AIR 1957 Raj 396 (397) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

——Sch. II, Art. 24 — Applicability—Suit for refund of money paid under arbitration agreement.

The plaintiff and defendant 3 entered into an arbitration agreement in pursuance of which they deposited each a sum of Rs. 100 with defendant 2 and appointed defendant 1 as arbitrator to decide certain land dispute. The arbitrator was to give his award within one month and defendant 3 was to produce K for her deposition before the arbitrator. In default, plaintiff was to get the disputed land. Defendant 3 did not perform his part of the contract to enable the arbitrator to decide the dispute. The plaintiff then sued the defendants for return of Rs. 100 deposited with defendant 2 and also for compensation. The defence version that the arbitrator had delivered the award but it was lost and that defendant 2 had paid a part of the amount of Rs. 100 to defendant 3 was found to be false and the suit was decreed against all the defendants.

Held that (i) the suit was not one to contest an award within Sch. II, Art. 24 and therefore was not excepted from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court.

(ii) The liability to refund the amount of Rs. 100 to the plaintiff solely rested with defendant 2 as no part of it was paid to defendant 3. Hence no decree could be passed as against defendant 3 for refund of the amount. AIR 1952 Assam 158 (158) (Pr 4).

SCHEDULE II, ARTICLE 29

——Sch. II, Art. 29 — Agricultural partnership — Art. 29 applies.

Article 29, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act would apply even to a case of agricultural partnership. 92 Pun Re 1889, Foll. 1952 Nag L J (Notes) 90.

——Sch. 2, Art. 29 — Batai agreement — Plaintiff alleging agreement to pay half cost of cultivation of Rs. 100 and receive half produce and suing for Rs. 450 on giving account — No allegation that balance was struck—Article 29 applies.

Plaintiff in his plaint alleged that the parties entered into a batai agreement under which plaintiff was to pay half the amount of expenses of cultivation of Rs. 100 of his land which he paid and that defendant was to give him half the produce and pay half the jama out of Rs. 291. Plaintiff sued for an amount of Rs. 450 giving his own account in the plaint as to how the figure was arrived at. There was no allegation that the balance was struck.

Held, that the suit fell under Article 29 (c), Provincial Small Cause Courts Act as there was agricultural partnership. 28 Nag L R 198 and 10 C P L R 29, Rel. on, AIR 1917 Nag 176 (2), Dist. 1952 Nag L J (Notes) 90.

SCHEDULE II, ARTICLE 30

——Sch. II, Arts. 30 and 31, S. 15—Suit by one co-owner against other co-owner for recovery of rent realised from tenant in excess ot his share—Suit is one for accounts within Art. 31, Provincial Small Cause Court Act (1887), Ss. 15 (1). 56 Cal W N 12: AIR 1952 Cal 736 (DB).

SCHEDULE II, ARTICLE 31

——Sch. II, Art. 31—Suit for specific amount — (Accounts).

Article 31 refers to suits for accounts. A suit for a specific amount which has wrongly been credited in the defendant's account with the firm of the plaintiffs, where it is not at all necessary to investi. gate the various items in the accounts is not barred by Art. 31. Nor does such a suit amount to a rectification of account by re-opening it. AIR 1944 Nag 124, Disting. AIR 1953 Ajmer 9 (10) (Prs 5, 6).

——Sch. II, Art. 31—Suit for mesne profits—Cognizance by Small Cause Court—If barred.

'Profits' within the meaning of Art. 31 does not include mesne profits. Hence, a suit for mesne profits is not excepted from the cognizance of Small Cause Court by Art. 31 of Schedule II.

The expression "mesne profits" refers to wrongful possession and not dispossession. 65 Cal W N 1067 : AIR 1962 Cal 111 (112) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

——Sch. II, Art. 31—"Suit for accounts."

There is a clear distinction between suits for accounts and suits in which decrees are passed after taking some accounts. A suit for money where the amount is to be determined on accounting is not a suit for accounts. 65 Cal W N 1067 : AIR 1962 Cal 111 (11½) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

——Sch. II, Art. 31—Applicability—"Account"—Co-sharers—Suit by one against another for share of profits of joint property.

A suit simpliciter for recovery of profits of immovable property wrongfully received by a co-sharer defendant does not fall under Art. 31 of the 2nd Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. This article is concerned with a suit which is a suit for an account. Whether a suit is one for account within the meaning of this article must depend upon the relation in which the parties stand to each other, and the nature of the investigation required to afford relief to the plaintiff. 23 C. 884, Foll. 56 C W N 12 : AIR 1952 Cal 736 (737) (Pr 7) (DB).

—Sch. II, Arts. 31 and 35 (ii) — Applicability—Damage for, 'tendu leave' gathered — Suit for damages cognizable by Small Cause Court—Question of title incidentally referred—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court not ousted.

Held, on facts that before Art. 35 (ii) could be deemed to apply it must be shown and alleged not merely that there was a cutting or damage done to trees or other objects but that it was done with some criminal intent or act. Where there was no allegation of criminal act or intent the suit was cognizable by the Court of Small Causes. AIR 1936 Nag 276; AIR 1936 Pat 428 and AIR 1927 All 288, Foll. The dispute in the case was with regard to leaves after they were already severed or gathered from the trees. Tendu leaves would be included within the expression 'growing crop' as used in the T. P. Act and, therefore, did not constitute immovable property. AIR 1959 S C 735, Rel. on, AIR 1933 Nag 87 : AIR 1936 Nag 42, Dist. Further, the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court would not be barred if merely incidentally the question of title was required to be gone into. AIR 1954 Nag 128, Foll. 1962 M P L J (Notes) 19.

——Sch. II, Art. 31 — Suit for refund of earnest money as also for damages of breach of contract of lease— Suit not falling within purview of either Art. II or Art. 31—Such suit is not excluded from jurisdiction of Small Cause Court. 1961 M P L J (Notes) 3.

——Sch. II, Art. 31, S. 15, Art. 7 — Defendant took a lease of pasture lands from the Government subject to certain conditions. The defendant cultivated the land in breach of the conditions and the Collector imposed penalty upon him in accordance with the terms of the agreement. On failure of the defendant to pay the same a suit for its recovery was brought on Small Cause side.

Held that the suit was one for damages for breach of contract pure and simple and was cognizable by Small Cause Court, although in fixing the quantum of damages, the Collector had regard to the income on profits which the defendant might be expected to have received from the unauthorised use of the land. Neither Art. 7 nor Art. 31 was applicable. (1951) 1 Mad L J 164 : 64 Mad L W 261 : AIR 1951 Mad 710 (710) (Prs 4. 6).

——Sch. II. Art. 31—Conditions for applicability stated—Suit against agent by principal for money had and received—Suit for balance due after deducting expenses and commission—Suit is not for money received by defendant for plaintiff's use—Limitation Act (1908), Art. 62 — See Mysore Small Cause Courts Act (8 of 1911), Sch. I, Art. 8. (1951) 29 Mys L J 41.

——Sch. II, Art. 31—Suit against agent for value of goods received by him and sold by him is cognizable by Small Cause Court. AIR 1955 N U C (Orissa) 711.

——Sch. II, Art. 31 — Applicability—Suit for fixed amount as mesne profits.

A simple suit for mesne profits is not excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court unless a decree for accounts is expressly asked for.

Article 31 relates to suits for account as also suits in which the Court can pass a decree only upon taking some accounts. Therefore, all suits in which the mortgagor prays for recovery of surplus collections and in which a decree is asked for profits of immovable property wrongfully received by the defendant, are excepted from the cognisance of Small Cause Courts. In effect, it is a suit in which decrees in terms of O. 20, R. 16, C. P. Code can be passed. Thus where the relief sought is that "the plaintiff be given a decree for Rs. 400 against the defendants for mesne profits" and other ancillary relief in the shape of cost and there is no prayer for accounts, the amount being fixed, it is a suit triable by a Court of Small Causes. 1957 Pat L R 152 : 1952 B L J R 382 : I L R 36 Pat 624 : AIR 1957 Pat 713 (714, 715) (Prs 16 to 19, 21) (DB).

—Sch. II, Art. 31—Suit for recovery of specific sum on basis of khata, for price of goods supplied—Defendants denying any transaction and pleading bar of suit under S. 11 and O. 2, R. 2 of Civil P. C.—Return of plaint on ground that suit was one for accounts, held premature. 1963 Raj L W 208.

—Sch, II, Art. 31—Applicability—Suit for accounts—What is.

Where the plaintiff prays in the plaint that the defendant be asked to render accounts and brings a suit for an indeterminate amount then the suit is clearly one falling under Art. 31 of the Schedule. If on the other hand, the plaintiff sues for a specific sum of money and it is the defendant who alleges that the suit falls under Art. 31 then before the Court can hold that it does so, the defendant must prove to its satisfaction firstly that other transactions besides those in suit have taken place between the parties, secondly that the plaintiff is liable to render account to the defendant and thirdly that the suit cannot be disposed of satisfactorily without taking accounts. 1959 Raj L W 296 : ILR (1958) 8 Raj 837 : AIR 1958 Raj 286 (287) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

SCHEDULE II, ARTICLE 34

—Sch. 2, Art. 34 and S. 15 — Suit for amount incurred in repairs to damaged car on account of accident on the strength of the policy of insurance—Is a suit on policy of insurance within Art. 34 of Sch. 2 of the Act — Such a suit is not cognisable by the Small Cause Court. See Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), S. 15. AIR 1965 Pat 55.

SCHEDULE II, ARTICLE 35

—Sch. 2, Art. 35 — Scope — Suit for recovery of price of immovable property paid on being dispossessed by rightful owner does not fall under the Article. See Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), Art. 11. AIR 1957 Mad 673.

Where damages are claimed for the injury caused to the plaintiff's wall on account of the accumulation of rain water on the defendants' land, the suit does not fall within the purview of Art. 35 (i) although this was the result of the defendants' obstructing the channel through which water used to flow out. 1950 All L J 60 : AIR 1950 All 519 (520) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

—Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) — Scope — Suits when can be said to fall under Cl. (ii) — Duty of Court — Alleged act of defendant need not have been actually found by a Court to be a crime — Defendant need not raise the objection as to jurisdiction. 69 Cal W N 545 : AIR 1965 Cal 59 (65) (Pt A) (Pr 22).

—Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) — Objects and Reasons for introducing Cl. (ii) in 1914.

Clause (ii) in Art. 35, Sch. 2 was added by Act 6 of 1914. The justification for introducing this provision as stated in the Object and Reasons was that under the then existing law, complicated suits which practically involved a criminal charge punishable under Chap. 17 of the Penal Code, against the defendants if their value was within the pecuniary jurisdiction of Provincial Small Cause Courts were triable by a summary procedure which allowed no right of appeal upon the facts and required no full record of the evidence, thus depriving the defendant of the possibility of clearing his character by an appeal from an adverse decree. The position was unsatisfactory and the legislature wanted to exclude such cases from the jurisdiction of such tribunals. 69 Cal W N 545 : AIR 1965 Cal 59 (62, 65) (Pt E) (Prs 14, 22).

—Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) — Tenant cutting and appropriating trees planted by his predecessor — Suit by landlord for compensation alleging tenant entitled only to fruits of trees — Tenant claiming right to cut trees under law — Suit held cognizable by Small Cause Court.

The right of a landlord and a tenant in respect of trees is very often a disputed right depending in some cases upon statutory provisions and in others upon custom or otherwise. A criminal case for theft or mischief or misappropriation can easily be defeated by defendant urging that he had a right to cut the trees or that he bona fide believed that he was entitled to cut the trees. In such a case a suit for compensation would not be excluded from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court under Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) : AIR 1923 Cal 568; AIR 1928 Cal 153; AIR 1930 Pat 575 and AIR 1928 Cal 946, Ref.

A suit was brought by landlord against tenant for compensation for cutting and appropriating trees on the ground that the tenant was a non-permanent theka tenant who had only the right to enjoy the fruits of trees. The trees were found to have been planted by the tenant's predecessor. The tenant claimed that he had a right to cut the trees under the law :

Held, that the suit was not excepted from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court under Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii). AIR 1950 Cal 109 (110, 111) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 7).

—Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) — Applicability — Allegations made in plaint must contain the ingredients of an offence under Chapter 17 of the Penal Code.

The question as to whether Art. 35 (ii) of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act applies or not has to be decided on the allegations made in the plaint. The plaint should disclose the commission by the defendant of an offence under the Chap. 17 of Penal Code.

Where allegations made in the plaint are merely that the plaintiffs were the owners of the disputed ghala and the defendants had cut 160 beds of grass out of the aforesaid ghala and thereby caused damage to the tune of Rs. 30:

Held, that suit was not covered by Art. 35 (ii) of Sch. 2 and that it was cognizable by the Court of Small Causes. AIR 1962 Him Pra 17 (22) (Pt A) (Pr 18).

——Sch. 2, Art 35 (ii) — Grazing of cattle in assertion of right — Suit to recover damages — Suit is not covered by Art. 35 (ii).

Where the defendants are within their rights, as burtandars, in cutting grass or allowing their cattle to graze on the ghasni, prima facie, the mens rea to constitute a criminal offence under Chap. 17, Penal Code is absent. Hence, a suit for recovery of a sum claimed as damages caused by the grazing of the defendant's cattle is not covered by Art. 35 (ii) of Sch. 2. AIR 1938 Lah 759, Rel. on. AIR 1955 Him Pra 56 (56) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

——Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) — Scope—Suit for recovery of price of thela on hire to defendant and alleged to have been stolen from his custody—Suit is cognizable by Small Cause Court. AIR 1955 NUC (Madh Bha) 2994.

——Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) — Claim for compensation for obtaining chilli bags from plaintiff's mother fraudulently — Claim excluded from Small Cause Court jurisdiction. 1962 M P L J (Notes) 250.

——Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) — Claim for return of movable articles — Cognizable by Small Cause Court — Civil P. C., O. 46, R. 7.

Plaintiff filed a suit alleging that the defendant had effected an outright sale of his Ghana and Kadhai (articles used for preparation of sugarcane jaggery) for a consideration of Rs. 400 and that it was agreed between the parties that the plaintiff would lend the said articles to the defendant without charging any rent, whenever so required. The defendant took the articles on loan, but refused to return the same. The plaint was returned to be presented on Small Cause side and later it was again returned for presentation to the regular side. Hence the plaintiff moved the District Judge for a reference to the High Court under O. 46, R. 7, Civil P. C.

Held, that the claim which was for return of movable articles, was triable by a Small Cause Court: ILR 46 All 683, Foll. Held further, that it was open to the High Court to set aside the order of the Small Cause Court even though the same was not challenged by way of revision: AIR 1934 Nag 257, Foll. 1962 M P L J (Notes) 54.

——Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) — Suit for — Damages for tendu leaves gathered is cognizable by Small Cause Court—Question of title incidentally referred—Jurisdiction is not ousted — See Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), Art. 31. 1962 M P L J (Notes) 19.

——Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii)—Suit for recovery of entrusted article or its price is cognisable by Small Cause Court. 1959 M P L J (Notes) 17.

——Sch. II, Art. 35 (ii) — Suit under — Offence against property — Test.

Where in a suit for recovery of advance paid, it was alleged in the plaint that under an agreement of sale of the suit property defendant had induced plaintiff to pay an advance to him on false representations of absolute title and had been thus cheated the plaintiff and had committed an offence under S. 415, Penal Code.

Held, that the facts of this case clearly take the suit out of the category of suits of Small Cause nature, and the exemption under Art. 35 of Sch. II, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, is clearly applicable : AIR 1924 All 430, Rel. on. AIR 1956 Mad 610 (612) (Pt C) (Pr 6).

——Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) and S. 15—Offences against property — Averments showing defendants's action to be illegal but not penal — Jurisdiction of Court not barred. 1963 Mys L J 325.

——Sch. 2, Arts. 35 (ii), 4 and 11 and S. 15 — Suits of small cause nature — Suit by landlord against tenant for damages for unauthorisedly cutting some trees on leasehold is a small cause suit — Arts. 4 and 11 apply — Suit does not come under Art. 35. AIR 1959 Mys 162.

——Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii)—Jurisdiction — Plaint alleging mischief — Suit is excepted.

Plaintiff, suing for price of crop damaged, alleged in his plaint that the defendant having mischievous motive to cause damage to plaintiff's crop and thus to harass him continued to let loose his cattle knowing that they were damaging plaintiff's crop and in spite of plaintiff's request not to do so.

Held, that the acts attributed constituted an offence under S. 426, Indian Penal Code, (Chapter XVII) and the suit was therefore not triable by a Small Cause Court. 1951 Nag L J (Notes) 217.

——Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) and S. 15 (1)—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court — To be determined on allegations in plaint and not on defence—Suit for damages on allegations of acts constituting offence under S. 379, Indian Penal Code—Jurisdiction is barred — Proper procedure is to return plaint for presentation to proper Court and not to dismiss suit—See Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), S. 15 (1). (1965) 7 O J D 192 : ILR (1965) Cut 597 : 32 Cut L T 94 : AIR 1966 Orissa 84.

——Sch. 2, Art. 35 (ii) — Suit for compensation for unlawful cutting of bamboos from plaintiff's land — Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court — Matters.

In order to find out whether a suit for compensation falls within the purview of Sch. II, Art. 35 (ii) and as such barred from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court the Court has to look to the pleadings of the parties with special reference to the pleading of the plaintiff. It has then to see whether the admitted facts or the facts stated in the plaint constitute an offence under Chapter XVII, Penal Code. If it finds that the language of the pleadings, especially that of the plaint, is such as would disclose the commission of an offence against property under Chapter XVII, Penal Code, it will return the plaint for presentation before a proper forum.

In order to oust the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court the plaint must present facts of which a criminal Court could take cognizance. If it is stated in a petition of complaint that certain trees had been wrongfully cut, a Criminal Court is hardly expected to find the accused guilty in absence of any dishonest intention or knowledge on the part of the accused. Therefore, if a plaint merely states that the defendants had removed crop or timber wrongfully or illegally, that fact alone would not constitute an offence either of theft or of mischief : AIR 1936 Pat 428, Foll. Consequently, where the plaint in a suit for compensation merely alleges that the defendant had unlawfully cut certain bamboos from the plaintiff's land but there are no allegations in the plaint which would constitute an offence of theft or mischief, the suit is cognizable by the Small Cause Court;

——Sch. 2, Arts. 35 (h) (ii) and 43-A — Suit to recover loan simpliciter—Liability not relating to act amounting to offence under Chapter XVII, Penal Code — None of Arts. 35 (h) (ii) and 43-A held applied—Provisions of these two articles compared.

A filed a suit in the Court of Small Causes against B and C on averments that B, who was A's Munim and used to maintain account books and handle cash of A's shop advanced certain sum to C and made entry to that effect in the account books but that they failed to return the said sum. The plaint was subsequently amended by dropping B and by confining the claim against C for the specific sum lent to him by B as his agent.

Held, that in view of the fact that A had not asked for accounts from his agent, the question of accounts did not arise at all. Similarly, Art. 35 (h) (ii) could not come into play because it was not a liability on account of an act which save for the provisions of Chapter IV of the Indian Penal Code, will be an offence punishable under Chapter XVII of the Penal Code. The suit was filed for the recovery of loan simpliciter and it was wrong on the part of the Judge, Small Cause Court to refer to Arts. 35 (h) (ii) and 43-A to support the return of the plaint.

A comparison of Arts. 35 (h) (ii) and 43-A would show that both contemplate the same kind of act on behalf of the defendant and the only difference between the two is that while Art. 35 (h) (ii) is meant for recovering compensation for the act, Art. 43-A is for recovering the property itself of which the plaintiff might have been deprived on account of such an act. 1963 Raj L W 175 : ILR (1963) 13 Raj 444 : AIR 1964 Raj 38 (39) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Sch. 2, Art. 38 (as amended by U. P. Act 24 of 1954) — Suit for arrears of maintenance based on agreement—Small Cause Court has Jurisdiction. AIR 1960 All 446 (448) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——Sch. II, Art. 38—'Maintenance'—Meaning.

The term 'maintenance' is not defined in the Small Cause Courts Act. According to the Oxford Dictionary, it means to provide with means of subsistence or necessaries of life, to pay or furnish the means for keeping up of, to support. In this sense, when the testator provided in his will that the monthly allowance was to be paid to his mother for the purpose of her maintaining herself, his intention was to provide maintenance for her. That he was a separate member of his family that the property was a self-acquired property and that there was no legal obligation for him for providing maintenance for his mother were entirely immaterial considerations. It was certainly an allowance but it was maintenance allowance and a suit to recover the arrears of allowance was not cognizable by a Small Cause Court. ——Sch. 2, Art. 38 — Maintenance due under agreement—Suit for arrears—Small Cause Court's jurisdiction.

The sons divided the property between themselves without giving a share to the mother but agreed to give her Rs. 10 p. m. each for maintenance. The mother sued for arrears of maintenance.

Held, that the suit fell under Art. 38, Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and was not triable by a Small Cause Court. AIR 1931 Bom 286, Foll. 1958 Nag L J (Notes) 103 (Bom).

——Sch. 2, Art. 38 — Suit on basis of agreement to pay rent—Not a suit relating to maintenance—Maintenance, meaning of—Words and phrases.

"Maintenance" is a wide word and covers every thing which a person may require e. g., means of subsistence, support, livelihood, supplies of necessities and convenience. In other words, it means much more than food, lodging. clothes and other forms of necessary expenditure. It may include lodging or residence, but a suit on the basis of an agreement to pay rent will, in itself, not amount to a suit relating to maintenance, within the meaning of Sch. 2, Art. 38. 1956 M B L J 1218 : Madh B L R 1956 (Civ) 495.

Where plaintiffs and defendants were made jointly and severally liable for a decree for costs and the plaintiff paid the whole amount and claimed contribution from some of the defendants:

——Sch. II, Art. 41 — Decree for arrears of rent against original tenant and his transferees—Satisfaction of decrees by transferees — Transferees' suit against original tenant for recovery of amount is not hit by Art. 41:

The plaintiff's suit was not one for contribution by a sharer in joint property in respect of payment made by him of money due from other co-sharers which alone has been kept out from cognizance of Small Cause Courts by Art. 41. No doubt the Jama in respect of the different plots was joint, but the fact that, the landlord instituted the rent suit against all the transferees of the recorded tenant showed that the landlord recognised such transfers and also the transferee-tenants, which amounted to splitting up of the rent for the purpose of individual liability of the different tenants. Hence it was not a case where there was any joint property held by the plaintiffs and the defendant in the sense that their respective liabilities were not determinable as far as the landlord was concerned. 1964 B L J R 319 : AIR 1965 Pat 72 (73) (Pr 1).

Under S. 4 (2) of the Provisional Collection of Taxes Act (1931) a declared provision in a Finance Bill ceases to have the force of law, when the Bill comes into operation as an enactment with or without amendment. When, however, the declared provision comes into operation in the Act with an amendment, the liability to pay excise duty on articles covered by the provision for the period taken in by the Bill and anterior to the Act, has to be determined on the basis of provision in the Finance Bill and not in accordance with the relevant amended provision in the Act.

The expression used in the Finance Bill, 1961 levying excise dnty on Chinaware and Porcelainware did not contain an explanation which found a place against the relevant items in the Finance Act. The explanation sought to cover all glazed clayware by the levy of duty of excise. After the bill became an Act a notice demanding duty on stoneware jars removed and sold from a factory manufacturing stoneware articles like pickle jars, etc., during the period taken in by the Finance Bill 10 of 1961 was served on the petitioner. The petitioner challenged the same in a writ petition :

Held, that as the explanation found in item 23-B in the Finance Act 14 of 1961 did not find a place as against item 23-B dealing with excise duty on china and porcelainware in the Finance Bill, 10 of 1961, and since the expression chinaware occurring in item 23-B as found in the Finance Bill must be understood to have been used in its technical sense in which it is understood in ceramic science, it did not include stoneware articles manufactured by the petitioner, the demand for excise duty on stoneware articles manufactured during the period taken in by the Finance Bill was not legal and ought to be quashed. (1963) 1 Ker L R 312 : AIR 1964 Ker 18 (23) (Prs 38, 39).

—Ss. 11 (2) and 19 — Order of renewal by Reserve Bank under S. 11 (2)—It cannot be called in question before the civil Court by any person claiming an interest in the security on the ground of forged endorsement on the cancelled note—(Civil P. The real owner can enforce the personal liability for money had and received on his account against the endorsee in whose favour the security is renewed by the Reserve Bank. Such a right however must exist outside the Act (18 of 1944). See Public Debt Act (18 of 1944), S. 19. AIR 1953 Bom 209.

—S. 11 (3)—Renewal of security negotiated under forged endorsement—Delivery to real owner—(Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), S. 58).

Though where a Government promissory note is negotiated under a forged endorsement no title passes to the subsequent endorsees, if such a note is renewed by the Reserve Bank, in favour of any of such endorsees, such a renewal constitutes a new contract between the Central Government and the endorsee under S. 11 (3) and the original real owner is not entitled to obtain the delivery of the renewed note. AIR 1932 P C 22, Rel. on. 54 Bom L R 765 : A I R 1953 Bom 209 (211) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

—S. 19 — Negotiable Instruments Act, S. 58 — Negotiation through forged endorsement — Plea of negligence — Held, on facts that the negligence of the real owner in allowing a Government promissory note to remain with his broker or sub-broker for almost a year did not contribute to the forgery of endorsement and therefore the subsequent endorsee Bank who obtained its renewal from the Reserve Bank was not saved from the liability to pay its value to the real owner by reason of such negligence — See Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), S. 58. A I R 1953 Bom 209.

—S. 19 — Order of renewal under S. 11 (2)—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to question.

An order by the Reserve Bank under S. 11 (2) cancelling an old security note and issuing a new one being an order made under the Act, it cannot be called in question before the Civil Court by any person claiming an interest in the security on the ground of forged endorsement on the cancelled note. 54 Bom L R 765 : A I R 1953 Bom 209 (211) (Pt B) (Pr 8).

—Ss. 19 and 11 — Renewal of security negotiated under forged endorsement—Remedy of real owner.

Whatever may have been the position before the Act, 18 of 1944, there is no remedy available under this Act to the real owner of a Government security which has been renewed in favour of an endorsee after forged endorsement, against the Government or against the Reserve Bank. The only remedy that has been saved by S. 19 is a remedy against the person who has a title to the security as a result of the order of the renewal by the Bank. The real owner can enforce the personal liability for money had and received on his account against the endorsee in whose favour the security is renewed by the Reserve Bank. Such a right however must exist outside the Act 18 of 1944.

The endorsee has obtained the new note by using the note belonging to the real owner and to which he had acquired no title whatever as it had passed under a forged endorsement. He, therefore, becomes liable to pay to the real owner the value of the Government security belonging to him which is effectively lost to the real owner, provided the real owner is not guilty of negligence in respect of it. Reserve Bank of India vesting and recognizing securities in petitioner—It operates to confer on him title to securities subject to personal liability to rightful owner — Petitioner negotiating securities as negotiable instruments — Rightful owner (a trust in this case) has only a civil claim enforceable against petitioner, as for money had and received on account of rightful owner by the holder of security — No prosecution for criminal breach of trust is maintainable. ——S. 1 (U. P. Amendment Act (1 of 1917)) and S. 13 — Slips used for recording bets — If instruments of gaming.

The evidence of the eye-witnesses was that they saw satta gambling being indulged in by the applicant with B, that B wrote something on a slip of paper at the dictation of the applicant and that three slips of paper were recovered from the possession of B. The slips contained nothing but figures; some figures were mere numbers and others were of amount of money; no name was written anywhere.

——Ss. 1 and 13 (as amended by Punjab Acts 1 of 1929 and 9 of 1960) — 'Gaming' and 'instruments' of gaming — Gaming includes betting on numbers called Dara-Satta — Evidence.

Definition of 'gaming' in Sec. 1 as amended by Punjab Acts of 1929 and 1960, now includes betting on numbers called 'dara' or 'dara-satta' and the person indulging therein is guilty of an offence under Sec. 13. Manner and method of dara or dara-satta and the nature and type of evidence of such gambling available indicated. AIR 1940 All 412 and 1961 (2) Cr LJ 399 (Punj) and AIR 1933 All 554, Rel. on.

Held, on facts that the accused had committed the offence under Sec. 13. The slip given to the decoy gambler after accepting the bets was an instrument of gaming and inferential of the conclusion that the person had been gaming in dara or dara-satta. The piece of paper on which appeared a number of entries giving numbers on which various bets had been laid with the accused including the two bets laid by decoy gambler and giving the amount staked with each number was a strong corroboration of the prosecution case against the accused. Whether the slips recovered from the house of the accused refer to sums of money in connection with numbers of either two or one digit and one of the documents, appears to be a summarised account of the various sums laid by different people on the numbers from 19 to 29 there can be no doubt that they refer to satta wagers and under the amended definition the amount to 'Instruments of gaming' and also the premises used for collecting them are a 'Common Gaming House' whether or not the prosecution establishes that their collection is for the purpose of making a profit. The owner of the premises is therefore rightly convicted of the offence under Sec. 3. 63 Pun LR 316: 1961 (2) Cr LJ 399 (400) (Prs 7 and 8) (Punj) (DB).

——Ss. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 9 — Constitutional validity — Application of stringent provisions of Act to certain areas — State Government having better knowledge of local conditions given legislative guidance to choose areas — Sections not contravening Art. 14 of Constitution and are valid — Interpretation of Statutes — Statement of Objects and Reasons and Preamble as guides to construction.

The provisions of Ss. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 9 of the Act do not infringe Article 14 of the Constitution and are not ultra vires. In fact all the provisions in the Act are intra vires.

It is no doubt true that there are contained in the Act certain provisions like Sections 3, 4, 5, 6 and 9 which are definitely harsher than their counter parts in other Acts. But the State Government has not been left without there being any legislative guidance to choose the areas to which the stringent provisions of the Act would apply, leaving other areas to be dealt with under the more generous provisions of Criminal P. C.

The State Governments have no doubt been given a certain discretion in the matter but it is well settled that discretionary powers are not necessarily discriminatory powers and where conditions for the exercise of the powers are laid down in the Act or the Rules made thereunder the powers cannot be said to be discriminatory. It is only in cases where it is found that either there is no standard or guide at all or that the guidance is vague or uncertain that the Court has power to strike down the law at the altar of Article 14 of the Constitution. AIR 1956 SC 676 and AIR 1962 SC 75, Foll.

Having laid down the policy of law and legal principles into a binding rule of conduct, the legislature left it to the State Governments concerned to decide to which area they would extend the remaining provisions of the Act. AIR 1954 SC 92 and AIR 1955 SC 604, Foll.

A preamble of the Act can be construed as laying down sufficiently clear a policy or principles for the guidance of the executive. The preamble and also the long title of the Act lay down a clear guiding policy, the same being that wherever it is considered necessary to punish public gambling and the keeping of common gaming houses the remaining provisions of the Act should be extended. ——S. 3—Presumption under S. 6—Nature of—Not irrebuttable—The presumption to be drawn under S. 6 merely relieves the prosecution of the duty of adducing complete evidence as to the gaming but even then the evidence has to be considered as a whole in determining whether the offences under Secs. 3 and 4 of the Act were made out. The recovery of instruments of gaming is relevant only if the offences under Ss. 3 and 4 are to be proved by presumption; public gambling punishable under Section 13 is to be proved by evidence and no question of presumption arises. The recovery of instruments of gambling may be circumstantial evidence to prove public gambling but is not conclusive and may not be considered enough in certain circumstances. 1959 Cr LJ 1397: 1960 All LJ 160: 1960 All WR (HC) 129: 1960 All Cr R 114: AIR 1959 All 799 (800) (Pt C) (Pr 3).

Where the accused is charged for an offence under S. 3 of the Gambling Act, it is incumbent on the prosecution under the law to prove by definite evidence the commodity in respect of which the alleged Satta gambling was going on, and where it has not been proved, the accused is entitled to acquittal. ——Ss. 3 and 4 — Burden of proof.

In a prosecution of the accused for an offence of gambling in American futures it is for prosecution to prove that the 'Muddemal slips' contain a record of betting transactions or were in any other manner connected with betting in American futures. It is therefore for the prosecution to explain how the bets in American futures are recorded and to satisfy the Court that the slips seized were a part of this record. 1954 Cr LJ 1347: Madh B LR (1954) Cr 17: Madh B LJ 1954 HCR 574: AIR 1954 Madh B 145 (146) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

——S. 3 — Conviction — Essentials for — House must be common gaming house for profit of the owner or occupier.

The mere fact that a person owns a house in which gambling was going on is not sufficient for his conviction under Sec. 3 of the Act. It must further be proved that the house was used as a common gaming house for the profit or gain of the owner or the occupier. 1960 MPLJ (Notes) 178.

——Ss. 3 and 5 — Likelihood of gambling at a place — Search warrant — If to be issued — Proof of place being public gaming house.

A search warrant was obtained on information that there was likelihood of gambling taking place in the house of non-applicant which was subsequently confirmed.

Held, that a search warrant obtained on the basis of such information is not legal. What is required under Sec. 5 of the Public Gambling Act is that the Magistrate should be satisfied upon credible information that he has reason to believe that any house, walled enclosure, room or place was used as a common gaming house.

A house used for gaming with cards is not a 'common gaming house' unless it is shown that the owner or occupier keeps or uses it for profit or gain to himself. 1959 MPLJ (Notes) 181.

——S. 3 — Elements required for conviction under — To convict a person as the patron of a common gaming house there must be proof that there is sufficient record to make out an element of profit or gain to that person as the owner, occupier, user or keeper of the premises — Madras Gambling Act (3 of 1930), S. 8. 1959 Mad WN 456: 1960 Mad LJ (Cri) 382.

——S. 3 — Gambling in private house — Gambling itself how far an offence — Not an offence under the Act not being within the ambit of Section 8 or Sec. 12. It becomes an offence only when the gaming takes place in a common gaming house or in a public place — Madras City Police Act (3 of 1888), S. 8. 1960 MLJ (Cri) 16 (Mad): 1959 Mad WN 171.

1. Scope.

——S. 4—Hyderabad Gambling Act (2 of 1305-F), Sec. 5 — Essential condition for framing charge — Accused must be found playing in a common gaming house. See Hyderabad Gambling Act (2 of 1305-F), S. 5. AIR 1953 Hyd 60 (DB).

——S. 4— Madras Gaming Act, S. 9 — Conditions essential for conviction — The game of chance becomes punishable only if it is played in any common gaming house under Sec. 9 or in a public place under Sec. 12 — It is not punishable if it is played elsewhere and not coming within either of these two sections. 1960 Mad LJ (Cri) 382: 1959 Mad WN 456.

——S. 4 — Essentials of S. 9 — Gaming on Sankaranti day — Absence of evidence that house was common gaming house — No offence. 1953 Mad WN 14: 1953 Mad WN (Cri) 6: 65 Mad LW 949: (1952) 2 Mad LJ 686: 1953 Cri LJ 492: AIR 1953 Mad 243 (244) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5).

——Ss. 4, 13 — House held to be not common gaming house — Person found gaming cannot be held guilty.

The Public Gambling Act makes punishable gaming in a common gaming house by Sec. 4 and gaming in public places, public street, or thoroughfare by Sec. 13. Gaming in any other place including a private house will not be an offence under the Act. Thus, when the Magistrate finds that the house was not a common gaming house, it is his duty to acquit the persons who are said to have been found gaming in that place. 1962 (1) Cri LJ 615: AIR 1962 Manipur 20 (21, 22) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——S. 4 — Scope — Gambling not per se an offence under the Gambling Act. It is only an offence to gamble in a common gaming house as defined in S. 1. Where, therefore, the accused merely met on a Diwali night for a friendly game of cards in the house of one of them, no offence is committed. 52 Cri LJ 365: AIR 1951 Pat 405 (405) (Pt C) (Pr 3).

2. "Found in any such house".

——S. 4 — "Found gaming" — Meaning of — The Act deliberately use the word 'Found gaming' which is wider than 'seen gaming'. The word found is more akin to "discovered". See Madras City Police Act (3 of 1888), S. 46. 1960 Mad LJ (Cri) 16: 1959 Mad WN 171.

3. Illegal search — Effect on conviction.

——S. 4 — Search Warrant under Sec. 5 issued in name of Station Officer — Latter endorsing it to second Officer not authorised to make search — Presumption under Sec. 6 does not apply — Conviction based solely on such presumption — Cannot be sustained. See Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 5. 1956 All LJ 862: 1956 All WR (HC) 689.

——S. 4 — Rajasthan Public Gambling Ordinance (1949), Ss. 3, 4 and 6 — Search warrant illegal — Presumption under Sec. 6 cannot be drawn — Conviction for gambling cannot be interfered in revision if the judgment of the trial Court can be supported on the actual gaming and realisation of commission produced in the case. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 4644.

4. Nature of offence.

——S. 4 (U. P.) — Offence is not cognizable. See Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 3. 1965 All WR (HC) 115: 1965 All LJ 119: 1965 All LJ 68.

5. Burden of proof.

——S. 4 — Burden of proof — In a prosecution of the accused for an offence of gambling in American futures it is for prosecution to prove that the "Muddemal Slip" contain a record of betting transactions or were in any other manner connected with betting in American futures. It is therefore for the prosecution to explain how the bets in American futures are recorded and to satisfy the Court that the slips seized were a part of this record. See Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 3. AIR 1954 Madh B 145.

6. Evidence.

——S. 4 — Presumption under Sec. 6 — Nature of — Presumption under S. 6 of the Act can be drawn if on search of the house, cards etc. are found therein. The presumption so drawn is not irrefutable. The presumption may be drawn and used against the accused in one set of circumstances and in another Courts may not convict the accused on presumption alone. The presumption merely relieves the prosecution of the duty of adducing complete evidence as to the gambling, but even then the evidence has to be considered as a whole in determining whether the offences under the Secs. 3 and 4 of the Act were made out. 1964 All WR (HC) 435.

——Ss. 4, 3 and 13 — Instruments of gaming — Recovery of, is relevant only if offences under Ss. 3 and 4 are to be proved by presumption — Offence under S. 13 — No question of presumption arises. See Public Gambling Act (3 of 1867), S. 3. 1959 Cri LJ 1397: AIR 1959 All 799.

——S. 4 — Conviction under — Requirements. It is in respect of convictions under Ss. 3 and 4 that proof of 'Nal' is needed. See Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 3. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 2702.

——S. 4 — Being found in gaming house — Evidence — Solitary word of Police Sub-Inspector is not sufficient — Formal complaint recorded by him, is not independent corroboration. See Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (4 of 1887), S. 5. AIR 1955 NUC (Kutch) 3689.

——S. 4 — Evidence — Sufficiency of — Statement of Police-Officer — Credibility. — Where a police officer is not bound to give out the source of his information regarding any offence his statement followed by subsequent conduct consistent with the same is enough to hold that he had credible information upon which he could take search of accused person. See M. B. Gambling Act, Section 3 AIR 1955 NUC (Madh B) 1551.

——S. 4 — Gambler's testimony — To be treated as that of accomplice—Corroboration — Necessary by independent witnesses — Corroboration need not be by direct evidence—Sufficient if it is merely circumstantial. See Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 3. 1961 MPLJ (Notes) 74.

——S. 4 — Offence under Section 4, Public Gambling Act — Solitary statement of investigating officer not sufficient for conviction. See Criminal Trial — Evidence. 1962 Cur LJ 417 (Punj).

——S. 4 — Common gaming house — Mere presence of implements of gaming or the facts that some moneys were found in a glass placed near the knee of the occupier or that some money was lying in front of the other accused hardly serve as evidence that the house was a common gaming house and the people present there were engaged in gaming for the sake of gain or profit. See Punjab Prevention of Gambling Act (3 of 1867), S. 3. AIR 1955 NUC (Punj) 3442.

7. Presumption under the section.

——S. 4 — Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (4 of 1887), Ss. 5, 6 — Scope —Duty of Court — Issue of proper warrant under S. 6 — Presumption under S. 7 — Rebuttal.

Where in a prosecution under Ss. 4 and 5, Bombay Act 4 of 1887 the prosecution proves that the police entered the house in question under a proper warrant issued under Sec. 6 and seized the instruments of gaming there, it is the duty of the Court to hold that the owner of the house was keeping a common gaming house and that every person was present there for the purpose of gaming unless the accused are able to prove the contrary. In such a case the prosecution need not prove by positive evidence that the owner was keeping a common gaming house and that the persons found there were assembled for the purpose of gaming: 36 Cr LJ 902, Dist.

The accused persons, who were all Muhammadans, were found playing on Idd holiday, a day sacred to the Muhammadans, in a house in broad day light with its doors kept open when the police raid took place. The raid had taken place in pursuance of a proper warrant issued under S. 6:

Held, that the presumption arising under S. 7 may well be rebutted by the above circumstances and, therefore, the accused could not be held guilty under Ss. 4 and 5. (1952) 5 Sau LR 79.

8. Validity of section.

3. Procedure relating to search.

——S. 5 — Authority to search warrant—Delegation of power to search — Applicability of S. 79, Criminal P. C.

Where there is no inconsistency between the provisions of the Criminal P. C. and the U. P. Gambling Act, or where the Gambling Act is silent the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure will be applicable to the proceedings under the Gambling Act. Thus, the provisions of S. 79, Criminal P. C., are applicable to a search under the Gambling Act. 5. Delegation of authority to search.

——Ss. 5 and 6 — Construction and Scope — Presumption under S. 6 — Authority to make search — Delegation of — Legality — (Cr. P. C. (1898), S. 79) — (Interpretation of Statutes).

The presumption under Sec. 6, encroaches upon the liberty of a person and has got to be strictly construed. There is nothing in Sec. 5 which empowers a person, authorised by the Magistrate to make a search, to further delegate that power to another officer. There is no provision by which the provisions of Sec. 79, Criminal P. C., have been made applicable to a warrant issued under S. 5, Public Gambling Act. Therefore, if a warrant issued under Sec. 5 in favour of a particular officer by a Magistrate has been endorsed in favour of another officer and the search has been made by such an officer, such a search cannot be regarded as one in accordance with Sec. 5, Public Gambling Act, and the presumption under Sec. 6 will not be available to the prosecution in such circumstances. 30 All 60 and AIR 1920 All 150 and AIR 1945 Nag 216, Not approved. ——S. 5 — Notification of local Government — Delegation of power to search — Second officer executing search warrant in contravention of notification — Irregularity — Effect — Applicability of S. 6.

The terms of the Sec. 5 of the Public Gambling Act clearly show that the Legislature has attached importance to the rank of the officer who is competent to execute the warrant, and no warrant can be issued to any officer of police not below such rank as the State Government shall appoint in that behalf. Hence where the notification issued by the U. P. Government clearly laid down that the State Government under Sec. 5 of the Public Gambling Act should appoint Inspectors of police and officers in-charge of police stations not below the rank of Sub-Inspector as the officers who may be authorised to exercise the power described in that section and under that notification a second officer who is not in-charge of a police station was not authorised to exercise the power described in Sec. 5, but the search warrant given in the name of the station officer of the police station was endorsed by him in favour of this second officer who executed it.

Held, that the warrant was wrongly endorsed and the execution of the search warrant by the second officer amounted to an irregularity, which rendered Sec. 6 of the Act inapplicable. AIR 1920 All 150 and 30 All 60 and AIR 1955 All 231, Disting. (1956) All WR (HC) 509: 1956 All LJ 935.

——Ss. 5, 6, 3 and 4 — Search warrant under S. 5 issued in name of Station Officer — Latter endorsing it to second officer not authorised to make search — Presumption under S. 6 does not apply — Conviction based solely on such presumption— validity — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 4 (1) (p) and 79).

Notification No. 2195/VI-349-1909 dated 14th of June 1910 published in the U. P. Gazette, Part 1, p. 9598 dated 25th of June 1910 says that Inspectors of Police and all officers in charge of police stations not below the rank of Sub-Inspector, may be authorised to take action under S. 5 of the Public Gambling Act. It will thus appear that though the police officer originally authorised under the warrant might endorse it to another police officer, yet it is necessary that the endorsement must be in favour of a person who has been appointed in that behalf by the State Government; and if it is endorsed in favour of a person who is not such a person then the mere endorsement will not make him an authorised police officer and the execution of the warrant by him would not fulfil the requirements of Section 5 or Section 6 of the Act.

The presumption under Section 6 encroaches upon the liberty of a person and has got to be strictly construed.

There is nothing in Section 5 which empowers a person authorised by Magistrate to make a search, to further delegate that power to another officer. The provisions of Section 79, Cr.P.C., have not been made applicable to a warrant issued under Section 5 of the Public Gambling Act. Therefore, if the warrant issued under Section 5 in favour of an officer in charge of a police station K has been endorsed in favour of another officer, viz., the second officer who cannot be said to be in charge of the police station K within S. 4 (p), Criminal P. C., and the search has been made by such an officer, the search cannot be regarded as one in accordance with Section 5, and the presumption under Section 6 will not be available to the prosecution in such circumstances. ——S. 5 — Superintendent of Police invested with powers of District Superintendent — Warrant issued by — Legality — (Police Act (1861), Ss. 1 and 23).

In S. 1, Police Act, the District Superintendent of Police appointed by a State Government is to perform all or any of the duties of a District Superintendent of Police under the Police Act in any district and S. 23 gives the police the power to detect and bring offenders to justice and it cannot be said that the power to detect and bring offenders to justice should be circumscribed to offences which come only under the Penal Code. This will be too narrow an interpretation and is not justified by the wording of the section. There is, therefore, nothing wrong or illegal in investing a Superintendent of Police with powers of District Superintendent of Police to issue warrants under S. 5, Public Gambling Act. ILR (1955) Punj 24: 1956 Cri LJ 1348: AIR 1956 Punj 226 (227) (Pr 6) (DB).

7. Warrant must state identity of place to be searched.

——S. 5 — Search warrant — Requirements of—House to be searched must be described and it must also be stated that the house was used as common gaming-house.

The Public Gambling Act does not make gambling in a private house illegal. Before issuing a search warrant under S. 5, the officer must have had reliable information that the public servant concerned was using or keeping instruments of gaming in the Government quarters in his occupation for his profit or gain. In the warrant the house should have been described and it ought to have been stated that the house was used as a common gaming-house. 1962 (1) Cri LJ 615: AIR 1962 Manipur 20 (22) (Pt E) (Pr 8).

8. Seizure of money found on person.

——Ss. 5, 8 — Court has no jurisdiction to order forfeiture of moneys found upon person of accused: 7 All LJ 404: 11 Cri LJ 373, Overruled.

Under S. 5, the only articles authorised to be seized, when a search is made of the persons of those who are taken into custody, are those that may be described as "instruments of gaming". The officer is not authorised to seize moneys or other articles recovered from the person or the persons taken into custody upon such search. Sec. 8 does not authorise the forfeiture of moneys recovered from the persons of the accused. Thus, the Court has no jurisdiction under S. 8 to order the forfeiture of moneys found upon the persons of the accused. 7 All LJ 404: 11 Cri LJ 373, Overruled; Case-law, Ref. 1950 All LJ 58: 51 Cri LJ 640: 1950 All WR 141: 1950 All Cri Cas 53: ILR (1950) All 1299: AIR 1950 All 199 (199) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

SYNOPSIS

(Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 6.)

1. Presumption under section mandatory.
2. Presumption when can be raised.
3. Presumption is rebuttable.
4. Gaming.
5. Validity of section.
6. Conviction based on independent evidence.
7. Appeal and revision.
8. Cases under other similar Acts.

1. Presumption under section mandatory.

——S. 6 — Scope of presumption under — Special rule of evidence — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 114).

The provision of S. 6 of the Public Gambling Act constitute a special rule of evidence as to the onus probandi in such cases; and, although with reference to the general terms of S. 114 of the Evidence Act, Section 6 of the Public Gambling Act has not seriously altered the ordinary rules of evidence as to presumptions or burden of proof, the provisions of the section must not be held strictly applicable to cases in which search is not made by a duly authorised officer under the provisions of S. 5. That things like cards, money and a tin containing nal when found in a house suspected of being a common gaming-house would be 'evidence' is obvious and scarcely needs special legislation, but the context of S. 6 clearly shows that the word is used in the sense of 'proof' and not in the sense of evidence which falls short of proof. The rule contained in Section 6 renders imperative a presumption which has always been regarded as permissible by the rules of evidence. 1884 All WN 39 and 1884 All WN 285, Followed. (1956) All WR (HC) 509: (1956) All LJ 935.

2. Presumption when can be raised.

——S. 6 — Presumption under S. 6 encroaches upon the liberty of a person — Has got to be strictly construed — Construction of — Authority to make search — Delegation of — Further delegation of that power by that officer not legal — (Criminal P. C (1898), S. 79) — (Interpretation of Statutes) — (Civil P. C. (1908), Pre.) — 30 All 60 and AIR 1920 All 150 and AIR 1945 Nag 216, Not Approved. See Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 5. 1956 Cri LJ 952: AIR 1956 All 449 (DB).

——S. 6 — Applicability — Delegation of power to search — Second officer executing search warrant in contravention of notification under S. 5— Presumption under S. 6 cannot be raised. See Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 5. 1956 All LJ 935.

——S. 6 — Search warrant under S. 5 issued in name of Station Officer — Latter endorsing it to Second Officer not authorised to make search — Search cannot be in accordance with S. 5 — Presumption under S. 6 does not apply — Conviction based solely on such presumption cannot be sustained. See Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 5. 1956 All LJ 862.

——S. 6 — Officer asked in the warrant to produce article seized before Magistrate — Warrant not vitiated — Presumption under S. 7 can be availed of. See Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (4 of 1887), S. 6. 1957 Cri LJ 362: AIR 1957 Bom 66 (DB).

——S. 6 — Scope — Search not made in accordance with provisions of Cr. P. Code — Presumption under S. 6 will not arise. See J and K. Gambling Act (18 of 1977), S. 5. 1954 Cri LJ 488: AIR 1954 J and K 28 (DB).

——S. 6 — Applicability — Power can be delegated generally or specifically and by name or in virtue of office — Power to issue warrants delegated by Chief Commissioner of Kutch to police officers not below the rank of Deputy Superintendent of Police — Delegation is general empowerment — Warrant unauthorised — Presumption under S. 7 of Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act cannot be drawn. ——S. 6 — Presumption under — Mere assertion that articles seized are records of gaming, does not raise presumption under S. 6 — (Madhya Bharat Gambling Act (51 of 1949), S. 6). AIR 1955 NUC (Madh. B) 31.

——S. 6 — Presumption under — Duty of Court — If contrary be made to appear, the presumption referred to in the section ought not to be raised. See Madhya Bharat Gambling Act (1949), S. 6. 1953 Cri LJ 1121: AIR 1953 Madh B 173.

——S. 6 — Presumption under, arises when entry is effected and search made upon receipt of credible information mentioned in S. 5 — There must be something on record to show the belief of the officer. AIR 1955 NUC (Punj) 3442.

——S. 6 — "District Superintendent of Police" — Does not mean Additional Superintendent of Police — Warrant signed by latter — Presumption under S. 6 cannot be drawn. See Rajasthan Public Gambling Ordinance (1949), S. 5. 1965 (1) Cri LJ 80: AIR 1965 Raj 5 (DB).

——S. 6 — Scope — Rajasthan Public Gambling Ordinance (1949), Ss. 3, 4 and 6 — Search warrant illegal — Presumption under S. 6 cannot be drawn — Conviction for gambling can still be supported if there is evidence of actual gaming and realisation of commission. See Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 3. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 4644.

——S. 6 — Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, Ss. 6, 7 — Special warrant — Requirements — Non-compliance with requirements — Effect. See Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (1887), S. 6. 52 Cri LJ 812: AIR 1951 Sau 55 (DB).

3. Presumption is rebuttable.

——Ss. 6, 3 and 4 — Presumption under S. 6——Nature of.

Presumption under S. 6 of the Act can be drawn if on search of the house cards, etc., are found therein. The presumption so drawn is not rebuttable. The presumption may be drawn and used against the accused in one set of circumstances and in another Courts of law may not convict the accused on presumption alone. The presumption to be drawn under Section 6 merely relieves the prosecution of the duty of adducing complete evidence as to the gambling, but even then the evidence has to be considered as a whole in determining whether the offences under Ss. 3 and 4 of the Act were made out. 1964 All Cr R 303: 1964 All WR (HC) 435.

——S. 6 — Presumption under, is a weak one — Reasonable explanation of accused should be accepted. AIR 1955 NUC (Madh Bha) 3005.

——S. 6 —Scope and weight of — Presumption — The section gives lead only to the presumption — Presumption is only a rebuttable presumption. See Madras Gambling Act (3 of 1930), S. 6. 1960 Mad LJ (Cri) 382: 1959 Mad WN 456.

——S. 6 — Gambling on Diwali occasion — Presumption under Act is not so strong. AIR 1955 NUC (Punj) 3442.

——S. 6 — Presumption — Rebuttal.

A house must be habitually used as a gaming house and the person who owns or occupies it must have the intention or knowledge that it is being so used. Similarly the accused person must derive some benefit or profit from the game, otherwise he cannot be held guilty under Sec. 3. Under Sec. 6 if a house is raided on the authority of a warrant under Sec. 5 and cards, dice or instruments of gaming are found in the house, then it may be presumed that the house is a common gaming house and the persons present in the house at the time of the search had gone there for the purpose of gaming. Under Sec. 6 the presence of certain articles is evidence until the contrary is made to appear that the house is a common gaming house. The presumption arising under Sec. 6, however is not conclusive and may in certain circumstances be extremely weak. Even in a case where no defence evidence is led the presumption may be rebutted by bringing out circumstances which go to show that some or all the ingredients which constitute the offence under Sec. 3 or the offence under Sec. 4 are lacking and in such a case the accused persons will not be held guilty.

Where the occasion was two days before the Diwali day when Hindus indulge in a great deal of gambling because it is considered auspicious, the accused was a Municipal employee and it had not been shown that he had derived any profit or gain from gambling either on this occasion or on any other occasion, the presence of a pot containing some money near his knee was scarcely evidence of the fact that he was taking a share of the winnings of other persons. Nor had it been shown that in this house gambling took place on any previous occasion, and these circumstances were quite sufficient to rebut the presumption arising under Sec. 6. 1954 Cr LJ 1209: 56 Punj LR 78: ILR (1954) Punj 783: AIR 1954 Punj 164 (164) (Pr 3).

4. Gaming.

——S. 6 — 'Gaming' — Game involving skill and chance played with stakes — It is still gaming — Game purely one of skill is not gaming. AIR 1955 NUC (Madh Bha) 3005.

5. Validity of section.

——Ss. 6, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 9 — Constitutional validity — Application of stringent provisions of Act to certain areas — State Government having better knowledge of local conditions given legislative guidance to choose areas — Sections not contravening Article 14 of Constitution and are valid — Interpretation of Statutes — Statement of Objects and Reasons and Preamble as guides to construction. See Public Gambling Act (3 of 1867), S. 2. 1964 (1) Cri LJ 319: AIR 1964 All 95 (DB).

6. Conviction based on independent evidence.

——S. 6 — Irregularity in search warrant — Effect — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 537).

There is nothing in Sec. 6 to render the results of a search conducted under an irregularly issued warrant inadmissible in evidence. If there is sufficient evidence to sustain the conviction irrespective of the special rule contained in S. 6, the conviction is proper. Mere irregularity in issuing the search warrant does not prejudice the accused or occasion any failure of justice within the meaning of Sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure: 1884 All WN 285 and 28 Bom LR 272, Followed (1956) All WR (HC) 509: (1956) All LJ 935.

7. Appeal and revision.

ferred — Presumption under Sec. 7 of the Act must arise. See Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (4 of 1887), S. 6. 1957 Cri LJ 362: AIR 1957 Bom 66 (DB).

——S. 6 — Conviction on mere presumption raised under Sec. 6, Madras Gaming Act is not prohibited — Still it has been the practice of Madras High Court not to convict on mere presumption alone unless there is something more in addition to the presumption raised under that section. See Madras Gaming Act (3 of 1930), S. 6. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 3190.

——S. 6 — Effect of defective warrant on presumption to be drawn under Explanation to S. 63 and conviction — Presumption may not arise but conviction need not necessarily be set aside if there is evidence that the accused are guilty of the offences with which they are charged and also on the basis of natural presumption. See Mysore Police Act (5 of 1908), Ss. 38 and 63. 1956 Cri LJ 631: AIR 1956 Mys 42.

——S. 6 — Large number of persons found playing cards late at night in a house with all its doors closed — Search taking place in pursuance of a warrant issued, under Sec. 38 — Playing cards and a large sum of money lying on 'Akhada' recovered by police — Held, that in the circumstances a natural presumption arose that the accused were engaged in playing a game of chance irrespective of whether the warrant was in accordance with law or not. See Mysore Police Act (5 of 1908), Ss. 38 and 63. AIR 1953 Mys 14.

——S. 6 — Warrant signed by Assistant Superintendent of Police is valid for the purposes of Secs. 38 and 63 of Mysore Police Act. See Mysore Police Act (5 of 1908), Ss. 4 (b) and 63. AIR 1953 Mys 14.

——S. 6 — Mysore Police Act, Sec. 63, Expl. 3 — 'Gaming and Playing' — Distinction — Accused found in common gaming house during playing — Presumption is, until the contrary is proved that they were there for the purpose of gaming. See Mysore Police Act (5 of 1908), S. 63, Expl. 3. AIR 1953 Mys 14.

——S. 6 — (Saurashtra) Gambling Act, Sec. 7 — Presumption under — Instruments of gaming.

Where the accused are found in possession of cards and counters with different colours which are generally used in place of coins, the presumption under Sec. 7 arises that the place where such instruments of gaming are found is a common gaming house and it is for the accused to displace that presumption. SECTION 8

——S. 8 — Accused acquitted — No order of forfeiture.

Before the Court can exercise its jurisdiction to pass order of forfeiture of money or destruction of property under Sec. 8 it is necessary that the accused must be convicted of the offence with which he is charged. This being a penal enactment must be construed strictly. In the case of an acquittal therefore the Court has no power to pass an order of forfeiture or destruction under this section. 1952 All LJ 169: 1952 RD (HC) 199 (1): 1952 All Cr R 51: 1952 All WR (HC) 128: 1953 Cri LJ 1017: AIR 1953 All 463 (463) (Pr 2).

——S. 13 — Scope — Instruments of gaming — Recovery of — Relevancy — Is relevant only if offences under Secs. 3 and 4 are to be proved by presumption — Offence under Sec. 13 is to be proved by evidence and no question of presumption arises. Where the eye-witnesses stated that they saw Satta gambling being indulged in by the applicant with one B, but they did not depose about the words used by B and the applicant, and what they stated was the effect produced on their minds by the words used by B and the applicant.

Held, that the words "uttered by the applicant and B" would be the real evidence and it would be for the Court to interpret them and determine whether they amount to betting or wagering. The effect produced by them on the minds of the witnesses was wholly irrelevant and inadmissible in evidence; it was not for them to judge whether the applicant was betting or not. 1959 Cr LJ 1397: 1959 All LJ 160: 1960 All WR (HC) 129: 1960 All Cr R 114: AIR 1959 All 799 (799) (Pt A) (Pr 1).

——S. 13 — 'Public place' — Arhar field separated from public street — Effect of — Explanation added by — (U. P. Public Gambling (Amendment) Act (34 of 1952)).

Under Sec. 13 of the Act gaming has been prohibited in a public street, place or thoroughfare. On the face of it, an arhar field would not be a public place since the public would have no access thereto. It is private property into which if any unconnected person were to enter he would be committing trespass.

Where the arhar field on which gaming was found to be going on, although it was an open space, was not adjacent to and abutting a public street but was separated therefrom by another field the field is not a public place, not only per se, but even under the extended definition of that term under the explanation added to the section by S. 4 of the U. P. Public Gambling (Amendment) Act 34 of 1952. 1957 All LJ 282: 1957 All WR (HC) 412.

——S. 13 — Conviction under — Requirements — S. 13 which makes it an offence to gamble in a public street, place or thoroughfare does not lay down as a necessary ingredient of the offence the condition that "Nal" should be taken out. Therefore if a person is found gambling in a public street, place or thoroughfare he commits an offence punishable under S. 13 even without proof of 'Nal' being taken out. See Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 3. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 2702.

——S. 13 (before amendment) — Public place, what is — Open Chabutara abutting on public street having unrestricted access, is a public place.

Under Sec. 13, it must be proved that, inter alia the place where the accused was found gambling was a 'public street' place or thoroughfare'.

According to 1952 amendment of the section, for the purposes of this section "public place" includes any open space situate adjacent to or abutting on a public street and not separated therefrom by a boundary wall. But the amendment will not govern the case in which the offence was committed before the amendment. In such a case the term 'public place' has to be interpreted without reference to the amendment.

In order to determine whether a place is a 'public place' within the meaning of the term as used in Sec. 13 (before amendment) the test is whether members of the public have, as a matter of fact, a free access to it. If they do reach the place without let or hindrance it is a 'public place' but if the entry is regulated by permission or is otherwise restricted it is not a 'public place'. In the former case it is immaterial that members of the public have no legal right to claim access to that place. If a member of the public, even in the absence of a legal right, can actually find access to the said place the place becomes 'public place'. It is also immaterial for this purpose whether the place is owned by a private individual or is vested in a public body like Municipal Board or District Board or State. It is equally immaterial whether it is visible from a public place or road or is screened from view from a thoroughfare. The gambling may be going on in the verandah of a house abutting on a public road but there may be a person on duty in the verandah to prevent persons from entering the verandah. If such is the case the verandah will not become a 'public place' notwithstanding the fact that it is visible to the passers by. On the contrary there may be a case where gambling may be going on in the innermost room of a house but the members of the public may be finding free access to the said room. In such a case the room in which the gambling is going on will become a 'public place'.

Where there was no restriction on the public against finding access to the chabutara abutting on a public way in a village on which gambling was going on, the chabutra was held a 'public place' within the meaning of Sec. 13, as it stood before its amendment. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 2288.

——S. 13 — Public place — Meaning of.

No doubt, a public street, place or thoroughfare is not necessarily a street, place or thoroughfare where the public has a right to go or which the public has a right to use. If a street, place or thoroughfare is in fact used by the public, it will be a public street place or thoroughfare within the meaning of S. 13.

A public place must be a place which is either open to the public or is used by the public and the publicity of its situation is not a necessary element of the offence any more than public ownership.

An arhar field on the road side in which crop is standing cannot be said to be a public place within the meaning of Sec. 13. 1954 All WR (HC) 32: 1953 All LJ 714: 1954 Cr LJ 765: AIR 1954 All 356 (357, 358) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 7).

——S. 13 (as amended by U. P. Act 1 of 1917) —Gaming — Proof of.

Gaming, wagering or betting have all one common feature, that the game is a game of chance and played with stakes. In order, therefore, that gaming be established, the prosecution must establish, (1) that the game being played was a game of chance, and (2) that it was being played with stakes. The mere proof that some game of cards was being played and that some money was found in possession of the accused is not enough to establish that they were gaming. 1952 RD (HC) 125: 1952 All LJ 153: 1952 Cri LJ 1471: AIR 1952 All 817 (817) (Pr 1).

——S. 13 — Teji Mandi transaction — Instruments of gaming — Hyderabad Public Gambling Act (2 of 1305-F), S. 13.

Where the contention of the prosecution is that the offence of gaming consisted in the Teji Mandi transactions (which were entered in the account books kept with accused where these transactions took place) the Teji Mandi transactions cannot be regarded as wagers, or cannot constitute gaming and the books cannot be called instruments of gaming. This apart, books of accounts in which bets are recorded by their very nature are not instruments of gaming under Sec. 13. 53 IA 241, Rel. on. ILR (1952) Hyd 445: 1952 Cri LJ 1307: AIR 1952 Hyd 147 (148) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 13 — Public place.

Public place is one where the public can have free access. It should be a place of public resort. As to whether a particular place is a 'public place' within the meaning of the Gambling Act would depend on the character of the place and the use to which it is put. If the place is not open to the public such as a private house, or a private garden it cannot be called a public place. It would not cease to be a private house or a private garden simply because the passers by could stop and witness the gambling. Gambling in a vacant private land which could be easily reached from the public road by outsiders going on the road can never be regarded as public place for that place is not open to the public nor could they use it. The mere visibility of the land or house to the public would not make it a public place. In each case whether the place is a public place or not must depend on the facts proved. ILR (1952) Hyd 445: 1952 Cri LJ 1307: AIR 1952 Hyd 147 (148) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 13 — Money found in possession of accused cannot be forfeited. See Madhya Bharat Gambling Act (51 of 1949), S. 12 (2). 1957 Cri LJ 284 (Madh Bha).

——S. 13 — Applicability — Essentials to be proved.

If a Police Party finds people playing with certain instruments used for gaming, they have no right to arrest any of the persons under Sec. 13 unless the persons are found playing for money or other valuable thing. It is the most important ingredient for the offence that the person or persons must have been seen playing for money or other valuable thing.

The fact that the accused were playing for money or other valuable thing cannot be inferred from the conduct of the persons in running away at the sight of the Police. It is necessary for the Police Officer to state in so many words that he found the persons playing for money or other valuable thing. 1961 (2) Cr LJ 504 (505, 506) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5) (Manipur).

——S. 13 — Instrument of gaming — Bet entered in notebook along with figures on which bet is laid—Notebook is not an instrument of gaming — What is prohibited is playing for money with instrument of gaming. AIR 1955 NUC (Nag) 956.

——S. 13 — Applicability — Satta gambling — Mere entering stakes on chit — Offence.

Where the petitioner alleged to be indulging in Satta gambling accepted one rupee currency note from a decoy punter for staking on certain numbers and after he made an entry regarding the stake on a slip of a paper, the raiding party arrived and took into possession from the petitioner, one rupee currency note, a pencil, the slip and some cash,

Held, that these facts did not constitute the offence under Sec. 13 of the Act. At best it was merely a preparation which was not culpable. That apart, merely entering on a chit the alleged stakes could not constitute gambling as envisaged under S. 13. 61 Pun LR 439: 1960 Cr LJ 275 (1): AIR 1960 Punj 72 (72, 73) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

Under S. 16 it is only an informer who can be rewarded by directing a portion of the fine levied under Ss. 3 and 4 to be paid to him. Section 16 will not authorise Magistrate to reward to a Police officer for good and careful handling of a case before him. 1962 (1) Cri LJ 615: AIR 1962 Manipur 20 (22) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

——Pre. — Whether the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act, is ultra vires offending Arts. 14 and 19 of the Constitution. See Constitution of India, Art. 14. (1965) 69 Cal WN 1035 (DB).

SECTION 1

——Ss. 1 and 2 (c) — Provisions of Act are intra vires — Act is within legislative competence of Parliament even with regard to its application to agricultural lands — Constitution of India, Sch. VII, List I, Entry 32, List II, Entry 18.

Provisions of the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act are intra vires: AIR 1963 Punj 290, Rel. on.

The applicability of the Act to agricultural lands cannot be challenged by contending that Parliament is not competent to legislate in respect of agricultural lands, the State Legislature having the exclusive jurisdiction under Item 18 of List II, to legislate in respect of agricultural lands. In view of Item 32 of List I, where the land belongs to the Union, the Parliament is authorised to legislate about the same, and if there is a legislation of the Parliament dealing with the matter, the property would not be subject even to legislation of the State. 65 Pun LR 615: ILR (1963) 2 Punj 229: AIR 1964 Punj 304 (305) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

SECTION 2

——Ss. 2(c) and 1 — Provisions of Act are intra vires — Act is within legislative competence of Parliament even with regard to its application to agricultural lands — Constitution of India, Sch. VII, List I, Entry 32; List II, Entry 18. See Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act (32 of 1958), S. 1. AIR 1964 Punj 304.

——S. 2(c) — Term "Premises" includes agricultural lands — Words and Phrases — 'Premises'.

In the absence of any qualifying words restricting the meaning of "land" in the definition of "premises", the word should be given its natural meaning as land used for any purpose including an agricultural land. 65 Pun LR 615: ILR (1963) 2 Punj 229: AIR 1964 Punj 304 (305) (Pt B) (Pr 2).

——S. 3 (a) — Appointment of Estate Officers by virtue of their office — Appointment is valid by reason of S. 15, General Clauses Act, 1897.

Section 3(a) of the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act, 1958, provides that the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint such persons, being gazetted officers of the Government, as it thinks fit to be Estate Officers for the purposes of the Act. The argument that the name of the officer occupying the gazetted post must be seen in the notifications cannot be accepted in the face of S. 15 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, which is a statutory authorisation to appoint persons by virtue of office as Estate Officers. They could be appointed, no doubt, by name also as provided under S. 15. But, if they are appointed by virtue of office, it cannot be questioned. AIR 1961 Tripura 52, Rel. on. AIR 1964 Tripura 9 (11) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

——S. 3 — Notification appointing Additional District Magistrate as Estate Officer — More than one such Magistrate in the same district — They are all appointed as Estate Officers.

The purpose of the appointment under S. 3 of the Act is only to clothe a person by virtue of the office he holds with the authority to act as Estate Officer. Thus, if there are more officers at the time of the issue of a notification than one holding the office of Additional District Magistrate of a district, then the notification appointing the Additional District Magistrate as Estate Officer will only mean that both of them are appointed as Estate Officers. AIR 1964 Tripura 9 (11) (Pt C) (Pr 10).

——Ss. 4 and 5 — Notice under S. 4 stating only one ground that the person is in unauthorised occupation, is an invalid notice — Notice under S. 5 without stating reasons for evicting occupant but stating only decision that he is in unauthorised occupation is an irregular notice — Failure to follow obligatory or mandatory requirement of S. 4 makes the order null and void and without jurisdiction and likewise the omission to state reasons in notice under S. 5 makes order null and void as being a material irregularity in exercise of the vested jurisdiction. Hence High Court can suo motu take notice of illegal assumption under Art. 227 of the Constitution — Constitution of India, Art. 227: Case-law Discussed. (1965) 69 Cal WN 1035 (DB).

——Ss. 4 and 9 — Validity of Act.

The provisions of the Act do not offend the provisions of Art. 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution and the Act is valid.

Section 4 provides for the issue of a show-cause notice which gives the person affected a right to appear and state his ease before the Estate Officer who has been substituted for the "competent officer". Further, if necessary, a full-dress inquiry is contemplated. S. 9 deals with appeals and S. 9 (4) clearly envisages a regular hearing of an appeal by an experienced judicial officer. It is thus clear that even if a question of disputed title arises out of the issue of a notice under S. 4 by an Estate Officer, the affected person has every opportunity to present his case and the dispute can be properly adjudicated on, before any final action is taken under S. 5 of the Act. ILR (1961) 1 Punj 354: 62 Punj LR 871: AIR 1961 Punj 98 (100) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

——S. 4 (1) — Notice issued under S. 4 (1) — Its contents — Necessity of its being correct at the time it is issued — It cannot be corrected in later stage of proceedings — No obligation on receiver occupant to get it clarified — Premises not described correctly in notice — Proceedings started against occupant are illegal. AIR 1964 Tripura 9 (12) (Pt D) (Prs 14, 15).

SECTION 5

——S. 5 — Notice under S. 5 without stating reasons for evicting occupant but stating only decision that he is in unauthorised occupation is an irregular notice. See Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act (1958), S. 4. (1965) 69 Cal WN 1035 (DB).

SECTION 9

——Ss. 9(1) and 10 — Order passed by District Judge in appeal against order under S. 5 — District Judge acts as persona designata — Revision is excluded by S. 10 — Civil Procedure Code (1908), S. 115.

An appeal lies to the District Judge as persona designata and not to be a Court of the District Judge. This is clear from the language of the provisions of Ss. 9 (1) and 10. The decision of the District Judge does not give rise to a revision application under S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. By enacting that the order of the appellate officer shall not be called in question in any original suit, application or execution proceeding, Section 10 of the Act provides a very wide prohibition. The word 'application' is wide enough to cover an application made under S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. AIR 1938 Cal 465 and AIR 1965 Madh Pra 237, Rel. on; AIR 1963 Madh Pra 218, Disting. 1965 Jab LJ 364: 1965 MPLJ 415: ILR (1965) Madh Pra 998: AIR 1966 Madh Pra 7 (8) (Pr 5).

——S. 2 (1) —Contravention of order under — Prosecution for — Scope of inquiry — Validity of order — If can be gone into — Evidence.

In a prosecution where the contravention of an order constitutes the offence, the validity of the order does become an ingredient of the offence which the prosecution has to prove. The validity can be established by examining the officer who made the order. It is only then that the accused can have an opportunity of showing that the order was on extraneous consideration, was made mala fide or was outside the ambit of provisions of the Act. AIR 1949 Bom 387, Foll. ILR (1953) 5 Assam 229: 1954 Cr LJ 381: AIR 1954 Assam 62 (63) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Ss. 2 (1), 3 and 4-B (3) — Reasonable restrictions — Test — (Constitution of India, Article 19).

Whether the restrictions imposed by an impugned legislation on the exercise of the fundamental rights are reasonable or not is a matter for the Court to consider, and in doing so, the Court is entitled to take into account the reasonableness of both the substantive as well as the procedural part of the law in all its bearings; in regard to territory, in regard to the nature of the restrictions, and the circumstances and the manner of their enforcement, etc. The test of reasonableness is bound to be conditioned by the understanding and prudence of the individual who applies it to the facts and circumstances of each case; but there can be no doubt that it is well recognised objective standard by which Courts can be guided.

In view of the above, the provisions of Sections 2 (1), 3 and 4-B of Assam Maintenance of Public Order Act are saved by Cl. (5) of Art. 19 and are not void. AIR 1950 SC 211, Ref. 1953 Cr LJ 1740: AIR 1953 Assam 209 (210) (Pt A) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 2 (1) — If ultra vires as imposing restriction on citizen.

Section 2 (1) has provided for serving the grounds on which the order is made upon the person affected and for enabling him to make a representation to the Advisory Council against that order. But if the petitioner has made no grievance on these points, the mere fact that the order depends upon the satisfaction of the officer does not necessarily impose any reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the citizen's right, and the section is not ultra vires on that ground. AIR 1950 Pat 322; AIR 1950 Bom 363, Disting; AIR 1950 SC 211, Ref. 1953 Cri LJ 1740: AIR 1953 Assam 209 (211) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

——S. 2 (1) and S. 3, Proviso — Validity.

The contention that under the proviso to Section 3 the State Govt. can at its will indefinitely continue the order of detention and there is no provision in the Act that the report of the Advisory Council will be binding on the State Government and therefore, the proviso is unreasonable and it makes Section 2 (1) void is not tenable because the proviso to Section 3 is severable from the first part of Section 3, and therefore even if it is held to be unreasonable, it will not affect the validity of the remaining portion of Section 3 or that of the other sections of the Act on the ground of unreasonableness. 1953 Cr LJ 1740: AIR 1953 Assam 209 (212) (Pt C) (Pr 10) (DB).

——S. 2 (1) — Fixation of period — If makes detention order invalid.

The contention that there should be no period fixed in the order itself as the fixation of such a period is likely to prejudice the case of the detenue before the Advisory Council, cannot stand because under Section 2 (1) the order continues for a period of one year from the date on which it is confirmed or modified under sub-section (3) of Section 4-B of the Act, unless earlier revoked. Moreover, the Advisory Council is not concerned with the duration of the order but it has to consider on the materials placed before it as to whether there is sufficient ground for the making of the order and then on the report of the Advisory Council the State Government can confirm, modify or even cancel the order made under sub-section (1) of Section 2. Thus the Act purports to be a permanent statute and the fixation of time in the detention order itself is not prejudicial but to the advantage of the detenue. AIR 1952 SC 27, Disting. 1953 Cr LJ 1740: AIR 1953 Assam 209 (212) (Pt D) (Pr 11) (DB).

——S. 2 (as amended by Assam Act 21 of 1950) — Validity.

The Preamble to Act 5 of 1947 has been amended by Act (21 of 1950) whereby the words "restrictions on movement" have been substituted for the words "preventive detention"; in other words, Act of 1947, as amended by Act 21 of 1950, is no longer law dealing with preventive detention, but law imposing restrictions on movement. There is nothing in the Constitution of India which imposes an obligation on a State Government, when enacting a law restricting the movement of a citizen, to provide a safeguard similar to the one providing for a reference to an Advisory Board under the Preventive Detention Act 1950 (4 of 1950), as amended. In the absence of such a constitutional obligation, the question of reasonableness or otherwise of restrictions imposed on a citizen's movement, must be determined without any reference to what are characterised as safeguards. Hence, Section 2 of the Assam Act 5 of 1947 which imposes restrictions on movement without providing a safeguard, namely, reference to an Advisory Board, not ultra vires the Legislature and the restrictions imposed cannot be regarded as unreasonable from the point of view of procedural and substantive law. ——S. 2 (6) (a) — Report in writing of the Provincial Government.

Under sub-section (6) of Section 3, if it is intended to take action under Cl. (a) of sub-section (6) of Section 2, it is the Provincial Government who is to make a report in writing of the fact, namely, that the person against whom an order of detention is made has absconded or is concealing himself, to a Magistrate of the First Class having jurisdiction. Without such report the Magistrate cannot take action. ILR (1953) 5 Assam 194: 1953 Cri LJ 476: AIR 1953 Assam 54 (54) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

——S. 2 (6) — Action under, after lapse of detention order.

Once the duration of the order of detention has expired, the authorities competent to act, under the Act, are debarred from making any order under the provisions of the Act, the effect of which is to revive a lapsed order. Hence an action under Section 2 (6) after the lapse of detention order by efflux of time is without jurisdiction. ILR (1953) 5 Assam 194: 1953 Cri LJ 476: AIR 1953 Assam 54 (55) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 2 (7) — Offence under, is bailable — Bail refused — Proper procedure is to move appropriate Court by application under Criminal P. C. and not by application under Art. 226, Constitution of India — (Constitution of India, Art. 226)—(Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 498). 1952 Cri LJ 1710: AIR 1952 Assam 192 (192) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 2 (1) (a) (as amended) — Meaning of 'satisfied' — Powers of Court to question reasonableness of the grounds of detention — Section 491, Cr. P. Code.

The satisfaction contemplated by the section is satisfaction in point of fact, that detention is necessary in order that no act prejudicial to public safety and maintenance of public order is committed. It is the detaining authority that must be 'honestly satisfied'. The reasonableness or otherwise of the satisfaction which forms the basis of detention is not open to question in any Court.

The detention is preventive; the authority may be satisfied from the past conduct or behaviour of an individual and in that case no question will arise. But if the authority acts on being satisfied about his future intentions the difficulty may arise as to whether it was honestly satisfied or not. Where the past conduct is relied on and it is referred to and described in the grounds of detention it is not open to objection as unreasonable.

Mere preaching of communism as a creed to be adopted by the students is not a reasonable ground; but if such propagation is sought to be made by methods unconstitutional or unlawful it could be subversive of law and order.

Per Ram Labhaya, J.:— The validity of the order of detention depends solely on the satisfaction of the detaining authority as to the necessity of its doing so. The grounds stated in the order of detention are not strictly part of the order; if the Provincial Government is satisfied that it is necessary to detain him under the provisions of the Act the validity of the order cannot be questioned simply because in the ground it stated a fact which may not be prejudicial to public safety or the maintenance of public order.

The powers of a High Court under S. 491, Cr. P. Code are circumscribed by the language of the section. The Court must content itself, where the order of detention is free from mala fides to regard the statement of the authority ordering detention that it is satisfied as to the necessity for doing so, as a fact, and not to question it merely because in its opinion the grounds stated are inadequate or defective. ILR (1950) Assam 147: 52 Cr LJ 68: AIR 1951 Assam 14 (15 to 17) (Prs 2, 6, 7, 10, 11) (DB).

——S. 3 — Reasonable restrictions — Test — Whether the restrictions imposed by an impugned legislation on the exercise of the fundamental rights are reasonable or not is matter for the Court to consider, and in doing so, the Court is entitled to take into account the reasonableness of both the substantive as well as the procedural part of the law in all its bearings; in regard to the territory, the nature of restrictions and the circumstances and the manner of their enforcement etc. The test of reasonableness is bound to be conditioned by the understanding and prudence of the individual who applies it to the facts and circumstances of each case; but there can be no doubt that it is well-recognised objective standard by which Court can be guided. In view of the above, the provisions of Sections 2 (1), 3 and 4-B of Assam Maintenance of Public Order Act are saved by Cl. (5) of Art. 19 and are not void. See Public Safety — Assam Maintenance of Public Order Act (5 of 1947), S. 2 (1). 1953 Cri LJ 1740: AIR 1953 Assam 209 (DB).

——S. 3, Proviso — Validity — The contention that under the proviso to Section 3, the State Government can at its will indefinitely continue the order of detention and there is no provision in the Act that the report of the Advisory Council will be binding on the State Government and therefore, the proviso is unreasonable and it makes S. 2 (1) void is not tenable because the proviso to Section 3 is severable from the first part of Section 3, and therefore, even if it is held to be unreasonable, it will not affect the validity of the remaining portion of S. 3 or that of the other Sections of the Act on the ground of unreasonableness. See Public Safety — Assam Maintenance of Public Order Act (5 of 1947), S. 2 (1). 1953 Cri LJ 1740: AIR 1953 Assam 209 (DB).

SECTION 4-B

——S. 4-B (3) — Reasonable restrictions— Test — Whether the restrictions imposed by an impugned legislation on the exercise of the fundamental rights are reasonable or not is matter for the Court to consider, and in doing so, the Court is entitled to take into account the reasonableness of both the substantive as well as procedural part of the law in all its bearings; in regard to territory, in regard to the nature of restrictions and the circumstance and the manner of their enforcement, etc. The test of reasonableness is bound to be conditioned by the understanding and prudence of the individual who applies it to the facts and circumstances of each case; but there can be no doubt that it is well recognised objective standard by which Courts can be guided.

In view of the above provisions of Ss. 2 (1), 3 and 4-B of Assam Maintenance of Public Order Act are saved by Cl. (5) of Article 19 and are not void. See Public Safety — Assam Maintenance of Public Order Act (5 of 1947), S. 2 (1). 1953 Cri LJ 1740: AIR 1953 Assam 209 (DB).

SECTION 8-B

——S. 8-B (b) — Scope — Effect of — Assam Maintenance of Public Order (Autonomous Districts) Act (16 of 1953), S. 11.

The provisions as to any restriction of printing, publication or distribution of any news sheet or book or document as contained in the Assam Maintenance of Public Order Act, 5 of 1947, stood repealed by virtue of Section 37 of the Press (Objectionable Matter) Act, 1951. The Assam Act (Act 5 of 1947) was brought in line with the Press Act, and by an amendment, Cl. (b) of Section 8-B thereof was deleted. That being so, the charge against the petitioners cannot be sustained under Section 11 of the Assam Maintenance of Public Order (Autonomous Districts) Act, 1953 (16 of 1953). The words 'do any prejudicial act' in Section 8-B of the Assam Act, 1947 have no specific reference now, in view of the change in the law, to matters of this nature which affect the press and the proper procedure for the authorities would be to take appropriate action under the Press (Objectionable Matter) Act, 1951, which has also got application to the Autonomous Districts of Assam. ILR (1957) 9 Assam 501: 1960 Cr LJ 319: AIR 1960 Assam 43 (44) (Pr 5) (DB).

PREAMBLE

● ——Pre. and S. 2 (1) —Act, if valid after the passing of the Constitution of India — Constitution of India, Arts. 13 (1), 19 (1) (d), 19 (5) and 22 (4).

The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, even if it is an Act providing for preventive detention, is void under Article 13 (1) of the Constitution of India because it is inconsistent with the provisions of Part. III of the Constitution.

The detention which may be imposed upon a citizen by the Bengal Act amounts to restriction on the right of free movement guaranteed as one of the fundamental rights by Article 19 (1) (d) of the Constitution of India, and the restriction is neither reasonable nor in the interests of the general public considering the fact that the Act is not an emergency measure. (For summary of the grounds why restrictions are not reasonable and in the interests of the public, see Para. 14).

The Act is also in direct conflict with Article 22 (4) of the Constitution of India.

The illegalities are fundamental and they taint the whole of the Act. The doctrine of severability cannot be applied. The entire Act is, therefore, void. Sunil Kumar Bose v. The Chief Secretary to the Government of West Bengal, 54 Cal WN 394: 51 Cri LJ 1110: AIR 1950 Cal 274 (277, 280, 281) (Pt C) (Prs 6, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17) (SB).

● ——Pre. and S. 2 — Act if provides for preventive detention — Detenu not produced before Magistrate within 24 hours as required under Art. 22 (2), Constitution of India — Effect — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (2).

The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act does not deal with preventive detention. The law regarding preventive detention is directed towards preventing a person from doing something which the Legislature thinks should not be done. The Act nowhere says that a person may be detained or otherwise dealt with in order to prevent him from doing anything.

There can be no doubt that if a person is detained, the detenu is deprived of his personal liberty. In such a case, if the detenu is not produced before any Magistrate within 24 hours of his arrest as required under Article 22 (2) of the Constitution, the detenu is deprived of his personal liberty without complying with one of the most important items of procedure laid down in the Constitution regarding such deprivation. In these circumstances the order of detention cannot be upheld. 54 Cal WN 394: 51 Cri LJ 1110: AIR 1950 Cal 274 (282, 283) (Pt E) (Prs 19, 20) (SB).

●——Pre. — The Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950, made by the President of Indian Republic, can have no effect so far as the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930 and West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949 are concerned: The Act and the Ordinance became void as soon as the Constitution came into force (i.e., at midnight on 25th January, 1950) by reason of the provisions of Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution. They cannot be revived by the subsequent Order of the President passed in the exercise of the powers conferred by Article 22 (7) (a) and (b) read with Art. 373 of the Constitution. SECTION 2

■——S. 2 (1) (l) — Honest belief of Provincial Government that detained person was member of association is enough — Court cannot go into question whether association was in fact association as contemplated by section — Where the Provincial Government honestly believes that a person is a member of an association which the Government believes has certain objects and certain methods, then an order for detention can be made. Again, if the Provincial Government honestly thinks that a man has done or is doing any act to assist the operations of any such association an order for detention can be made. A Court is not entitled to go into the question whether the association is in fact such an association as is contemplated in this section. Bhupendra De v. —BENGAL CRIMINAL LAW (INDUSTRIAL AREAS) (AMENDMENT) ACT (4 of 1942)

——S. 4 — Case under—Onus on accused when shifts — To say that the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act shifts the onus on the accused person is not correct. The onus is not upon the accused person, but upon the prosecution. What the Act does is that after the prosecution has discharged this onus, it is for the accused to explain his possession of goods, and that onus certainly is upon him—(Evidence Act (1872), Sections 101 to 103). AIR 1955 NUC (Cal) 5593.

——S. 4 — Applicability—(Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 244) — "Goods seized from accused's shop on ground that he was removing them suspiciously — Case put up under S. 4 — No allegation that goods were smuggled — Magistrate acquitting accused without allowing prosecution opportunity to lead evidence in support of complaint — Order held illegal. AIR 1955 NUC (Cal) 2926 (DB).

——S. 4 — Possession of goods suspected to be stolen — Immediate explanation by accused — Value of — Extent of burden of proof on accused.

The proof required of the accused is not of the same standard as required of the prosecution in proving guilty, and lawful possession is proved if he satisfies the Court of a reasonable probability that the articles came into his possession lawfully.

Thus when a driver of a lorry is charged under S. 4 of the Bengal Act 4 of 1942 for being in possession of certain quantity of paper and paper board either stolen or fraudulently obtained and his immediate explanation is that he carried them in his lorry for some persons who preceded him in a taxi, which was admitted by the police to have passed by him some time before.

Held, that the explanation was quite a probable one and that he must therefore, be considered to have discharged the duty that lay on him under S. 4 for accounting for his possession of the goods found in his lorry. 49 CWN 229, Rel. on. AIR 1952 Cal 122 (123) (Pr 3) (DB).

—BENGAL STATE PRISONERS REGULATION (3 of 1818)

●——(as adapted by Bengal State Prisoners Regulation (Adaptation) Order 1947), is perfectly valid — See Public Safety — Bengal State Prisoners Regulation (Adaptation) Order, 1947, Preamble. 51 Cri LJ 269: AIR 1950 All 11 (FB).

●——(as adapted by Bengal State Prisoners Regulation (Adaptation) Order, 1947) — Scope — Provides for preventive detention and not arbitrary detention.

Wali Ullah Ag. C. J.:— The nature of detention provided for in the Regulation cannot be said to be different from "preventive detention." In substance, in regard to Indian States, what the Regulation provides is that a person who acts in a manner which may embitter relations between the Dominion of India and an acceding State may be placed under personal restraint; such a detention is not different from "preventive detention" and cannot be called arbitrary detention. It may be that the powers given to the executive to issue orders of personal restraint against individuals are very wide and it may be said that the Regulation as it stands may enable the executive to make serious inroads on the liberty of a citizen, but it should not be forgotten that the Regulation has remained on the statute book for more than a century without any attempt on the part of the Legislaure to circumscribe limits within which the power of detention is to be exercised. It has also been preserved on the statute book as an existing Indian Law, both by the Government of India Act, 1935, and the Indian Independence Act, 1947.

Adaptation of the Regulation of 1818 falls within Entry I, List I of Sch. 7, Government of India Act, 1935.

Sapru J.:— The scope of preventive detention is different in nature from both punitive detention and arbitrary detention; that preventive detention means detention, the aim of which is to prevent person from doing something which is likely to endanger the public peace, cause public disorder or lead to a situation which might become critical from a defence, external affairs or law and other point of view; and that therefore, it is not to be confounded with punitive detention which is meant to punish a person for what he has done or arbitrary detention which empowers the executive to arrest at will without any reason whatever. There is little doubt that Regn. 3 of 1818 is not in accordance with the notion of preventive detention as used in the Government of India Act, 1935. It would thus seem to have provided not only for preventive but also arbitrary or punitive detention. It is however, a regulation which was preserved as an existing British Indian Law on the statute book both by the Government of India Act, 1935, and the Indian Independence Act, 1947. For this reason no relief can be given on the ground that the Regulation in question is not altogether in harmony with the notion of preventive detention.

Bind Basni Prasad J.:— The Regulation lays down the reasons for which a person may be detained under it. It is true that the existence of those reasons cannot be adjudicated upon by the Courts of Law. Nevertheless it casts upon the Executive a duty to determine the existence of those reasons and only when it is satisfied of their existence then can it issue an order of commitment. The forms of commitment given at the end of the Regulation point to this fact. The presumption is that the Regulation will be administered in good faith by those who are armed with powers under it. Moreover the Regulation has been in existence for one hundred and thirty-one years. Its legality has been questioned in the past, but it has been upheld as valid. It provides for preventive detention for reasons mentioned there. An arbitrary detention is a detention without any reason. The Regulation as adapted does not contemplate detention without any reason. Various considerations may render it desirable that such cases may not go to Court e.g., undesirability of giving publicity to the facts, the necessity of prompt and quick action, the fact that strict legal proof may not be available although there may be a moral certainty of the facts. The motive behind the law is irrelevant for the Courts. Courts have only to see whether a valid law was made or not. With the change in 1947 in the Government of India Act, 1935, the insertion of the impugned words in the Regulation did not trespass the ambits of adaptation. Gulab Singh v. Dist. Magistrate Dehra Dun, 1949 All LJ 587: 51 Cri LJ 269: ILR (1950) All 845: AIR 1950 All 11 (17, 35, 40, 41) (Pt G) (Prs 12, 69, 70, 97, 98) (FB).

—BENGAL STATE PRISONERS REGULATION (ADAPTATION) ORDER (1947)

PREAMBLE

●——Preamble — Order is not ultra vires — Detention under Bengal State Prisoners Regulation (3 of 1818 as adapted by Adaptation Order, 1947, cannot be questioned under Criminal P. C., S. 491, by virtue of sub-section (3) thereof — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 491 (3) — Bengal State Prisoners Regulation (3 of 1818 as adapted by Bengal State Prisoners Regulation (Adaptation) Order, 1947).

The Bengal State Prisoners Regulation (Adaptation) Order, 1947, dated 26th August 1947, is not ultra vires of the powers of the Governor-General. It follows, therefore, that the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation, 1818, as adapted by the aforementioned Order is perfectly valid. By reason of sub-section (3) of S. 491, Criminal P. C., the detention of the applicant under the Regulation cannot be questioned in proceedings under S. 491, Criminal P. C. Gulab Singh v. District Magistrate Dehra Dun, 51 Cri LJ 269: 1949 All LJ 587: ILR (1950) All 845: AIR 1950 All 11 (15, 35, 41) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 72, 100, 101) (FB).

●——Pre. — Order is made in virtue of S. 19 (5), Indian Independence Act, 1947, and varies India (Adaptation of Existing Indian Laws) Order, 1947.

Wali Ullah Ag. C. J.:— The Governor-General has power under Section 19 (5), Independence Act to make any Order and includes the power to revoke or vary an Order previously made in the exercise of that power. The Bengal State Prisoners Regulation (Adaptation) Order made on 26th August 1947, must be considered to have been made in virtue of the provisions of sub-s. (5) of Section 19. The said Adaptation Order may be considered to have revoked to some extent or at any rate, varied, the India (Adaptation of Existing Indian Laws) Order, 1947 dated 14th August 1947. Furthermore, Article 3, Prisoners Regulation (Adaptation) Order of 26th August 1947, has expressly provided that the provisions of this Order shall have effect notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the India (Adaptation of Existing Indian Laws) Order, 1947.

Sapru J.:— By virtue of India (Adaptation of Existing Indian Laws) Order, 1947, on the appointed day, i. e., 15th August 1947, the Bengal Regn. 3 of 1818 did not have the words "connected with the discharge of the functions of the Crown in its relation with Indian States," but it did have them immediately before that date. The fact, however, that the words "connected with the discharge of the function of the Crown in its relation with Indian States" had ceased to be part of Regn. 3 of 1818 was completely overlooked by those responsible for drafting S. 2, Bengal State Prisoners Regulation (Adaptation) Order, 1947. It does not seem to have occurred to Governor-General that he was directing words "relations with Acceding State" to be substituted for words which had disappeared from the Regulation which he was adapting on the date on which his second Adaptation Order was passed. It is commonsense that you cannot substitute something for what had ceased to be an immediately existing British Indian Law without first reviving that law. It is only thereafter that you can substitute the adaptation that you consider necessary for it. But the position is that S. 3 of the Adaptation Order, referred to above, lays down that "the provisions of this Order shall have effect notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the India (Adaption of Existing Indian Laws) Order, 1947". The difficulty, in this view, with the manner in which the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation (Adaptation) Order, 1947, was made is thus one of form. Gulab Singh v. —BIHAR MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC ORDER ACT, 1949 (3 of 1950)

PREAMBLE

——Pre. — Validity of Act — Constitution of India, Arts. 13 and 22.

The detention provisions in the Bihar Act 3 of 1950 are completely inconsistent with the fundamental rights prescribed in Art. 22 (4) and (5) of the Constitution of India and consequently, directly the Constitution came into force on the mid-night of 25th January 1950, these provisions became void under Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution and they could not be revived or rendered valid by any Act of the President purporting to do so under Art. 22 (7) read with Art. 373 of the Constitution; nor could the President do so by any adaptations contemplated by Art. 372 of the Constitution.

The provisions of the impugned Act relating to duration of detention being inextricably mixed up with the provisions of safeguards laid down therein the doctrine of severability cannot apply and therefore, the entire Act becomes void. 51 Cri LJ 1081: ILR 29 Pat 335: AIR 1950 Pat 265 (269, 271, 277, 278, 279) (Pt A) (Prs 19, 20, 28, 57, 60, 62) (DB).

——S. 2 — Order on externee — Test of reasonableness — 'Public order' — Scope of.

In the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, there are provisions for communicating the grounds of the order to the externee. The externee has a right to make a representation, and the representation has to be considered by an Advisory Board. These are all safeguards which fulfil the test of reasonableness.

The existence of a provision which prevents externment of a person from his usual place of residence is not an essential criterion for fulfilling the test of reasonableness.

The expression "in the interests of the general public" is wide enough to cover serious and aggravated forms of public disorder which are calculated to endanger the security of the State as also other breaches of the peace of a purely local significance which endanger the public order. Public Order is not excluded from the purview of Cl. (5) of Art. 19. 1952 Cri LJ 1361: AIR 1952 Pat 376 (377, 378) (Prs 5, 6) (DB).

——S. 2 (1) (b) — Constitution of India, Articles 13 (1), 19 (1) (d) and (3) — Validity of S. 2 (1) (b) of Bihar Act (3 of 1950).

(Per Majority, Shearer, J. Contra)— Section 2 (1) (b), Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949 (Bihar Act 3 of 1950), in so far as it operates to restrict freedom of movement of a free citizen, has become void by reason of Article 13 (1), read with Art. 19 of the Constitution of India, which came into force on 26th January 1950, Brajnandan v. State of Bihar, 52 Cri LJ 610: ILR 29 Pat 461: AIR 1950 Pat 322 (324, 326) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 12) (FB).

——S. 2 (1) (b) — Constitution of India, Article 19 (5) — Reasonable restrictions — Courts excluded from applying objective test of reasonableness — Section 2 (1) (b) is not reasonable.

A law to satisfy the criterion imposed by Article 19 (5) must be so framed as to leave it open to the Courts to apply the objective test of reasonableness to its operation.

The power of restriction contained in S. 2 (1) (b) of the Bihar Act 3 of 1950, is based, not on any reasonable grounds, but upon the satisfaction of some individual and the provision is in such terms that it is not open to the Court to examine the reasonableness or otherwise of orders passed. There can be no presumption that an executive official will always act reasonably. There may be a presumption that he will act bona fide; but that is a different thing. The test is not what is actually done under the law, but what the law enables to be done. If the law enables orders to be passed which are unreasonable, and yet are consistent with its terms, then that cannot be called a law operating to impose only reasonable restrictions. 52 Cri LJ 610: ILR 29 Pat 461: AIR 1950 Pat 322 (325) (Pt F) (Pr 9) (FB).

——S. 2 (1) (a) — Detention under — Validity — Constitution of India, Arts. 21 and 226 — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 491.

The provisions of the Bihar Act having become void on the coming into force of the Constitution the detention of a person under S. 2 (1) (a) of that Act cannot legally continue after 26th January 1950 by virtue of Art. 21 of the Constitution and the detenu is entitled to be released. 51 Cri LJ 1081: ILR 29 Pat 335: AIR 1950 Pat 265 (271) (Pt B) (Pr 30) (DB).

——Ss. 5, 26 — Reference to advisory Council constituted under Bihar Maintenance of Public Order (No. 2) Ordinance of 1949.

If a member of the Advisory Council constituted under the Ordinance of 1949 was not qualified to be a member under the Act, the Advisory Council on the operation of the Act, ipso facto stood dissolved; nevertheless the reference made to the then existing Council under the law as it was and the steps taken by the Advisory Council would be deemed to have been made under the Act. 51 Cri LJ 1025: ILR 29 Pat 293: AIR 1950 Pat 259 (264) (Pt C) (Pr 21) (DB).

——S. 8 (1) — Section 8 (1) is not preventive in character.

The matters dealt with in S. 8 (1) are all matters that more or less correspond to substantive offences under the Penal Code. There is, therefore no scope for the argument that S. 8 (1) is preventive in character and not punitive. 1956 BLJR 210: 1956 Cri LJ 640: ILR 35 Pat 102: AIR 1956 Pat 137 (141) (Pt D) (Pr 18) (DB).

——S. 9 (2) — Validity — If imposes unreasonable restriction — (Constitution of India, Article 19).

Per Misra, J.:— The restriction imposed by the Act, in so far as it relates to public processions, etc., is not unreasonable. The restrictions do not constitute a violation of fundamental right guaranteed under Art. 19 of the Constitution. ILR 38 Pat 544: 1959 Pat LR 111: 1959 Cri LJ 1100: AIR 1959 Pat 425 (426) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

——S. 9 (2) — Validity — Act — If permanent measure imposing restrictions — (Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (b) and (d)).

Per Misra, J.:— The Act cannot be said to be ultra vires the Bihar Legislature as constituting a violation of Art. 19 (1), for the reason that it originated in the promulgation of the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Ordinance No. 4 of 1946.

The Legislature has not placed this Act on the statute book as a permanent legislative measure but the situation is reviewed every two years to find out whether the extension of the Act for a further period would be justified in the circumstances. If the Legislature which is in the best position to know the conditions of law and order prevailing in the State is satisfied that a further extension of the Act is warranted, it is not for the law Court to say that it should not have been extended. The Legislative judgment of the Legislature must be held to be supreme, and on this ground the provision cannot be struck down as invalid and ultra vires as violating Art. 19 (1) (b) (d) of the Constitution of India. ILR 38 Pat 544: 1959 Pat LR 111: 1959 Cri LJ 1100: AIR 1959 Pat 425 (428) (Pt B) (Pr 3) (DB).

——S. 9 (2) — Validity — Provision for appeal or review — Absence of — Effect — (Constitution of India, Art. 14).

There being a distinct provision in S. 9 (2) that the authority entrusted with the exercise of the power to grant or refuse licence for taking out a public procession can refuse the prayer for grant of licence only after recording reasons therefor, this is an adequate safeguard against the misuse of power. Although there is no provision for an appeal to the State Government, the refusal being an administrative act, there is no reason why, in case of arbitrary refusal of licence, the matter cannot be agitated and taken up with the higher executive authorities in the Government. Consequently the absence of provision for appeal or review by State Government against the order passed by the District Magistrate would not make the Act invalid. ILR 38 Pat 544: 1959 Pat LR 111: 1959 Cri LJ 1100: AIR 1959 Pat 425 (428) (Pt C) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 9 (2) — Scope — Notification — Prohibiting procession without licence — If ultra vires.

Section 9 (2) imposes restriction on public procession. Notification issued by Government in pursuance of Section 9 (2), being notification No. A/A/201/51/O—8006, dated 29-6-1951 puts restriction on any procession, inasmuch as it prohibits any procession without licence. The notification is ultra vires and no offence would be committed for violation of the prohibition contained therein. Some element of an organised march according to a system is necessary in order to constitute a procession. The subject-matter of the impugned Ordinance (4 of 1949) falls clearly within Items 1 and 2 of the Provincial Legislative List and therefore there was no necessity for the Governor to invoke any powers from the Concurrent Legislative List. It follows that the Ordinance cannot be held to be ultra vires for absence of instructions from the Governor-General. 51 Cri LJ 300: 30 Pat LT 419: ILR 28 Pat 782: AIR 1950 Pat 35 (38) (Pt C) (Pr 15) (DB).

——This Ordinance is ultra vires and invalid.

Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Ordinance, 1949 (No. 2 of 1949) was promulgated on 3rd June 1949 when the Bihar Provincial Legislatures were in session. As the Governor in thus promulgating the Ordinance acted beyond the authority conferred upon him by Section 88, Government of India Act, 1935, the said Ordinance is ultra vires and invalid. 51 Cri LJ 256: ILR 28 Pat 775: AIR 1950 Pat 19 (20, 21) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 10) (DB).

SECTION 2

——S. 2 (1) — Detention under — Court is not entitled to examine adequacy of grounds on which Provincial Government ordered detention.

Section 2 (1) uses the words "the Provincial Government if satisfied". There is a vital distinction between the word "satisfied" and the words "reasonable cause". In the former case unlimited discretion is given to the Provincial Government but in the latter the discretion is subject to an objective condition to the Government's power to detain, the existence of which would be cognizable in the Court of law. Thus, where the Government is merely "to be satisfied" its certificate is enough; and where it has "reasonable cause to believe" then the test is subjective and not objective. Therefore, in the case of detention of a detenu under Section 2 (1) the Court is not entitled to apply the objective standard and to examine the adequacy of the grounds on which the Provincial Government have ordered detention of the detenu: Liversidge v. Anderson, (1941) 3 All ER 338, Rel. on; AIR 1945 PC 156; AIR 1944 Pat 354 and AIR 1945 Pat 44, Ref. 51 Cri LJ 327: ILR 28 Pat 800: AIR 1950 Pat 41 (43) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

●——S. 4 (1) — Government of India Act, 1935, Sch. 7, List II, Item (1) — Preventive and arbitrary detention — Distinction — Legislation coming within preventive detention — Policy or reasonableness of it cannot be criticised by Courts.

Preventive detention can properly be contrasted with punitive detention, one having reference to the apprehension of wrong doing and the other coming after the illegal act is actually committed. The word "arbitrary" connotes want of reasonable or proper justification. If a particular piece of legislation is entirely within the ambit of the Legislature's authority, there could be nothing arbitrary in it so far as a Court of law is concerned. The Courts have nothing to do with the policy of the Legislature or the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the legislation.

The contention that as one of the safeguards available to a detenu under Section 4 (1) of the Ordinance is whittled down and rendered illusory by the proviso, the detention is no longer a "preventive detention" which Item (1) of the Provincial List contemplates but it degenerates into "arbitrary detention" and in respect of such a matter no power of legislation has been given to the province by the Government of India Act is not sound as "preventive detention for reasons connected with the maintenance of public order" is one of the subjects upon which the provinces have been given the authority to legislate under the Government of India Act. The Court has got to decide on a consideration of the true nature and character of legislation whether it is really on the subject of preventive detention or not. Once that point is decided in favour of the legislative authority, and it is held that it has not trespassed beyond the limits of its assigned powers, it is not for the Court to criticise the wisdom and policy of the Legislature. 53 CWN 545, Ref.

Where there was a proper reference to the Advisory Council on 24th September 1949 but no further information was called for by the Council and no report was submitted by the Advisory Council to the Provincial Government at all there are no proceedings pending which could be saved and continued under Section 26, Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act (3 of 1950). ——S. 4 (1), Proviso — Propriety of detention can be enquired into — It is within competence of legislature to curtail liberty of individual by valid legislation — Ordinance is intra vires — Proviso to S. 4 (1) before its amendment is valid and does not make sub-section (1) ultra vires — Amendment of proviso by Bihar Ordinance 5 of 1949 does not render Ordinance 4 of 1949 ultra vires.

It is always open to a Court of law to enquire into the propriety of a detention made under a particular legislation in order to see whether the order of detention was a valid one or not. The Courts of law, however, at the same time have to administer the law as it exists, and if the particular legislation is validly enacted, it is not within the scope of the authority of a Court of law to ignore that legislation because it interferes with the liberty of the subject. The liberty of the subject is not an abstract or an absolute freedom. It is capable of being regulated by legislation when the safety of the State is involved. The safety of the State may be involved in various ways. In all these circumstances and others, where the established Government finds it necessary to maintain law and order in the State, it is compelled to legislate and in so legislating may have to curtail the liberty of the subject. It may also have to curtail the powers of the Courts of law. So long as the legislation is within the legislative field of the legislating authority, such legislation would be valid legislation. 1942 AC 206 and other case law relied on.

The Bihar Ordinance 4 of 1949 was declared to be intra vires by Federal Court in Lakhi Narayan Das's case, AIR 1950 FC 59, by its judgment dated 28th November 1949. It is quite clear that its provisions cannot be declared to be invalid merely on the ground that it confers powers on the executive to interfere with the liberty of the subject. The decision of the Federal Court was not obiter and the proviso to Section 4 (1) of the Ordinance before its amendment was within the competency of the legislative authority to enact, and, consequently the proviso was a valid provision, and, it did not render the entire provisions of the Ordinance ultra vires, nor the powers exercised under it ultra vires. Provisions of sub-section (1) of Section 4 are mandatory and must be complied with by the authority making the order in respect of any person, under Cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of Section 2. The proviso does not nullify any of these provisions. It is a saving clause to the effect that neither the order nor the detention of the person thereunder shall be invalid or unlawful or improper on the ground of any defect, vagueness or insufficiency of the communication made to such person under this section. What has been saved by the proviso, however, is not that the detaining authority shall not comply with the mandatory provisions of the sub-section — on the contrary, it shall comply with these provisions — but that if there was any defect, vagueness or insufficiency in the communications made to the detenu, that by itself would not make the detention invalid or unlawful or improper.

The proviso to sub-section (1) of S. 4 of the Ordinance no doubt makes ineffective the decision in Nek Mohammad's case, AIR 1949 Pat 1 (FB) in this respect. That, however, was within the competence of the Legislative authority to do. In construing the wording of sub-s. (1) with its proviso, the decision in Nek Mohammad's case, AIR 1949 Pat 1 (FB) or in Murat Patwa's case, AIR 1948 Pat 135 regarding the vagueness or insufficiency of the particulars supplied to a detenue cannot be taken into consideration.

The amendment of the proviso to sub-s. (1) of Section 4 by the Bihar Ordinance No. 5 of 1949 which directed that the words "where the Provincial Government is of opinion that it would be against the public interest to disclose all the grounds of the order" shall be omitted, does not render the Ordinance No. 4 of 1949 ultra vires. 51 Cri LJ 936: AIR 1950 Pat 228 (230, 232, 233, 234) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 7, 8, 9,10) (DB).

——S. 4 (1) — "As soon as may be" does not mean that in all cases grounds of detention should be served within 15 days from the date of order of detention — Delay of 58 days held not such delay as to render detention illegal. 51 Cri LJ 936: AIR 1950 Pat 228 (235, 236) (Pt E) (Prs 14, 17) (DB).

——S. 4 — Detention mala fide — Detention can be declared illegal — But it does not make Ordinance ultra vires. 51 Cri LJ 936: AIR 1950 Pat 228 (236) (Pt F) (Pr 15) (DB).

——S. 4 (1)— Interpretation — Non-compliance with mandatory provisions of S. 4 (1) — Effect.

The material portion of Section 4 (1) of the Ordinance is phrased exactly in the same manner as Section 4 (1), Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1947.

The ratio of the two Full Bench decisions, 28 Pat 773 (FB) and 26 Pat 628 (FB), are applicable for construing Section 4 of the new Ordinance.

Under Section 4 (1) of the Ordinance, the authority making the order was given a discretion to give such particulars as were in the opinion of that authority sufficient to enable the detenu to make representation against the order of detention. The discretion, however, is not to be exercised in an arbitrary or capricious manner. If no particulars are given or particulars are given in such a way as to make it impossible for the detenu to make representation against the order, then there is a failure to comply with the mandatory provisions of the section since the detenu is deprived of his right of making an effective representation and the detention is invalid and illegal.

Merely because the new Ordinance provides for an Advisory Council to review the orders of detention it cannot be said that the High Court is precluded from scrutinising the validity of the order of detention or that the Provincial Government is excused from strict compliance with the mandatory provisions of Section 4 of the Ordinance. ('49) 28 Pat 806 (DB).

PREAMBLE

——Pre. — Ordinance if ultra vires — Power of Governor to amend Ordinance duly promulgated by another Ordinance — Government of India Act (1935), S. 88 (2) (e).

There is no warrant for the contention that the Governor of Bihar had no power to amend Ordinance 4 of 1949, by enacting Ordinance 5 of 1949, in view of Section 88 (2) (e) of the Government of India Act, 1935. The power to enact laws in a legislative authority contains within it the inherent power to repeal or amend an enacted law. Section 88 (2) (e) of the Government of India Act is merely an enabling clause by which the Governor could by some order withdraw an Ordinance duly promulgated by him without having to promulgate a fresh repealing Ordinance, and does not mean that the Governor has no power to amend an Ordinance already promulgated by him by duly promulgating an Ordinance under Section 88 of the Government of India Act. 1940 Dacca 33, Dist.; 33 CWN 27, Foll. 51 Cr LJ 936: AIR 1950 Pat 228 (234) (Pt B) (Pr 11) (DB).

——Pre. — Ordinance has retrospective operation — Interpretation of Statutes — Retrospective operation — Declaratory and amending statute.

No statute shall be construed so as to have retrospective operation, unless its language is such as plainly to require such a construction, and a statute is not to be construed so as to have a greater retrospective operation than its language renders necessary. (1892) 3 Ch 402, Rel. on.

Where an Act is in its nature declaratory the presumption against construing it retrospectively is inapplicable. Where a statute is passed for the purpose of supplying an obvious omission in a former statute, or "to explain" a former statute, the subsequent statute has relation back to the time when the prior Act was passed.

The amending Bihar Ordinance 5 of 1949 should be read as one to which the presumption against construing it retrospectively is inapplicable. The amending Ordinance has a retrospective effect, that is to say, applies to cases where orders of detention had been passed before the date of the amending Ordinance. 51 Cri LJ: 936: AIR 1950 Pat 228 (235) (Pt C) (Pr 12) (DB).

—BIHAR PREVENTIVE DETENTION ORDINANCE (2 of 1950)

——Pre. — Validity of Ordinance — Constitution of India, Art. 213 (1) — Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 5.

Per Sinha and Sarjoo Prasad JJ. —(Meredith C. J. contra). In promulgating the Bihar Preventive Detention Ordinance (Bihar Ordinance 2 of 1950), the Governor has complied with the terms of Cl. (1) of Art. 213 of the Constitution of India and therefore the Ordinance is not void on that ground.

In the first place, the Article does not require that the Ordinance to be promulgated by the Governor has to state in so many words that the Governor was satisfied as to a certain state of affairs. In the second place, all the paragraphs of the Preamble read together would show that the Governor was satisfied in terms of Article 213 (1) of the Constitution of India.

Per Meredith C. J. — The Ordinance is void as not satisfying the conditions laid down in Article 213 of the Constitution for its promulgation.

For a valid Ordinance, two conditions are necessary under Article 213; (1) that the Governor is satisfied that circumstances exist which require immediate action, and (2) that in his opinion the circumstances require such an Ordinance as he promulgates. The preamble makes it clear that the first of these conditions is satisfied. It is stated that the Governor is satisfied of the necessity of immediate action. But the second condition is not satisfied. The Governor has not stated, as he should have done, that in his opinion the circumstances required an Ordinance in these terms.

Per Meredith C. J. and Surjoo Prasad J. — There is no other illegality in the Ordinance.

The Government is right in framing the Ordinance in accordance with Art. 22 (4) and not in accordance with the Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950, made by the President under Art. 22 (7).

The Ordinance is not void on the ground of unreasonableness, so far as it puts restrictions on the personal liberty of the subject.

The provisions of the Ordinance are not repugnant to the provisions of the Criminal P. C. Repugnancy can arise only when one law says "shall" and the other says "shall not". It does not arise when one law says "may in certain circumstances" and the other says "may also in certain circumstances". The latter is the true position as between the Criminal Procedure Code and the Ordinance.

Just as the Penal Code does not prevent the creation of additional offences, so also the Criminal Procedure Code does not prevent the creation of additional procedures. As the Penal Code is not exhaustive of offences, so also Chap. 8, Criminal P. C., is not exhaustive of preventive detention, and, therefore, no question of repugnancy arises.

The State Legislature and, consequently, the Governor by Ordinance has power to create offences, and, in any event, the portions of the Ordinance creating offences are severable from the portions providing for detention. The Ordinance, therefore, cannot be attacked on this ground.

Although under Article 213 (2), an Ordinance framed by the Governor ceases to operate on the expiration of six weeks from the re-assembly of the Legislature, the provision in the Ordinance in question for detention for 3 months and in certain circumstances for a longer period, is merely a case of ex abundanti cautela. If for any reason the Legislature did not meet, the Ordinance would not expire at the end of six weeks, but would continue and it was, therefore, only right and proper to frame it in such a way as to be suitable for its continuance in such circumstances. Even if there was in fact no justification for making provisions of this kind, that would not make the Ordinance invalid or void so long as the Governor was satisfied, however mistakenly, that the circumstances required such provisions, and said so.

Nor is the Ordinance void on the ground of mala fides or as a colourable device to evade constitutional provisions.

In considering the question of bona fides or mala fides the Court is only concerned with the motive and not the results. 51 Cri LJ 1251: ILR 29 Pat 410: AIR 1950 Pat 332 (335, 336, 338, 339, 340, 341, 345, 346) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 10, 20, 22, 23, 26, 31, 37, 38, 39, 52, 55, 58) (DB).

——R. 16 (ii) — Discretion to decide suitability of book — Field within which discretion is to be operated.

The only ground on which book may be withheld from a detenu is on the decision of the Superintendent that it is unsuitable. It is true that the discretion to decide the suitability of the book or publication is vested in the Superintendent. But that discretion will have to operate within a well-defined field. The book may be unsuitable considering the material or the contents of the book which may be objectionable because it preaches violence, it may be vulgar or obscene, it may be pornographic or it may have been proscribed, but beyond the compass of this discretion the Superintendent has no power to withhold a book from the detenu on any other ground. ILR (1964) Bom 300: 66 Bom LR 185: 1964 Mah LJ 297 (DB).

——Rr. 16, 13 — Prison official has no general power of regulation of privileges in sense of withdrawal, curtailment, etc., except by way of punishment for breach of duty imposed on detenu by Rules.

The right to withdraw a privilege or any of the privileges is not an arbitary right, nor has the Superintendent an unrestricted power to curtail any of the privileges on the ground that thereby the Superintendent is regulating the privilege. There is no such general power of regulation of privileges in the sense of withdrawal, curtailment or abridgment of the privileges being given to the Superintendent except by way of punishment for a breach of duty imposed on detenu by Rules. Therefore, where a complaint is made by a detenu whose conditions of detention are regulated by the Bombay Conditions of Detention Order, 1951, that complaint will have to be decided with reference to the provisions of the several clauses of the Order of 1951, and not by reference to any other implied power in the Superintendent which has not been shown to exist anywhere outside the provisions of the Order of 1951. 66 Bom LR 185: 1964 Mah LJ 297: ILR (1964) Bom 300 (DB).

—BOMBAY PUBLIC SECURITY MEASURES ACT (6 of 1947)

●——S. 2 (1) (b) — Externment order under — Validity — Constitution of India, Arts. 13 and 19 (1) (d) and (e) and (5).

Per Chagla C. J. and Bavdekar J.; (Shah J., contra) — Bombay Act 6 of 1947, to the extent that it empowers the Government to issue an externment order under Section 2 (1) (b), is void under Article 13 (1) of the Constitution, inasmuch as it imposes a restriction on the fundamental rights of the citizen under Art. 19 (1), sub-cls. (d) and (e), such a restriction being an unreasonable restriction.

Per Shah J. (contra). — The provisions of Section 2 (1) (b), Public Security Measures Act, are not inconsistent with the provisions of Part III of the Constitution of India, and therefore not void. The restriction involved in an order of externment passed under Section 2 (1) (b) cannot be said to be an unreasonable restriction on the fundamental right of a citizen under Article 19 (1) (d) and (e).

Per Chagla C. J. — No period for the duration of the externment order is laid down in the statute.

The person against whom an order of externment is to be made has no right whatever to be heard in his defence before he is asked to leave his home and hearth and go and reside in some other place. There is no obligation upon the authority to tell him what he is charged with or what are the grounds against him which make it incumbent upon the Government to ask him to leave his home town. Nor is there any obligation upon the authority to hear the person against whom the order is intended to be made in his defence before the order is made. The restriction imposed on the fundamental rights is not a reasonable restriction.

The Constitution has made the Courts the custodians of the fundamental rights of the citizens, and it is in that spirit and in that capacity that the Court must look upon the nature of the restriction, and even though the absence of a particular safeguard may not be the violation of a fundamental right as such, even so the absence of such a safeguard may result in the restriction not being a reasonable restriction.

Per Bavdekar J. — In case the existing laws which restrict the freedom referred to in Cl. (1) of Article 19 must be reasonable it is obvious that they must provide that any person whose right, for example, of freedom of movement, is restricted must be given an opportunity, may be after an interim order restricting his rights is passed ex parte, of showing cause why an order under a Security Act restricting his movements should not be passed. The right of hearing before condemnation is admittedly a component of the rights which taken together constitute rights of natural justice, and, in case legislation which restricts the fundamental rights has not to be pronounced to be reasonable, it must give the person whose freedom is restricted, an opportunity to be heard. The manner in which he is to be heard is, of course, a different matter.

Per Shah J. (contra) — There is nothing in the Constitution of India which enables the Court to declare a piece of legislation as void merely because the Legislature thought it expedient to provide that the satisfaction of an executive officer instead of a Court should be a condition precedent to the issue of an order intended to protect either the security of the State or the interest of the general public.

In terms the order passed under Section 2 (1) (b) may be unlimited in duration, but it is not necessary that the executive officer who passes the order must necessarily pass an order of an unlimited duration, nor can the order be really said to be of unlimited duration in view of the fact that the parent Act under which the orders are passed is necessarily of a temporary character passed in order to meet an emergency, and the effectiveness of the order would remain so long as the statute under which the orders are passed would remain operative.

The sole ground of absence of a provision for being heard either before or after the passing of the order of externment, which is less drastic than an order of detention, cannot render the provision of Section 2 (1) (b) void or inoperative as from 26th January 1950. The Constitution has not provided for a right of being heard before any restriction on any fundamental right is placed, and in the absence of such a provision made expressly or by necessary implication, a provision which enables an externment order to be passed cannot be deemed to be void merely on the ground that it may be regarded as contrary to rules of natural justice. ——S. 2 (6) and (1) — Offence under S. 2 (6) — Satisfaction of detaining authority — Burden and nature of proof.

In the case of prosecution under Section 2 (6) for contravention of order under Section 2 (1) the burden is upon the prosecution to establish every ingredient which goes to constitute the offence and one of the most important ingredients is that the detaining authority was satisfied as to the matters set out in S. 2 (1) before the order was made. It is not sufficient to tender the order which states that the detaining authority is satisfied. The detaining authority must step into the witness box and make that statement on oath in order to enable the accused to challenge that statement, if he is so advised, in cross-examination. 52 Bom LR 223: 1949-50 Bom Cri Cas 149: 52 Cri LJ 1184: AIR 1950 Bom 330 (330) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

When the detaining authority makes up his mind to detain a person who is alleged to have committed an offence, then, the detaining authority has made his choice and it would not be permissible to him to investigate the offence while still keeping the person under detention and not complying with the provisions of the law with regard to investigation. If the purpose of detaining a person is a collateral purpose i. e., to deprive him of his rights and safeguards under the Criminal Procedure Code and to carry on an investigation without the supervision of the Court then the detention is mala fide and cannot be justified: Crim. Appln. No. 18 of 1948, D/- 4-2-1948 (Unrep.) (Bom) Overruled. Maledath Bharathan v. ——S. 2 (1) (a) — Grounds of detention — Detaining authority not properly applying its mind to question of detention — High Court can interfere — Some grounds of detention good and some bad — Whole order is not vitiated — Inciting ignorant people to resort to criminal activities held to be bad ground for want of precision.

The powers of the High Court to interfere with detention orders made under the Act are limited and are confined to cases where it appears that the detaining authority has not properly applied its mind to the question as to whether the detention of the person is or is not justified under the Act. Under the Act, as it now is, it is not compulsory for the detaining authority to furnish to the detenu a statement of the ground or grounds upon which the order of detention has been made. When, however, grounds have been furnished, it is permissible for the High Court to consider the statement of those grounds together with the order made; and, if the statement of grounds does show that the detaining authority has not properly applied its mind to the question of detention then it has jurisdiction to interfere and direct that the detenu be released.

When there are several grounds given, some of which are good and some bad the whole order is not vitiated; there is a sharp distinction between a ground which is outside the purview of the statute and a ground which is bad because it lacks precision and accuracy. In the latter case the ground has to be completely ignored as if no ground was furnished at all, and if the grounds which are no grounds at all, inasmuch as no precise information was furnished to the detenu, are eliminated, and there still remain a ground or grounds which are precise and accurate and which can justify the order, then the order made by detaining authority must stand. AIR 1948 Bom 334 (FB), Foll.

Where the ground of detention stated that the detenu was likely to act in a prejudicial manner by inciting ignorant people to resort to criminal activities:

Held, that the ground was bad for want of precision. 51 Bom LR 1038: 51 Cri LJ 665: 1949 Bom Cri Cas 121: ILR (1950) Bom 177: AIR 1950 Bom 126 (126, 127) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

SECTION 9-A

——S. 9-A — Order under — Writ of Certiorari — Issue of — Certiorari.

The Legislature has in Section 9-A left it to the satifaction of the Provincial Government as to the nature and necessity of the action to be taken, but as far as the purpose for which action has to be taken it has not chosen to leave it to the subjective determination of the Government, but has provided that the purpose must be objectively established and must be a condition precedent before Government could take the action contemplated by the section. An order issued by the Government under Section 9-A is, therefore, not an executive order but a judicial or quasi-judicial order against which a writ of certiorari can be issued. 52 Bom LR 62: 1949 Bom Cri Cas 139: 51 Cri LJ 1184: ILR (1950) Bom 762: AIR 1950 Bom 213 (214, 217) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 4, 10) (DB).

●——S. 12 — Validity — Section is unconstitutional as contravening Art. 14 of the Constitution — (Constitution of India, Art. 14).

Majority view, Patanjali Sastri, C. J. dissenting — Article 14 condemns discrimination not only by a substantive law but also by a law of procedure.

The Bombay Act, besides providing for enhanced punishment and whipping, eliminates the committal proceedings permits the Special Judge to record only a memorandum of the evidence, confers on him a larger power to refuse to summon a defence witness, than what is conferred on a Court by Section 257 (1), Cr. P. C. and also deprives the accused of his right to apply for a transfer or for revision. These departures from the ordinary law cause prejudice to persons subjected to the procedure prescribed by the Act and constitute a discrimination against the persons tried by the Special Judge. In view of these departures from the ordinary law brought about by the Bombay Act, Section 12 of the Act in so far as it authorises the Government to direct specific and particular 'cases' to be tried by the Special Judge is unconstitutional and void. 1952 SCR 284 and 1952 SCR 435, Rel. on.

Per Patanjali Sastri, C. J. — The procedural variations brought about by the Bombay Act in the recording of evidence and the summoning of witnesses are not so serious as to amount to a denial of the equal protection of the laws within the meaning of Article 14. Even if the accused were to be tried under the normal procedure of the Criminal Procedure Code after 26th January, 1950, the omission to record the evidence in full and the refusal to summon a witness in the circumstances mentioned in Section 13 of the Bombay Act may well be regarded as mere irregularities curable under S. 537 of the Code. As regards transfer, it does not fit in with the scheme of trial before Special Judge, and, unless any system of trials by Special Court is to be condemned as violative of Article 14, a prohibition of transfer cannot be regarded as falling within the inhibition of Art. 14. ●——S. 12 — Cases referred to Special Judge before Constitution — Validity of special procedure after coming into force of Constitution — (Constitution of India, Arts. 14, 13 (1)).

(Majority view, Patanjali Sastry, C. J., Contra):

If in the absence of any special provision to the contrary, no person has a vested right in procedure, it must follow as a corollary that nobody has a vested liability in matters of procedure in the absence of any special provision to the contrary. If this is the position when the law of procedure is altered by statute, the position would not be different when the Act prescribing the discriminatory procedure becomes void by reason of its repugnancy to the equal protection clause of the Constitution. Although the substantive rights and liabilities acquired or accrued before the date of the Constitution remain enforceable, nobody can claim after that date, that those rights or liabilities must be enforced under that particular procedure although it has, since that date, come into conflict with the fundamental right of equal protection of laws guaranteed by Article 14. 1951 SCR 228, Referred.

The Special Procedure prescribed by the Bombay Act constitutes a departure from the ordinary law of procedure and is, in some important respects, detrimental to the interest of the persons subjected to it and as such is discriminatory. As the Act was valid in its entirety before the date of the Constitution, that part of the proceedings before the Special Judge, which, upto that date had been regulated by this special procedure, cannot be questioned, however discriminatory it may have been, but the continuation of the application of the discriminatory procedure to their cases after the date of the Constitution constitutes a breach of their fundamental right guaranteed by Article 14 and being inconsistent with the provisions of that Article the special procedure becomes void under Art. 13 and as there is no vested right or liability in matters of procedure the accused are entitled to be tried according to the ordinary procedure after the date of the Constitution.

Held, that the conviction of the accused on trial after the date of the Constitution according to the special procedure and the sentences passed on them could not be supported and were set aside. 54 Cal 508, Disting.

Patanjali Sastri, C. J. — Equal protection of the laws under Art. 14 postulates persons in the same situation and in the same circumstances claiming that the same law should be applied to them. In this case it could not be said that the accused whose trial by the Special Judge had been lawfully commenced and was pending at the commencement of the Constitution, were in the same situation with persons who committed the same offences after the Constitution came into force, and no complaint of discriminatory treatment by reason only of the trial having been continued under the special procedure can be sustained, even assuming that the ordinary procedure under the Criminal Procedure Code became applicable to the accused on and after 26th January 1950.

In view of Section 1 (2) Cr. P. C., however, it could not be said that on the 26th January 1950 the accused were in a position to claim that they were entitled to be tried under the ordinary procedure like those who committed the same offences after that date or who, having committed them before such date, had not been directed to be tried by the Special Judge.

Further the jurisdiction of the Special Judge which was validly created and exercised over the case did not cease to continue on and after 26-1-1950 as he was merely working out the application of the Bombay Act and there was nothing which affected the competency of the Special Judge to try the case after 26-1-1950. 54 IA 152, Disting. ●——S. 2 (1) (a) — Provincial Government, if obliged to hold enquiry before issuing detention order — Court, if can examine grounds disclosed by Government.

It is true that the Act departs from the usual pattern of public safety legislation in eliminating an important safeguard, namely, a review of grounds of detention by an independent body, like an Advisory Council, against the misuse of the power of detention. But such elimination cannot by itself import an obligation on the Provincial Government to hold an enquiry before issuing a detention order, which is a purely executive act when the Act nowhere imposes such an obligation on the Government. The Court can, however, examine the grounds disclosed by the Government to see if they are relevant to the object which the legislation has in view, namely, the prevention of acts prejudicial to public safety and tranquillity, for "satisfaction" in this connection must be grounded on material which is of rationally probative value. Machindar Shivaji v. The King. 1949 FCR 827: 51 Cri LJ 1480: AIR 1950 FC 129 (130) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

●——S. 2 (1) (a) — Party spreading doctrine of violence — Party not outlawed — Affiliation to such party, if ground for detention.

While mere belief in or acceptance of any political ideology may not be a ground for detention under the Act, affiliation to a party which is alleged to be spreading its "doctrine of violence rendering life and property insecure and trying to seize power by violence" may, in certain circumstances, lead to an inference that the person concerned is likely to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety, order or tranquillity. The fact that the party had not been outlawed is immaterial, that being a matter of expediency. Machindar Shivaji v. The King. 1949 FCR 827: 51 Cri LJ 1480: AIR 1950 FC 129 (130) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

Per Mudholkar J.:— Since the provisions of S. 2 (1), C. P. and Berar Public Safety Act, 1948, in so far as they permitted the detention of a person for more than three months without reference to an Advisory Board had become void on coming into force of the Constitution of India, the order of detention under S. 2 (1) passed against certain person lapsed after the inauguration of the Constitution as more than three months had expired since his detention. Constitution Order No. 8 could not and did not revive or keep in force the order but only permitted the continuance of his detention. The State Government could, therefore, act under S. 3 (1) (a), (Preventive Detention Act, and pass the new order against him under the Acts. B. N. Mukherjee v. State Government Madhya Pradesh. 1951 All WR (Supp) 21: 1951 Nag LJ 71: ILR (1951) Nag 1: AIR 1951 Nag 2 (2, 3) (Pt D) (Pr 11) (FB).

——S. 2 (1) (a) — Constitution of India, Articles 22 (7), 373 — Validity of S. 2 (1) (a) — Order of President C. O. 8 dated 26th January 1950 — Effect on order of detention under Section 2 (1) (a).

Article 22 of the Constitution contemplates and permits the preventive detention of a person, though subject to certain conditions. Therefore, S. 2 (1) (a), in so far as it provides for the detention of certain classes of persons, is not rendered void, by the Constitution. What is rendered void, however, is the implied provision conferring a power to detain a person for an indefinite period because sub-clause (b) of Cl. (7) of Art. 22 requires a maximum period to be fixed by the law governing preventive detention.

The power to detain a person and the power to detain a person for an indefinite period are distinct and therefore, the provision conferring the former is not rendered void merely because the provision conferring the latter is void. As a consequence of the coming into force of the Constitution, what has happened is that the powers to detain a person will be thenceforth automatically subjected to the restrictions and limitations imposed by the Constitution. But the powers to order the detention of a person still remains.

Section 2 (1) (a), being thus still extant, is "any law" within the meaning of the expression used in sub-clause (a) of Cl. (7) of Art. 22 and hence the President can by virtue of the powers conferred on him, by order, prescribe the circumstances under which the period of detention may extend beyond three months without obtaining the opinion of the Advisory Board. The President's Order published with Notification No. C. O. 8 dated 26th January 1950 is such an Order and has the effect of validly extending the period of detention of the persons already detained under S. 2 (1) (a), C. P. and Berar Act, to three months from 26th January. 1951 Nag LJ 1: 51 Cri LJ 1372: AIR 1950 Nag 203 (207, 208) (Pt D) (Prs 24 to 26, 28) (DB).

——S. 14 — The Provincial Government (now the State Government) is not a person within meaning of Article 14 of the Constitution when it exercises its powers under Section 14 of the C. P. and Berar Public Safety Act, 1948, or the corresponding provision, namely Section 11 of M. P. Public Security Measures Act, 1950, which has superseded the C. P. and Berar Public Safety Act, 1948. For, while exercising those powers the State Government performs one of its essential functions, the functions of maintaining the Security of the State or public order. When the State performs such a function it is different from other persons whether natural or artificial. See Constitution of India, Art. 14. 1953 Nag LJ 161: ILR (1952) Nag 830: AIR 1953 Nag 35 (DB).

——S. 14 (1) — "Supplies or services".

The words "supplies or services" are not inapt to include the supply of housing. The requisitioning of the premises for housing the refugees is covered by Section 14 (1). 1951 Nag LJ 212: ILR (1951) Nag 395: AIR 1951 Nag 386 (386) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Ss. 14 (1) and 29 — Power of requisition delegated to Deputy Commissioner — Order of Additional Deputy Commissioner requisitioning premises — Validity — C. P. Land Revenue Act, S. 9-A.

The C. P. and Berar Public Safety Act confers no power of requisition upon the Deputy Commissioner. The power is conferred by Section 14 (1) on the Provincial Government. The Deputy Commissioner exercises the power of requisition by virtue of the delegation made by the Provincial Government under S. 29. Such a delegation of power cannot by any means be regarded as a power conferred by the Act. Section 9-A of the C. P. Land Revenue Act cannot be of any avail to the Additional Deputy Commissioner in exercising a power conferred upon the Deputy Commissioner not by any enactment but by virtue of a notification under an Act. An order of the Additional Deputy Commissioner requisitioning premises under Section 14 (1) of the C. P. and Berar Public Safety Act is, therefore, invalid. ILR (1951) Nag 395: 1951 NLJ 212: AIR 1951 Nag 386 (387) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 14 (1) — Satisfaction of requisitioning authority.

Where there is no recital in the order that it is necessary or expedient to requisition the property in question, nor is there any affidavit filed to establish that the authority requisitioning the property has in fact applied its mind to the question and formed an opinion as required by the Statute, no presumption can be made in favour of the order. In the absence of proof that the order has been passed in conformity with the requirements of the statute, the order is liable to be quashed. 1951 Nag LJ 212: ILR (1951) Nag 395: AIR 1951 Nag 386 (387) (Pt C) (Pr 9) (DB).

SECTION 16

——Ss. 16 and 17 — Offence under S. 307, Penal Code made punishable with death by Section 16 — Notification excluding trial by jury in such offences— Sessions Judge trying offence under S. 307, Penal Code, with jury — Trial is invalid — Provisions of Section 17 do not apply to Sessions Court.

Section 16, Central Provinces and Berar Public Safety Act, 1948, prescribes inter alia that whoever commits an offence under Section 307, Penal Code, may be punished with death, and the notification issued by the Provincial Government under Section 269, Criminal P. C., excluded from trial by jury offences punishable with death. It is true that Section 17 of the Act provides that any offence under Sections 307, 324, 325 or 326, Penal Code shall not, except in cases in respect of which a direction under Section 21 has been issued, cease to be triable by any Court which might have tried the offence had it not been made punishable with the enhanced penalty specified in Section 16, but this provision cannot apply to Courts of Session for the obvious reason that those Courts are empowered to try offences which are punishable with death. The provision must apply to the Courts of Section 30 — Magistrates who are empowered to try in certain areas all offences not punishable with death. This view is reinforced by the proviso to Section 17, Central Provinces and Berar Public Safety Act, 1948, which inhibits a Court not constituted under it from inflicting a punishment in excess of the punishment which it is authorised to inflict under Sections 32, 33 or 34, Criminal P. C. A trial by Jury of an offence under Section 307, Penal Code by a Sessions Judge, is therefore, not valid. 51 Cri LJ 474: ILR (1950) Nag 925: AIR 1950 Nag 49 (51) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

——Ss. 17 and 16 — Offence under Section 307, Penal Code made punishable with death by Section 16 — Notification excluding trial by jury in such offences— Sessions Judge trying offence under Section 307, Penal Code, with jury — Trial is invalid — Provisions of Section 17 do not apply to Sessions Court. SECTION 29

——S. 29 — Exercise of power under S. 14 (1) by Additional Deputy Commissioner — C. P. and Revenue Act (2 of 1947), S. 9-A.

Section 9-A of the Land Revenue Act cannot be of any avail to the Additional Deputy Commissioner in exercising of power conferred upon the Deputy Commissioner not by any enactment but by virtue of a notification under an Act. The Deputy Commissioner exercises the power of requisition by virtue of the delegation made by the Provincial Government under Section 29. Such a delegation of power cannot by any means be regarded as a power conferred by the Act itself within the meaning of Section 9-A of the C. P. Land Revenue Act. 1951 Nag LJ 212: ILR (1951) Nag 395: AIR 1951 Nag 386 (387) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

—COCHIN CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (27 of 1124 ME)

●——S. 3 — Notification under — Prosecution after repeal of Act.

(Koshi and Govinda Pillai, JJ., in the order of reference):— The omission of the word 'notification' in Section 73 (2) of the Travancore-Cochin Public Safety Measures Act (5 of 1950) is of no moment in view of Section 23 of the Travancore-Cochin Interpretation and General Clauses Act (1125). Hence where the notification declaring the communist party unlawful under Section 3 of the Cochin Criminal Law Amending Act (27 of 1124) was in force when the meeting of the Communist party was held but the Act was repealed by Act 5 of 1950 when the action was taken under S. 4 against the accused it cannot be said that the prosecution was started under a defunct notification. By transgressing the law as enacted in Section 4 (1) and (2) of the Cochin Criminal Law Amendment Act (27 of 1124) the accused persons had incurred a liability in the sense of Section 73 (3) of the Public Safety Measures Act and Clause (c) expressly authorises an institution of an investigation or a legal proceeding in respect thereof notwithstanding the repeal of the law under which the liability was incurred. ●——Ss. 3, 31, 33 and 40 — Declaration under S. 3 — Finality.

Subject to the Order of the High Court on application, if any, made under Section 31 a declaration under Section 3 is final and conclusive for all purposes and a person prosecuted under Section 4 for being a member of an association declared to be unlawful or for other activities in connection therewith could not question its validity. To make an order under Section 3 is an executive act and it cannot be canvassed directly or indirectly in Court except as the law makes provision in that behalf. Apart from the language of Section 3, sub-sections (2) and (3) of Section 33 also make that point clear. To hold otherwise would be to hold that even when the High Court refuses to set aside the order, a subordinate Criminal Court can examine its validity if and when a prosecution happens to be launched under Section 4. S. 40 does not justify an inference to the contrary. George Chandayammury v. State. 1952 Ker LT 178: 1952 Cri LJ 1066: ILR (1952) Trav-Co 1: AIR 1952 Trav-Co 217 (222, 223) (Pt B) (Prs 10, 11) (DB).

●——S. 3 — Scope — If void as contravening Art. 19 (1) (c) and (4) of the Constitution — Notification dated 2-1-1950 — Validity of — Prosecution for contravention of — Sustainability.

Section 3 of the Cochin Criminal Law Amendment Act (27 of 1124 ME) oversteps the bounds of permissible legislation and it therefore has to be declared to have become void on the coming into force of the Constitution. Likewise the notifications issued under that section would also become void. The safeguard of a judicial review which is provided in the Act is really illusory. The absence of a provision for proper notice or sufficient publicity and the imposition of a time limit for seeking a review of the Government order or Notification by the High Court make that law overstep the bounds of permissible legislation in such a way that Art. 19 (4) of the Constitution cannot save it. It is an unreasonable restriction on the exercise of the right conferred by Article 19 (1) (c), and therefore on the coming into force of the Constitution not only Section 3 of the Act, but also the Notifications issued under it became void. The prosecution launched for transgression of the Notification, dated 2-1-1950, is therefore clearly unsustainable, and the charge and proceedings must therefore be quashed. ●——Ss. 3 (4), 4 (6) — Representation to advisory board — No provision as to powers of board — Act not invalid on that ground.

A reference to the advisory board constituted under Section 3 (4) necessarily implies a consideration of the case by such board. ——S. 3 (5), Proviso — Scope — Vagueness of grounds supplied — Effect.

Vagueness of grounds supplied does not connote non-compliance with the provisions of Section 3 (5), E. P. Public Safety Act, 1952 Cr LJ 1529: AIR 1952 Punj 359 (360) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 3 (5) — Scope — Non-compliance — Grounds not supplied within reasonable time — Legality of detention.

The provisions of Section 3 (5), E. P. Public Safety Act, are mandatory and non-compliance with their terms makes the detention illegal. Further the grounds must be supplied within a reasonable time and if they are not so supplied the delay amounts to a breach of the provisions of Section 3 (5) and renders the detention illegal. 1952 Cr LJ 1529: AIR 1952 Punjab 359 (360, 361) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 8, 9) (DB).

——S. 3 (4) — Order extending period of detention under old Act is not invalid especially where the detenu is detained under the subsequent order further extending his detention under correct provision of law. AIR 1951 Punj 216 (221) (Pt D) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 3 (5) — Detention under Punjab Public Safety Act extended under new Act — It is not necessary to comply with provisions of S. 3 (5) of the old Act. AIR 1951 Punj 216 (222) (Pt E) (Pr 14) (DB).

——S. 3 (5) — Non-compliance with — Effect.

Though the executive orders of the Government in force at time when the order of detention was passed did not require the District Magistrate to communicate to the detenu the grounds of his detention and to inform him of his right to make representation to the Provincial Government, it is his duty to comply with the statutory formalities in Section 3 (5) as soon as the Act of 1949 is published in the Gazette. Hence though the order of detention is valid at its inception the subsequent detention becomes wholly void and inoperative in the eye of the law. 52 Pun LR 141: 51 Cri LJ 1335: AIR 1950 East Punj 271 (272) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 10).

——S. 3 (5), Proviso — Scope of.

The proviso to Section 3 (5) does not contemplate that the order of detention will not be invalid even if no communication whatsoever is made to the detenu or that it is open to the Provincial Government to comply or not to comply with the direction given by the Legislature. 52 Pun LR 141: 51 Cri LJ 1335: AIR 1950 East Punj 271 (272) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——S. 3 — Grounds — Sufficiency.

Where the grounds supplied to the detenu merely state that he took part in subversive activities and committed breach of the public tranquillity the information given is not merely vague, insufficient or indefinite but amounts to no information at all and there is no compliance with all the provisions of law as contained in Section 3 and the continued detention of the detenu becomes illegal. 51 Cri LJ 1237: AIR 1950 East Punj 222 (225) (Pt A) (Prs 13, 14).

——S. 3 — Reasons not within scope of Act — Effect.

If a reason is given for detention of the person which is not within the scope and ambit of the Act conferring the power upon the detaining authority then the whole order is vitiated notwithstanding the fact that other reasons given are good. 51 Cri LJ 1237: AIR 1950 East Punj 222 (224) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

——S. 3 (5), Proviso — Interpretation.

If the proviso nullifies the effect of sub-section (5), the two have to be read and construed together. The proviso cannot be read in a manner to say that if the sub-section requires some information to be given no information is to be given merely because indefiniteness, vagueness and insufficiency are envisaged by the statute. 51 Cri LJ 1237: AIR 1950 East Punj 222 (224) (Pt C) (Pr 11).

——S. 3 — Detenu detained for something already done — Detention is not preventive but punitive and is illegal.

The executive must not detain a subject in order to punish him for what he has already done but in order to prevent him from doing something which in the opinion of the executive is likely to affect the public safety, etc. The Act can only be used for prevention and not for punishing of persons. If the District Magistrate is of the opinion that the detenu had started malicious propaganda and had issued posters, which, according to him, were objectionable from communal point of view, then it is open to him to take action against the detenu under Section 153-A, Penal Code, or under Section 108, Criminal P. C. The Act is not intended to suspend the ordinary criminal tribunals of the land or prevent them from exercising their ordinary jurisdiction. In such a case the action of the executive certainly is dehors the object of Section 3 and the detention of the detenu is illegal. AIR 1946 Bom 32, Rel. on. 51 Cri LJ 888: AIR 1950 East Punj 172 (174) (Pt A) (Prs 9, 10).

——S. 3 — Whether detenu is doing propaganda objectionable from communal point of view — District Magistrate is sole judge — High Court cannot adjudicate on such fact. 51 Cri LJ 888: AIR 1950 East Punj 172 (174) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

——S. 3 — Bona fides — Arrest under specific charge — Charge not made out — Detention under Act on same facts — Bona fides of detention become doubtful.

In a case where a man is arrested and ordered to be detained under Section 3 of the Act after having been originally arrested on a specific charge which has either collapsed or been withdrawn, there must always remain a strong suspicion that his detention has been ordered on the very facts which formed the basis of the specific charge against him, and which could not be substantiated in a Court of law, since after the date of his first arrest his conduct could not have furnished any fresh material against him. To this extent the bona fides of the order of detention become doubtful, but it cannot be held that in every such case the detention becomes illegal. 52 Pun LR 17: 51 Cri LJ 599: AIR 1950 East Punj 162 (164) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

——S. 3 (4) — Advisory Committee under old Punjab Public Safety Act, 1947, automatically treated as Advisory Tribunal under S. 3 (4) — It is not properly constituted Tribunal under Act.

It does not appear that Section 3, Punjab Public Safety Act of 1947 made any provision for the review of cases of persons detained under the section by any form of Advisory Committee or Tribunal and so the setting up of such an Advisory Committee by the Provincial Government to review such cases appears to have been an act of grace, performed perhaps in response to the pressure of public opinion. A body thus gratuitously constituted to deal with cases under the old Act cannot automatically and without any further order or notification become the Advisory Tribunal required by sub-section (4) of Section 3, of the new East Punjab Public Safety Act 1949, and in such a case, there is no validly constituted Advisory Tribunal under sub-section (4). 52 Pun LR 17: 51 Cri LJ 599: AIR 1950 East Punj 162 (164) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

——S. 3 (4) — Order under, in question — Affidavit should be by Secretary to Government and not by Superintendent of Police C. I. D.

Generally when any action of the Provincial Government is in question the Secretary to the Government in the Department concerned is the officer through whom any order is conveyed or any information supplied and an affidavit on the point should be that of the Home Secretary, Since sub-section (4) of Section 3 itself requires that the Provincial Government shall as soon as may be and ordinarily not more than two months after the date on which the detenu has been taken into custody refer his case to the Advisory Tribunal, when it is alleged that the provision of the sub-section (4) were not complied with the officer filing an affidavit should be the Secretary to the Government and not the Superintendent of Police, C. I. D. 52 Pun LR 17: 51 Cri LJ 599: AIR 1950 East Punj 162 (164) (Pt C) (Pr 5).

——S. 3 (4) — Provisions are mandatory — In case of delay in making reference, there must exist special reasons.

The provisions of sub-section (4) of Section 3 regarding the reference of cases of detenus to the Tribunal are mandatory and although the word "ordinarily" leaves a loophole in the case of delay in such a reference, the word must be taken in this context to mean in the absence of special reasons for not making a reference within two months. When no special reasons are given for the delay, and the case was referred only when the detenu had made a petition under Section 491, Criminal P. C., the detention would be illegal. 52 Pun LR 17: 51 Cri LJ 599: AIR 1950 East Punj 162 (164) (Pt D) (Pr 5).

——S. 3 (5) — Provisions are mandatory.

The provisions of Section 3 (5) are mandatory and must be complied with. Where no communication was made to the detenu as was required by sub-section (5) of Section 3 nor was he informed of his right to make a representation to the Provincial Government or afforded the earliest opportunity of doing so the detention is illegal. The fact that the detenu previous to his detention, when arrested under different charge, had made a represetnation in his bail application against his arrest, will not cure the illegality.

(The word "may" interpreted.) 52 Pun LR 17: 51 Cri LJ 599: AIR 1950 East Punj 162 (165, 166, 167) (Pt E) (Prs 6, 7, 8).

●——S. 4 (3) — Order of externment for three months — Period not unreasonable — Possibility of abuse of power — No ground for impugning an Act. See Constitution of India, Art. 19 (5). 51 Cri LJ 550: AIR 1950 SC 211.

●——S. 4 (6) — Grounds of externment —Communication to externee — Right whether given by S. 4 (6) — Validity of S. 4 (6).

(Majority view; Mukherjea and Mahajan JJ., dissenting.) — While the word "may" ordinarily conveys idea of a discretion and not compulsion, reading it with the last part of the clause it seems that when an externment order has to be enforced for more than three months an absolute right is given to the externee to make a representation. He cannot make a representation unless he has been furnished grounds for the order. In no other part of the Act a right to obtain the grounds for the order in such a case is given to him. Therefore that right has to be read as given under the first part of Section 4 (6).

Per B. K. Mukherjea J. — First part of sub-section (6) of Section 4 makes it entirely optional with authorities to communicate the grounds, upon which the order is made, to the person affected by it. The grounds need not be communicated at all if the authorities so desire. As regards the right of representation the latter part of the sub-section seems to imply that when the order is to remain in force for more than 3 months, the right of representation should be given to the aggrieved person and the representation shall be referred for consideration to the Advisory Tribunal constituted under Section 3, sub-section (4) of the Act. The right, however, is purely illusory as would appear from the fact that even in cases where the order is to be operative for more than three months, there is no obligation on the part of the authorities to communicate to the person the grounds upon which the order was made. This sub-section, therefore, cannot be said to have imposed restrictions which are reasonable in the interest of the general public and under Article 13 (1) of the Indian Constitution has become void and inoperative after the Constitution came into force. ——S. 4 (as applied to Ajmer) — Power of District Magistrate to cancel his previous order issued under S. 4 — General Clauses Act (1897), S. 21.

There is no specific provision in Section 4 to enable a District Magistrate to cancel an order passed by him under that section. Section 21, General Clauses Act, also does not apply to such a case as the East Punjab Public Safety Act is not a Central Act or Regulation. But the principle laid down in Section 21, General Clauses Act, is of general application and there is no reason why an executive officer should not withdraw an order passed by him earlier particularly when the second order is in favour of the liberty of the subject. The District Magistrate who acts as an executive officer under Section 4, has power to cancel or withdraw an earlier order passed by him under S. 4. 1950 AMLJ 39: AIR 1950 Ajmer 57 (58) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6).

The Chief Commissioner of Delhi issued an order under Section 7 (i) (a), East Punjab Public Safety Act, against the printer, publisher and editor of the English weekly of Delhi called the Organizer directing them "to submit for scrutiny in duplicate, before publication, till further orders, all communal matter and news and views about Pakistan including photographs and cartoons other than those derived from official sources or supplied by the news agencies . . . The applicants, the printer, publisher and editor, applied under Article 32 of the Constitution for issue of a writ of certiorari and prohibition against the Chief Commissioner:

Held (Per majority, Fazl Ali J. Contra) — That the imposition of pre-censorship on the journal was undoubtedly a restriction on the liberty of the press which is an essential part of the right to freedom of speech and expression declared by Art. 19 (1) (a) and for the reasons indicated in the Supreme Court judgment in Petn. No. 16 of 1950: (AIR 1950 SC 124). Section 7 (i) (c) which authorised the imposition of such restriction fell outside the reservation of Art. 19 (2) and as such was void. SECTION 36

——S. 36 (1) — Validity — Classfication of territory into dangerously disturbed area and other area — (Constitution of India, Art. 14).

It was contended that Section 36 (1) of the East Punjab Safety Act is ultra vires. It was alleged that it violated the fundamental right of equality before law guaranteed by Article 14 of the Constitution. The argument was that since offences charged against the accused (Ss. 408, 409 and 120-B, I. P. Code) were triable under the warrant procedure under the Code, the adoption of summons procedure which S. 36 (1) authorised amounted to discrimination and thereby violated Article 14. It was the first part of sub-s. (1) of Section 36 which was impugned.

Held, that the classification had obviously been made on a territorial or geographical basis. Considering the background of the Act, it could not be said that this classification was not rational or that it was not based on an intelligible differentia. Then again, the object of the Act was obviously to ensure public safety and maintenance of public order; and there could be no doubt that the speedy trial of the specified offences had an intimate rational relation or nexus with the achievement of the said object. The Legislature was justified in enacting the first part of Section 36 so that the cases against persons charged with the commission of the specified offences could be speedily tried and disposed of. The challenge to the vires of the first part of sub-section (1) of Section 36 could not therefore be sustained, and that the impugned provision contained in the first part of Section 36 (1) was constitutional and valid. The validity of the two tests that have to be applied in determining the vires of the impugned statute under Art. 14 of the Constitution cannot be doubted. ——Ss. 36 (1) and 20 — Expiry of Act — Continuance of trial started as summons proceedings — Validity — Notification declaring territory as disturbed area in respect of offences — Validity of — Notification under Part II of S. 36 (1).

The general rule in regard to a temporary statute is that, in the absence of special provision to the contrary, proceedings which are being taken against a person under it will ipso facto terminate as soon as the statute expires. It is true that the Legislature can and often enough does avoid such an anomalous consequence by enacting in the temporary statute a saving provision, and the effect of such a saving provision is in some respects similar to the effect of the provisions of Section 6 of the General Clauses Act which deals with effect of repeal of a permanent statute. AIR 1951 SC 301; 1951 SCJ 453, Rel. on.

Section 16 of the Punjab State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act (46 of 1951) which repealed the East Punjab Public Safety Act (1949), and the East Punjab Safety (Amendment) Ordinance 5 of 1951 cannot be invoked for the purposes of validating the continuation of the proceedings taken against the accused under the summons procedure authorised by Punjab Act 5 of 1949, after the expiry of the Act on August 16, 1951. Besides, Section 36 (1) of the Act prescribed the application of the summons procedure in the trial of specified offences only in dangerously disturbed areas; and so, unless it is shown that the relevant area could be treated as a dangerously disturbed area at the material time, S. 36 (1) would be inapplicable.

The notification which declared that the whole of Province of Delhi had ceased to be a dangerously disturbed area 'except as respects things done or omitted to be done before the date of this notification' goes outside the authority conferred by Section 20 and is clearly invalid. If that be so, it must be held that the whole of the Province of Delhi ceased to be a dangerously disturbed area, as from October 1, 1950. Subsequent issue of a Certificate in the form of a notification under the second part of Section 36 (1) seeking to achieve the same result by declaring that though the State of Delhi was not a dangerously disturbed area, the offences specified in the notification would nevertheless continue to be tried according to the summons procedure, is also not authorised by the powers conferred by the second part of Section 36, sub-section (1). Since it is clear that the notification in question covers only pending cases and has no reference to offences or class of offences under the Indian Penal Code, it is outside the authority conferred by the second part of Section 36 (1). If through inadvertence or otherwise the Act did not contain an appropriate saving section, the defect could not be cured by the notifications issued either under Section 20 or under Section 36 (1) of the Act.

Held, that so long as the State of Delhi was validly notified to be a dangerously disturbed area the adoption of the summons procedure was no doubt justified and its validity could not be impeached; but with the cancellation of the relevant notification Section 36 (1) of the Act ceased to apply and it was necessary that as from the stage at which the cases against the accused then stood the warrant procedure should have been adopted. The continuation of the trial according to the summons procedure subsequent to October 1, 1950, vitiated the trial and rendered the final orders of conviction and sentence invalid. 51 Punj LR 317; AIR 1950 EP 25; 51 Cr LJ 459, Overruled. Considering the seriousness of the charges the fact that the accused had to undergo the ordeal of a trial and had suffered rigorous imprisonment for some time would not justify, his prayer that his retrial should not be ordered. ——S. 38 — Transfer of cases triable by Magistrates under S. 30 Criminal P. C.

Section 30, Criminal P. C., in no way stands repealed by the East Punjab Public Safety Act. Only such cases are to be sent by the Magistrates in the State of Ajmer under S. 38 of the East Punjab Public Safety Act to the Court of Session that could not be tried and adequate punishment meted out by Magistrates invested with powers under S. 30, Criminal P. No doubt, S. 38 (1) (i), East Punjab Public Safety Act, 1949, lays down that a Magistrate shall send a case to the Court of Session when it appears that the offence is one triable exclusively by a Court of Session or when it appears that it ought to be tried by such Court. This, however, does not mean that a case that could be tried by a Magistrate invested with power under S. 30, Criminal P. C., must necessarily be sent for disposal to the Court of Session. Section 30, Criminal P. C., in no way stands repealed by the East Punjab Public Safety Act, 1949. 51 Cri LJ 1240: 1950 AMLJ 1: AIR 1950 Ajmer 37 (1) (37) (Pr 1).

——S. 5 — Section is void being inconsistent with Art. 21 of the Constitution of India.

Article 21 of the Constitution lays down that no person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law. No procedure has been laid down in the Hyderabad Public Safety and Public Interest Regulation which must be followed before depriving a citizen of his personal liberty. It gives very wide and unlimited powers to the Security Officer for calling upon a citizen to execute a bond. Such powers are clearly against the spirit of Art. 21 of the Constitution and the general spirit of Part III of the Constitution regarding fundamental rights. Section 5 of the Security Regulation is inconsistent with the provisions of Article 21 and is, therefore, void under the provision of Article 13 of the Constitution. ILR (1951) Hyd 818: AIR 1951 Hyd 64 (65) (Pr 2) (DB).

● ——Constitution of India, Arts. 13, 14 — Trial under Hyderabad Special Tribunals Regulation (5 of 1358-F) before coming into force of the Constitution — Proceedings before commencement of Constitution cannot be challeged on ground of discrimination—Validity of subsequent proceedings depends on questions as to whether the accused had been deprived of equal protection in matters of procedure — Held, that although there was certain deviation in certain particulars the accused had substantially the benefit of a normal trial in this case. See Constitution of India, Art. 13. 1953 Cri LJ 862: AIR 1953 SC 156.

——Validity — Regulation is not unconstitutional — Constitution of India, Arts. 14, 21, 245.

The Hyderabad Special Tribunals Regulation is not unconstitutional and is valid law.

The Regulation does not infringe Art. 14 of the Constitution. All Constitutions have recognised the power of the legislature to make classification of Courts resting upon reasonable grounds of distinction. It does not offend against the guarantee of equal protection of the laws envisaged by Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. Equal protection of the laws is ensured when the laws operate alike on all subjects without any discrimination. As regards Procedural Laws, it is open to the Legislature to abolish Courts, create new ones and it may prescribe different modes of procedure in its discretion. This power is subject only to one limitation and that is that in so doing legislature shall not dispence with any substantive rights. AIR 1951 Hyd 13 (FB), Foll.

The trial of an accused by a Special Tribunal under the Regulation does ont infringe Art. 21 of the Constitution. The expression 'procedure established by law' in Art. 21 must mean procedure prescribed by the law of the State. AIR 1948 PC 48 and AIR 1950 SC 27, Rel. on.

The provision in the Special Tribunals Regulation whereby the Tribunal would get jurisdiction only when the case was transferred by the Military Governor is not unconstitutional and does not amount to abrogating the extant law, namely the Criminal Procedure Code, because a provision in an Act that the operation of the Act is to be determined by some officer does not amount to delegation of any legislative power. It can only amount to an authorisation to enforce the Act on the fulfilment of the conditions specified therein. ('51) ILR (1951) Hyd 895: 1953 Cri LJ 785: AIR 1953 Hyd 145 (149) (Pt A) (Prs 13, 14).

——Consent of Nizam — The Special Tribunal's Regulation under which the Tribunal was constituted was promulgated by the Military Governor with the assent of H. E. H. the Nizam. H. E. H. the Nizam vested all authority of the Government in the then Military Governor Major General J. N. Chaudhury, who enacted the regulation. Under these circumstances the necessity of assent as to regulation of this kind cannot be imported merely because prior to Police Action Local legislature needed the assent. SECTION 1

●——Ss. 1, 4 and 7 — Regulation if ultra vires the Constitution — Constitution of India, Article 14.

Per Full Bench:— The Special Tribunals Regulation is intra vires the Constitution with the exception of the whole of S. 4 (2) and (4) and S. 7 (2-A) and (3), and certain portions of Section 4 (2-A), (7) and S. 7 (2) indicated below, which offend Art. 14 of the Constitution.

Section 4 (2-A), after deleting the words "nothing in sub-section (2) ..... is under" will stand.

Section 4 (7) in so far as it enjoins the Special Tribunal to follow the procedure prescribed for summary trial, cannot stand. The only procedure left is the one prescribed for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates. The latter procedure remains in force.

Section 4, sub-section (7) is severable and the portion of the sub-section which will remain .....after separating it from the void portion will read thus: "A Special Tribunal, shall, in all matters in respect to which no procedure has been prescribed by this Regulation, follow the procedure prescribed for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates".

Section 7 (2) has to be deleted because it puts restriction on the right of appeal and the power of revision from any order or sentence passed by the Special Tribunal and also it does away with the necessity of the submission of the case for confirmation to any authority. This portion with sub-section (2-A) has to go because the valuable rights of appeal and powers of revision and confirmation are denied to the accused.

But the portion of S. 7 (2) beginning from .....there shall be Court of Session "can stand and is valid".

After deleting the above portion from S. 7, sub-section (2) the portion which validly remains in force would read as follows: "There shall be an appeal to the High Court from any sentence passed by a Special Tribunal which would have been appealable to the High Court under the Hyderabad Criminal P. C."

After the deletion of the provisions mentioned above, the trial by a tribunal under the Regulation is substantially the same as that under the ordinary Criminal P. C. and the regulation as it stands after the deletion mentioned above, is neither void nor unworkable.

The omission of committal proceedings by Section 4 (1) does not amount to a denial of equality within the meaning of Art. 14 of the Constitution.

(The Regulation after deleting the excepted portion is given in extenso in para. 81). Abdul Rahim v. Joseph A. Pinto. ILR (1951) Hyd 1: 52 Cri LJ 1333: AIR 1951 Hyd 11 (13, 14, 21, 22, 24 to 26, 27) (Pt C) (Prs 11, 17, 19, 22, 50, 58, 64, 69, 72, 74, 81) (FB).

SECTION 2-B

●——S. 2-B (1) (as amended by Regulation of 30-10-49) — Retrospective effect — Sentence of death before amending Regulation — Execution of sentence by hanging — Legality.

The provisions of S. 2-B applied to all sentences which had remained unexecuted or were to be executed at the date of the amending Regulation. They must be taken to have restrospective effect because the mode of the execution of a sentence can hardly be regarded as a matter of substantive law or something which would affect any substantive rights. Where the High Court which upheld the conviction and sentence of death passed by the Special Tribunal had power to inflict the sentence of death by hanging under the amended Regulation the fact that at the time of passing the sentence of death by hanging by the tribunal it could be executed by decapitation only is of no avail, (Fazl Ali, Mahajan, B. ——S. 3 — Validity of — Jurisdiction of Courts — The Constitution of the Special Tribunal and the discretion under S. 3 of the Regulation was not proscribed either on the ground of repugnancy or of that of adversely affecting fundamental rights and both these provisions were legitimately operative — (Constitution of India, Arts. 14, 245). AIR 1955 NUC (Hyd) 5624 (DB).

——S. 3 — Proceedings under — Validity of — Contravention of Art. 21 of the Constitution — H. E. H. the Nizam had delegated full power to the Military Governor and the validating Regulation passed on 6-10-49 cured the earlier defect in the proceedings: so there can be no question of offending Art. 21 of the Constitution. The validating Regulation was as much the law of the State as the Regulation appointing the Tribunal — (Constitution of India, Art. 21) — (Hyderabad Special Tribunals (Validation of Proceedings) Regulation (1 of 1359-F.), S. 3). AIR 1955 NUC (Hyd) 5624 (DB).

——S. 3 — Compliance with — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 197.

The principles underlying sanction of the Court contemplated under S. 197, Criminal P. C. have no bearing on the cases of want of direction under S. 3 of the Regulation and the want of any direction whatever under that section in a case will result in similar consequences where a case is tried by a Court of Sessions without commitment. No Court of Sessions is empowered to take cognizance of a case without proper committal. In the absence of a clear inference being possible under the terms of the order the fact that a major offence has been mentioned in the direction of a kind provided for under S. 3 the minor offences cannot be taken to have been included by necessary implication because the direction required under the section could have been with regard to a particular offence or offences and was so secured under a special order. The Tribunal, therefore, cannot hear and convict the accused for S. 146, Penal Code, as S. 148 is already there. But mention of S. 326 in the order does actually include S. 324 as there is no reason whatever to include S. 326 and exclude the other section: 75 IA 41; 75 IA 30 and AIR 1945 Pat 98, Ref. 52 Cri LJ 1123: AIR 1951 Hyd 97 (99, 100) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 6) (DB).

——S. 6 — Powers of Tribunal.

It cannot be said that there is a difference between a Court constituted under the Criminal Procedure Code and a Court constituted under the Special Tribunals Regulation and such a Tribunal does not have the power given to the ordinary Court of law under S. 14, Hyderabad Criminal P. C. According to S. 6 of the Regulation, the Tribunal is like any other Court of Sessions with original jurisdiction. The Regulation merely creates a Court and does not interfere with the ordinary procedure. AIR 1951 Hyd 97 (107) (Pt D) (Pr 34) (DB).

——S. 7 (2) — Sentence of death by Special Tribunal — Want of assent of H. E. H. the Nizam for execution — Legality — Hyderabad Criminal P. C., Ss. 20, 307 and 308.

The provisions of S. 7 (2) cover all those cases where Manzuri and tashih were contemplated under the Hyderabad Criminal P. C., S. 20 shows that the word manzuri has not been used with reference only to H. E. H. the Nizam, but it has also been used with reference to the High Court and the Government. In the context in which it is used, it has no other meaning than the act of confirmation, and the new word, tausiq, which has been used in the Regulation, and which literally means confirmation, appears to convey the same sense as the word manzuri. It is quite plain that one of the objects of the Regulations was to simplify procedure and expedite trials. Hence the contention that a sentence of death passed by the Special Tribunal cannot be executed without the assent or approval of H. E. H. the Nizam, cannot be satisfied. Janardhan Reddy v. —HYDERABAD SPECIAL TRIBUNALS (TERMINATION) AND SPECIAL JUDGES (APPOINTMENT) REGULATION (10 of 1359 Fasli) ——Discriminatory procedure — Regulation is ultra vires of Constitution of India, Art. 14.

Per Majority (Srinivasachari, J., Contra) — Article 14 of the Constitution condemns discrimination not only by substantive law but also by law of procedure. The Hyderabad Special Tribunals (Termination) and Special Judges (Appointment) Regulation No. 10 of 1359 Fasli, provides certain special procedure different from that laid down in the ordinary law of criminal procedure. There is no object specified. There is no understandable basis as to why certain persons should be tried under the Regulation by Special Judges and why persons charged under similar offences should be tried in the ordinary Courts. There is, no basis of any territorial classification in it. Moreover, the Regulation lays down a procedure which is, in some respects, less advantageous to the accused. The procedure, therefore, being discriminatory is hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. Hence, the said Regulation is invalid and ultra vires. AIR 1951 Hyd 11, Overruled. Mohammad Hyder v. SECTION 5

——S. 5 — Validity — (Constitution of India, Art. 14).

Under the Hyderabad Criminal P. C. the committal proceeding is not an indispensable preliminary to a sessions trial, and its absence does not operate to take away the jurisdiction of the Special Judge to take cognizance of the case before the Constitution. The difference between a warrant procedure prescribed by the Regulation and the sessions procedure at that stage applicable, under the general law is not at all substantial, and the minor difference would not bring the case within the mischief of Art. 14 of the Constitution. ——S. 5 (1) (b) and (2) — Special Judge can take cognisance of case only when it is transferred to him by chief minister — Case validly transferred — Subsequent transfer by Chief Minister to Sessions Judge without order of committal — Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 193) — (Hyderabad Criminal P. C., S. 198).

The accused was charged before the Special Tribunal with offences of murder under various sections of the Hyderabad Penal Code, and was convicted and sentenced to death. On appeal the conviction was quashed on ground that he was not afforded an opportunity to engage a lawyer and the case was remanded "to the trial Court for fresh trial". When the order of remand was made, special Tribunals were abolished and Special Judges were appointed under the Hyderabad Special Tribunals (Termination) and Special Judges (Appointment) Regulation 10 of 1359-F and although there was no specific direction in the order of the High Court to remand the case to a Special Judge appointed under the aforesaid Regulation, the file was sent by the office of the High Court to the Special Judge for Medak and Nalgonda holding his Court in the city of Hyderabad. While the case was pending on the file of the Special Judge, Medak and Nalgonda the Chief Minister purporting to act under sub-section (2) of Section 5 of the said Regulation transferred it to the Sessions Judge, Medak for "trial in accordance with Law" who in turn transferred the case for disposal to the Additional Sessions Judge, Medak. After the case was transferred to the Additional Sessions Judge, Medak the accused put in a petition challenging the jurisdiction of that Court on the ground inter alia that being a Sessions Court it could not take cognizance of the case without an order of commitment by a Magistrate duly empowerd in that behalf. The Additional Sessions Judge rejected the petition for the reason that once cognizance was taken by a competent court there was no question of further taking cognizance of the same offence. After the application of the Indian Penal Code and Indian Criminal Procedure Code to all Part B States and the re-allocation of territorial jurisdiction, the file was transferred to the Sessions Judge, Nalgonda who incidentally happened to be the same Additional Sessions Judge of Medak, a similar petition challening the jurisdiction of the Session Court to take cognizance of the case was presented. This petition was also dismissed. The accused was convicted. In appeal the same objections as to jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge without an order of committal was taken:

Held, that before cognizance of the case could be taken by any Special Judge, it was essential that the Chief Minister or a person authorised by the Chief Minister in this behalf should have directed its trial by the Special Judge as required by Cl. (b) of sub-section (1) of S. 5 of the said Regulation. Since no such order was passed the transfer of such a case by the Chief Minister to the Sessions Judge of Medak was ineffective if not otiose.

Even on the assumption that there was a valid order of the Chief Minister directing the trial of this case by the Special Judge under Cl. (b) of sub-section (1) of S. 5, the subsequent transfer by the Chief Minister of the case to the Sessions Judge of Medak would involve the determination of the very same question, viz., whether the Sessions Judge of Medak could take cognizance of a case transferred to his Court without a valid order of committal, and that there being no committal order by any Magistrate to the Sessions Court of Medak, that Court could not take cognizance of this case. As such the proceedings and the trial by the Sessions Court of Nalgonda to which the case was subsequently transferred were vitiated. ILR (1952) Hyd 581: 1953 Cri LJ 115: AIR 1953 Hyd 9 (10, 12) (Prs 6, 10) (DB).

——S. 8 — Validity — (Constitution of India, Art. 14).

Not only the right of an accused to apply for transfer of his case has not been taken away by S. 8 but the right of revision also has been left unaffected except to a small extent. Habeeb Mohammad v. ——S. 8 — Validity — (Constitution of India, Art. 14).

Section 8 must be held to be invalid to the extent that it takes away the provision relating to confirmation of sentences as in the Hyderabad Criminal Procedure Code. This, however, is a severable part of the Section and being invalid, the provisions of the Hyderabad Criminal Procedure Code with regard to the confirmation of sentences must be followed. Those provisions however, do not affect in any way the procedure for trial laid down in the Regulation. The proper stage when Section 20 of the Hyderabad Cr. P. H. the Nizam had delegated full power to the Military Governor and the validating Regulation passed on 6-10-49 cured the earlier defects in the proceedings. ——S. 3 — Effect of non-compliance and subsequent validation of S. 3 of Hyderabad Regulation (5 of 1358-F.) — Section 3 of the Regulation 5 of 1358-F was imperative and there was no jurisdiction and competence in the Tribunal without an order contemplated by that section. Section 3 of the Regulation validates restrospectively all proceedings that took place before the Special Tribunal in the absence of a specific order by the Military Governor transferring the case to the Tribunal. The Regulation did not affect the jurisdiction of the Tribunal because it had jurisdiction already. SECTION 3

——S. 3 (1) — Scope — Detention on several grounds — Some grounds non-existent or irrelevant — Effect on validity of order — (Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 3).

Where power is vested in a statutory authority to deprive the liberty of a subject on its subjective satisfaction is stated to be based on a number of grounds or for a variety of reasons, all taken together, and if some out of them are found to be non-existent or irrelevant, the very exercise of that power is bad. To uphold the validity of such an order in spite of the invilidity of some of the reasons or grounds would be to substitute the objective standards of the Court for the subjective satisfaction of the statutory authority. In applying these principles, however, the Court must be satisfied that the vague or irrelevant grounds are such as, if excluded, might reasonably have affected the subjective satisfaction of the appropriate authority. The Court while anxious to safeguard the personal liberty of the individual will not lightly interfere with such orders. Dwarka Das Bhotia v. SECTION 4

——S. 4 — Order of detention is not warrant of arrest within meaning of Section 80, Criminal P. C. — Section 4 does not attract Section 80 of Code.

Section 4 of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act speaks only of the manner of execution of a detention order and does not render the detention order a warrant of arrest under the Criminal P. C. so as to require compliance with Section 80 of that Code. The manner of execution of a warrant of arrest is provided for in Section 46 of the Code and not in Section 80.

Per Kilam and Shahmiri, JJ. (Wazir, C. J., contra): Where the detention orders are not served on the detenus in accordance with the procedure established by Section 4, Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, 2011, the arrest and detention of the detenus are both improper and invalid. The procedure laid down by law has to be strictly observed and where deviation from legal procedure is established the detenu is entitled to be set free. State. 1956 Cr LJ 48: AIR 1956 J & K 1 (11, 16) (Pt H) (Prs 35, 57) (FB).

● ——S. 4 — Directions as to execution of order given in order of detention — Failure to follow — Effect — (Preventive Detention Act (1950), Section 3).

Preventive detention is a serious inroad on civil liberties and as such any law which in any way curtails civil liberties has to be very strictly construed. The Court has to see if the law as it is, has or has not been meticulously followed, and if it finds even a hair-breadth deviation made from the express provisions of law or a slight disregard of any direction given according to law it shall have no hesitation in declaring a detention under such circumstances quite illegal. This shall apply with greater force in Kashmir as the law there is somewhat different and even a bit harsh when compared to the law in force in the other Indian States. When directions as to the execution of an order of detention are given in the order of detention itself, those directions have to be meticulously followed. Hence, where the order of detention has provided that a notice of the said Order shall be given to the detenu by delivering a copy of this order to him, and no such copy is delivered to him, the order of detention is bad. Hissam-Ud-Din v. State. 1955 Cr LJ 1071: AIR 1955 J & K 7 (8) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 7) (FB).

● ——S. 8 (1) — 'As soon as may be' — Meaning of.

The period of time predicated by the phrase "as soon as may be" begins to run from the time the detention in pursuance of the detention order begins. And to communicate the grounds 'as soon as may be' may well be said to mean to do so within a reasonable time with an understanding to do it within the shortest possible time. Whenever the question of reasonableness arises in computing the period of time the Court has perforce to have regard to the particular circumstances of the case in which the question arises for decision. It may not be possible in many cases to affirmatively say or to precisely quantify the period of time by reference to hours days, or months, nevertheless, it is possible, having regard to the circumstances of the case, to say whether the thing done was or was not done 'as soon as may be' within the time which was reasonably convenient or requisite. ● ——S. 8 (1), Proviso — Construction — Time for making declaration under — (Interpretation of Statutes).

Proviso to Section 8 (1) has to be construed harmoniously with the provisions of sub-section (1) to which it is a proviso. The proviso implies that the time for making the declaration should be conterminous with the time fixed for communicating the grounds under sub-section (1). When the detaining authority makes the order of detention, it specifies in the preamble to the order why the order is made, namely, whether it is made with a view to preventing the detenu from acting in any manner prejudicial to one or other of the four objects enumerated in Section 3 (1) (a). If the Government can make up its mind that the detention order is made against a particular person on account of his activities being prejudicial to the security of the State, there is no reason why the Government should not at the same time or 'as soon as may be' thereafter make up its mind as to whether or not it would be against the public interest to communicate to such person the grounds on which the detention order is made. Section 8 of the Act is not in excess of or inconsistent with the provisions of Cl. (c) added to Article 35 of the Constitution by the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1954. The effect of the modification in Article 35 of the Constitution by the addition of Cl. (c) in it by the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1954, is that such of the provisions of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act (4 of 2011) as are inconsistent with Part III of the Constitution shall be valid until the expiration of five years from the commencement of the Order. This is an exception which has been engrafted on the Constitution in respect of fundamental rights relating to personal liberty for the limited period of five years. The Act itself has a limited life of five years. Thus the exception aforesaid is co-extensive with the life of the Act itself. Hence, so long as the Act continues in force in its present form, the aid of the provisions of Articles 21 and 22 cannot be invoked to attack the constitutionality of Section 8 (1), of the Act by a person detained under Section 3 (1) (a) (i). Hence, the petitioner, who has been detained under Section 3 (1) (a) (i) of the Act, is not entitled to know the grounds upon which he had been detained beyond what is disclosed in the order itself, where the Government by order has declared that it would be against the public interest to communicate to him the grounds on which the detention order has been made. ●——S. 8 — Detention for reasons of security of State — Declaration as to non-supply of grounds — Time limit.

Though it is highly undesirable that a detenu should remain in suspense, if the making of a declaration with regard to the supply or non-supply of the grounds is delayed, yet a reference to proviso to Section 8, Preventive Detention Act, would show that no time-limit for making a declaration with regard to the non-supply of grounds is provided by this Section or any other Section of the Preventive Detention Act. Such being the case, the Government cannot be forced to act in a manner which may be more desirable, but which law does not make upon it obligatory. Hence, where the detention is for reasons of security of State, the mere fact that the declaration as regards non-supply of grounds is made after the application for habeas corpus is submitted to the High Court does not vitiate the detention. SECTION 14

●——S. 14 — Scope of — Decision of Government if to be communicated to detenu — (Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), Section 11).

Decision of the Government under Section 14 need not be communicated to the detenu. The omission to convey the order made under Section 11 of the Indian Preventive Detention Act does not make the detention illegal or result in infringement of the petitioner's fundamental right. The position is the same under Section 14 of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act which does not in terms require any formal order to be made. Mohammad Afzal Khan v. ●——S. 19 — Constitutionality of Act — Tests of— Opposed to the policy of the Constitution is no test — Section 19 of the Preventive Detention Act is not ultra vires of the Constitution on the ground that it is not in accordance with the spirit of the Constitution. ●——S. 19 — Scope — If contravenes Art. 20, Constitution of India.

It is true that Article 20, Constitution of India, forbids the trial and conviction of a person according to a law which was not in force at the time when the offence was committed; but proceedings under the Preventive Detention Act are not judicial proceedings and preventive detention by itself is not a conviction or sentence of imprisonment. Section 19 which is of the nature of an ex post facto law which has been framed to govern the cases of those detenus who were arrested under earlier laws now repealed and whose remedies available to them then have now been taken away from them, does not, therefore, contravene the provisions of Article 20. Ghulam Ahmad v. State, 1954 Cr LJ 1811: AIR 1954 J & K 59 (62) (Pt D) (Pr 11) (FB).

●——S. 19— Effect of, on High Court's powers — (Constitution of India, Article 32) — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 491).

Section 19 appears to limit the powers of the High Court in respect of those detentions to whom Section 19 applies but it has to be kept in view that the powers of issuing writs of habeas corpus are guaranteed to the High Court by the Constitution and also similar orders can be issued under Section 491, Criminal P. C. No doubt the scope of Section 19 is wide enough yet it does not affect the power of the High Court to scrutinize the orders under which detentions are made.

The Court has to see whether the detention order which is challenged is made or appears to have been made under a valid law. If detention order appears to have been made under a valid law the Courts cannot interfere with that order and cannot release the detenu but if the circumstances show that the order has no semblance of having been made under any valid law in respect of detention the Courts can release the detenu. SECTION 3

●——S. 3 — Order under — Form and content of.

It is true that no form is prescribed in Section 3 in which an order of detention is to be drawn but that does not mean that a free licence has been given to detaining authorities to draw their orders in a haphazard manner. The order must not only show that the detaining authority was satisfied about the necessity of making a detention order, but it must also show, and the detenu has a right to know, that the detaining authority was in fact authorised by the Government to take action under the relevant section. Ghulam Ahamad v. State, 1954 Cr LJ 1811: AIR 1954 J & K 59 (60) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (FB).

●——S. 3 — Validity of order — Order not signed by proper authority — Effect.

The order under Section 3, is not an executive order, but is an order under a Statute. When a statutory duty is cast upon an authority to do a certain act, it is that authority which must do that act and sign all orders passed under the said statute. Without express powers granted by the statute itself, the said authority cannot delegate its powers to any authority whatsoever.

Held, that the signing of the order by Deputy Secretary in place of the Minister was improper. Ghulam Ahmad v. State, 1954 Cr LJ 1811: AIR 1954 J & K 59 (61) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (FB).

●——S. 3 (as amended by Act 13 of 2010) — Power of Government to revoke defective order and pass fresh order — Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 491).

The Government has the right to pass a fresh order of detention, if it comes to the conclusion that the previous order of detention was defective on any grounds whatsoever and once such a valid order of detention is passed, any irregularities or illegalities of the period prior to the making of the fresh valid order would in no way affect the merits or the result of the case.

Further, if at any time before the Court directs the release of the detenu, a valid order directing his detention is produced, the Court cannot direct his release merely on the ground that at some prior stage there was no valid order for detention. ——S. 3 —Annexure to Council Order No. 356-C of 1947 — Detention outside jurisdiction — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 491) — (Constitution of India, Article 226).

An order of detention directing that the detenu be detained at a place beyond the jurisdiction of the detaining authority is illegal as the annexure to Council Order No. 356-C of 1947 shows that the power of arrest and detention has to be exercised by a police officer within his own jurisdiction. ——Ss. 3 (2) and 38-A — Annexure to cabinet order No. 928-C of 1948, dated 27-11-48—Validity.

According to Section 38-A, Public Security Act, the Government can delegate only those powers to an officer of authority which it possesses. Neither Section 3 (2) nor any other section of the Act confers any power on the Government to transfer a detenu from one place of custody to another. The committal to custody, has in all cases to be made by the officer who has effected or directed the arrest of the detenus, and, therefore, the Notification (Annexure to Cabinet Order No. 928-C of 1949, dated 27-11-48) by which powes of transfer are deemed to have been delegated to the Hon'ble Home and Dy. Prime Minister is ultra vires of Section 3 (2) and Section 38-A of the Act. 12 J and K LR 73: 1953 Cr LJ 1885: AIR 1954 J & K 7 (9) (Pt B) (Prs 5, 6) (DB).

——S. 3 — Power of High Court — Criminal P. C. (1898), Sec. 491.

Under Section 3 of the Public Security Act, the sufficiency or insufficiency of material which might have satisfied the detaining authority effecting the detention of a person is a matter for the decision of that authority alone which passed the order of detention. The High Court has, however, power to examine the correctness of the recital about satisfaction of the detaining authority contained in any such order and if it comes to the conclusion that the recital is incorrect, it may declare the order to be invalid and the detention of the individual concerned to be illegal. 10 J and K LR 70: AIR 1952 J and K 4 (5) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

——S. 3 —Detention under— Grounds for, need not be supplied to detenu — Preventive Detention Act (1950), Section 7 — Applicability.

For purposes other than defence, foreign affairs and security of India, the Public Security Act is in force so far as the State of Jammu and Kashmir is concerned and detention can be ordered under its provisions.

Consequently, an order passed under Section 3 of the Public Security Act cannot be said to be invalid merely because the detenu is not supplied with the grounds of detention. The provisions of S. 7, Preventive Detention Act, cannot apply to such a case and the provisions of Public Security Act do not provide for supplying such grounds to the detenu. 10 J and K 70: AIR 1952 J and K 4 (5) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

——S. 3 — Prior order of externment — Subsequent immediate order of detention — Validity — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 491.

A wavering mind can never be treated as "a mind satisfied" which is pre-requisite for passing an order under Section 3 of the Public Security Act.

Where on the oral report of a police officer an order for externment was passed against the detenu but the Magistrate shortly after passed an order of detention against the detenu.

Held, that the order of detention was not valid inasmuch as the prior order of externment showed that the Magistrate was not satisfied as to the necessity of the action taken later on. 10 J & K LR 70: AIR 1952 J and K 4 (6) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

——Ss. 3 (1), 4 — Order of detention under Section 3 (1) — Omission to mention period — Order is not bad — Presumption as to non-satisfaction cannot be drawn. See Madhya Bharat Maintenance of Public Order Act (7 of 1949), Section 4. 1952 Cri LJ 1058: AIR 1952 Madh B 114 (DB).

——Ss. 3, 5 and 11 — Validity — Constitution of India, Article 19 (1) (d) and (e) and (5).

The powers conferred upon the Government under Section 3 are as wide as conceivable. It authorises the Government not only to interfere with the personal liberty of an individual but makes legal an interference by the Government with practically every sphere of activity of the citizen as a preventive measure if it is satisfied that he is likely to do any act prejudicial to public safety or maintenance of public order.

The unreasonableness of the restrictions imposed by the statute does not result merely from the unusually wide character of the restrictions that may be imposed upon the rights of the citizens but also flows from the manner in which the power conferred may be exercised. Under Section 11 the Government is empowered to delegate the powers or duty which is conferred or imposed on the Government, to any officer or authority without any safeguards. The unreasonableness of restrictions becomes evident from the fact that except in the case of an order of detention (See Section 5) the person against whom any other of the various orders which it is permissible to make under Section 3 (1) is passed, the person affected thereby is not given any right of representation. The authority making the order may have acted on wrong information or under a mistaken belief as to the existence of a set of circumstances which really do not exist, yet the person against whom an order is made, if it is an order other than one for his detention, is without a remedy.

The cumulative effect, therefore, of Sections 3, 5 and 11 is to impose restrictions on the Fundamental Rights conferred by Article 19 (1) (d) and (e) of the Constitution which cannot be called reasonable. The restrictions which it is permissible to impose under those sections must, therefore, be held to be ultra vires of the powers of the State Legislature. 1952 Cri LJ 1058: ILR (1952) Madh Bha 364: AIR 1952 Madh B 114 (117, 118, 119) (Pt B) (Prs 14, 18, 19) (DB.

——S. 3 (4) and (7) — Powers of police.

Powers of the Police in sub-sections (4) and (7) of Section 3 are co-extensive. The police is authorised to remove any person from a prohibited area or place. At the same time he can be prosecuted under sub-clause (7) and he shall be punishable with imprisonment to a term which may extend to one year or with fine or with both, etc. 52 Cri LJ 670: AIR 1951 Madh Bha 108 (109) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) — Order under — Who can pass.

It is primarily the M. B. Government that is empowered to make an order under Section 3 (1) (d) of the M. B. Maintenance of Public Order Act. Any other officer or authority exercising power under that rule has to derive his power from M. B. Government's order made under Section 11 of the Act and that is the sole channel provided by that Act for the delegation of the M. B. Government's power to any officer or authority subordinate to it. 52 Cr LJ 670: AIR 1951 MB 108 (109) (Pt C) (Prs 5, 8).

——S. 3 (2) — Detention by District Magistrate — Period exceeding one month — Legality of order.

Even though by virtue of Section 3 (1) read with Section 11 a District Magistrate acting as Subha can exercise the powers of the Government, yet where he expressly records in the order that he is making it under S. 3 (2), the detention of the detenu if for a period of more than one month, is illegal. AIR 1951 Madh Bha 43 (43, 44) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

——S. 3 (2) — Detention for more than own month — Legality.

Where an order of detention statedly is passed under Section 3 (2) of the Madhya Bharat Maintenance of Public Order Act by the District Magistrate it would be illegal if the detention extends beyond one month. AIR 1951 MB 43 (43, 44) (Pt B) (Pr 2).

——S. 3 — Detention order — Necessity of furnishing copy to detenu.

Justice requires that the detenu should, immediately he is taken in custody, be furnished a copy of the detention order, though there is no express provision made in these respects in the Act. 51 Cri LJ 797: AIR 1950 Madh B 26 (26) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

——Ss. 3 and 5 — Order of detention and communication of grounds — Magistrate should not merely repeat verbatim definition of 'prejudicial act' — He should scrutinise acts and conduct of person in question and then make order of detention — In communicating grounds of order he should state acts of detenu which in his opinion constitute danger to public safety or order.

When making an order of detention under Section 3 of the Act or when communicating the grounds for making the order of detention the Magistrate should not repeat verbatim the definition of 'act prejudicial to the public safety or maintenance of public order' as given in Section 2 of the Act. This is far from what the law requires. The Magistrate should scrutinise the acts and the conduct of the person in question and judge whether his acts and conduct as brought to his notice would have any of the effects stated in the definition of 'prejudicial act' and if he comes to the conclusion that public safety or public order would thereby be endangered he should proceed to make the order, and when communicating the grounds of the order of detention he should state the acts of the detenu which in his opinion constitute a danger to the public safety or maintenance of public order. 51 Cri LJ 655: AIR 1950 Madh B 9 (10) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 3 (2) — Certain statement proscribed by Government of India but not prohibited in Madhya Bharat — Statement may be highly objectionable one none the less — Possession and distribution of copies of such statement may furnish ground for detention. 51 Cri LJ 655: AIR 1950 Madh B 9 (10) (Pt C) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Ss. 4 and 3 (1) — Order of detention under Section 3 (1) — Omission to mention period — Effect — Presumption as to non-satisfaction.

An order made under Section 3 is not bad because it does not state the period for which it is to remain in force. From the language of Section 4 it is clear that in the absence of mention by the authority making the order of the period for which the order is to remain in force, it must remain in force for three months unless revoked earlier. The only effect of expressing the duration of the order in the particular form chosen by the Legislature in the Statute is to give the authority concerned a discretion to make an order which may remain in force for less than three months.

Section 4 compared with various sections of the Penal Code (1860) providing punishments and Section 144, Criminal P. C. (1898).

In this view of the matter, the omission by the authority making the order to mention the period for which it is to be in force does not lead to an inference that the authority did not properly apply his mind to all the relevant points which he ought to have considered at the time of making the order and so the order is bad in law. Want of bona fides cannot be presumed and if an order, which on the face of it is a good and valid order, is passed, the burden of proving that it was not made bona fide must rest on the party challenging the same. 1952

SECTION 5

——S. 5 — Section 5 is ultra vires the State legislature as it imposes restrictions which are not reasonable and offend against Art. 19 (1) of the Constitution. See Madhya Bharat Maintenance of Public Order Act (7 of 1949), Section 3. 1952 Cri LJ 1058: AIR 1952 Madh B 114 (DB).

——S. 5 — Duty imposed by Section 5 — Failure to perform — Effect.

The grounds of detention may be contained in the order itself. But if the order fails to state that the detenu has the right to make a representation against the order of detention to the authority making the order, the continued detention becomes illegal. AIR 1951 Madh Bha 43 (44) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

——S. 5 — Grounds supplied to detenue should be specific and not vague.

The grounds of detention supplied to the detenu should be intelligible and specific, that is they must refer to specific acts of the detenu. The object is to enable the detenu to make a representation against his detention. Mere allegation in the grounds that the detenu held a meeting wherein labourers were exicted by false propaganda, that dissatisfaction was created among the labourers and that he was an active member of the communist party are vague and do not achieve this object. AIR 1950 Madh Bha 118 (118) (Pr 3).

——S. 5 — Undisclosed grounds of detention.

There is no reason why the detaining authority should not tell the detenu that none or some of the grounds on which the order of detention was made cannot in the public interest be communicated to him. Also there is no reason why the detaining authority should not on affidavit say, when the case comes to Court, that there were grounds of detention which could not be disclosed. 51 Cri LJ 797: AIR 1950 Madh B 26 (26) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

——S. 5 — Discretion as to particulars to be communicated to detenu.

The discretion is vested by the law in the detaining authority as to what particulars out of the many shall be communicated to the detenu and he may not ask for all that he thinks he requires. But under the guise of exercising this discretion, it cannot take away the advantage of making representation against his detention.

Where the communication states that the detenu was a member of bodies which have been declared illegal and had been secretly participating in their activities, without more, this statement is not sufficient to enable the detenu to make the representation. Particulars of participation and of the activities are required.

But where it is stated that the detenu made a spirited speech in a labour meeting promoting feelings of class-hatred and exhorting labourers to go on strike and use violence, the communication stating the day and the place of the meeting, it would suffice to enable him to make the representation. Some words used in the speech are not required to be reproduced. 51 Cri LJ 797: AIR 1950 Madh B 26 (27) (Pt C) (Prs 6, 7).

——S. 5 — Grounds supplied being absolutely vague and no specific grounds alleged — Detention is improper — Unwarranted delay in supplying grounds would not show bona fides of detaining authority — Grounds not to be furnished in instalments.

Where in the order of the District Magistrate supplying the grounds beyond making a general and vague statement that the detenus are found to influence the conduct or attitude of the public in a manner likely to be prejudicial to public safety or order and prejudicing the maintenance of public order and safety no specific grounds have been alleged, there is no sufficient compliance with the provisions of Section 5; the grounds being absolutely vague the detenus are not in a position to make any effective representation and the detention being not in compliance with Section 5 it is improper. An unwarranted delay in supplying the grounds would not show the bona fides of the detaining authority with regard to the detention of the detenus. The grounds of detention and additional particulars required to be furnished under Section 5 must not be furnished in instalments but at one time soon after the order under Section 5 (1) has been made. The detaining authorities cannot go on shifting and changing the grounds under Section 5 as it suits to their convenience. That would show mala fide on their part: AIR 1949 All 148 (FB); AIR 1948 Pat 135 and AIR 1949 Oudh 20, Rel. on. 51 Cri LJ 660: AIR 1950 Madh B 11 (11, 12) (Prs 1, 3) (DB).

——Ss. 5, 3 — Order of detention and communication of grounds — Magistrate should not merely repeat verbatim definition of 'prejudicial act' — He should scrutinise acts and conduct of person in question and then make order of detention — In communicating grounds of order he should state acts of detenu which in his opinion constitute danger to public safety or order. See Public Safety — Madhya Bharat Maintenance of Public Order Act (7 of 1949), S. 3. 51 Cri LJ 635: AIR 1950 Madh Bha 9 (DB).

——S. 5 — Grounds may be furnished in instalments — All that section requires is that grounds should be communicated as soon as possible after order of detention — Order of detention on 20th March — First communication of grounds on 24th March — Second and amended communication of grounds on 2nd April — Second communication held not so late as to impute malicious motive to detaining authority.

It cannot be said that the grounds for detention cannot be furnished in instalments. All that is required by the section is that the grounds on which the order of detention has been made shall be communicated as soon as may be after the order has been made.

Where the order of detention was made on 20th March and what were supposed to be the grounds of detention were communicated to the detenu on 24th March and the second and amended communication of grounds was made on 2nd April, the second communication of grounds held could not be said to be too late, so late as to impute a malicious motive to the detaining authority, the intention to evade the law by not communicating the grounds in time or communicating them in a slovenly manner to gain time. 51 Cri LJ 655: AIR 1950 Madh B 9 (10) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 7 (1) — 'A' factually invested with powers to issue order — Order issued by 'A' under wrong official designation — Order is not invalid.

The essential thing in the matter of exercise of executive function by a public authority is the factual existence of power in him to act and not the official designation in which he expresses himself to be acting. The mere erroneous mention of the official designation cannot render the order invalid when in fact the same person was factually invested with powers to issue the order. It is clear from the wordings of Section 7 (1), M. B. Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949, that it is essentially different from S. 144 of the Cr. P. Code, in its language and scope. There is moreover an essential difference in the two statutes and the meaning and scope of one cannot be interpreted on the basis of the other provision. 1957 MPC 220: 1957 Jab LJ 74: ILR (1957) Madh Pra 179: AIR 1957 MP 54 (56) (Pt B) (Pr 16) (DB).

——Ss. 7 and 11 — Notification in Gazette — Delegation of powers under Section 7 to Subas for their respective districts — No specific order to individual Suba is necessary — Contravention of order under Section 7, promulgated by District Magistrate under powers delegated by Gazette Notification No. 18, D/- 22-4-1949 published in M. B. Gazette D/- 30-4-1949, is offence under Act.

All that is required by Section 11 is that the Government should by order direct that the powers conferred upon it by the Act shall be exercised or discharged by any officer or authority specifically mentioned in that direction. The expressions 'order' and 'direction' are not terms of art and have no technical meaning. They are used in Section 11, in the same sense in which they are used in common parlance. The order contemplated by Section 11 need not be specifically directed to the person who was to exercise the powers mentioned in the section. It will be sufficient to meet the requirements of the section if the Government indicate with sufficient clearness, so as to leave no room for doubt on the subject, that the powers conferred upon it by the Act shall be exercised by some authority specified by it in the said direction.

Notification No. 18, Dated 22-4-1949 published in the Madhya Bharat Government Gazette dated 30-4-1949 whereby the Government had directed that all the powers and duties conferred or imposed on it under the Maintenance of Public Order Act except the power of imposing collective fines under Section 6 and the powers under Section 10 of the Act shall be exercised by the Subas in their respective Districts, held was sufficient in law to clothe the District Magistrate, Gird Gwalior with powers under S. 7 (1) and therefore, the contravention of an order promulgated by the District Magistrate, Gird Gwalior, under these powers, prohibiting processions, meeting etc., would be an offence, under the Act. SECTION 3

——S. 3 (1) — Detention under — Order of detention must be expressed to be in name of Rajpramukh — Order signed by Chief Secretary to Government — Detention held illegal — Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 491.

If an order purporting to be made under subsection (1) of Section 3, Maintenance of Public Order Ordinance, is not made out in the name of the Rajpramukh it cannot be deemed to be made by the Government of the State. The reason is that under the constitution of the United State persons can only be authorised by the Rajpramukh by rules made to take executive action in his name. When the act is done in the name of the Rajpramukh it becomes an act of the Government but not otherwise. An order made in the name of the Rajpramukh is an order made by the Rajpramukh. The Rajpramukh is, so far as the exercise of executive authority is concerned, the Government of the United State of Madhya Bharat.

Where on an application under Section 491, Criminal P.C. by certain persons who were arrested and detained on 24th December 1948 under Section 3 (1) of the Ordinance the Government produced only an order Dated 8th January 1949 signed by the Chief Secretary to the Government certifying that an order of detention in respect of these persons had been made by the Government :

Held, that the order dated 8th January 1949, not being in the name of the Rajpramukh, was not a valid order and in the absence of any valid order the detention must be held to be illegal. 51 Cri LJ 902: AIR 1950 Madh Bha 34 (36, 37) (Prs 5, 7) (DB).

——S. 14 — Special Courts — Jurisdiction to try offence under Section 398, Penal Code.

Where the notification, empowering the Special Courts to try notified offences, mentions Section 395, but not Section 398, Penal Code, there is no illegality in the special Court trying an offence under Section 398, as Section 398 does not create a new substantive offence but only provides a principle for the sentence for the offence created by any of the Sections 392 to 395, Penal Code: AIR 1928 Bom 52 (1), Rel. on. 1959 Cr LJ 47: 1958 MPC 537: 1959 Jab LJ 166: 1959 MPLJ 949: AIR 1959 Madh Pra 6 (6) (Pt A) (Prs 1a, 2).

——S. 14 — Notification specifying offences triable by special Court — Section 149, Penal Code, not included — Power — (Penal Code (1860), Section 149).

A plain reading of Section 14 of the M. B. SECTION 15

——S. 15 (4) — Special Judge — Power to discharge.

The provisions of Section 15 (4) of the Act show that the legislature intends the trial before a special Judge to commence as provided under Section 271, Criminal P. C. The special Judge must frame a charge which he has to read out and explain to the accused, if he thinks that the case is fit to be tried. As a necessary consequence a special Judge has also the power to refuse to frame a charge if he considers that no case has been made out against the accused. 1960 Jab LJ 761: 1960 MPLJ 1102: 1960 MPC 596: 1961 (2) Cr LJ 122 (124) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

C., has jurisdiction to set aside an order of discharge passed by a special Judge appointed under S. 13, Madhya Bharat Public Security Act, by virtue of the provisions of Sections 19 (2) and 21 of that Act. The language of Section 21 of the Act is wide enough to include the powers under Section 439 of the Code to set aside an order of discharge passed by a special Judge which is a criminal Court inferior to the High Court. 1960 Jab LJ 761: 1960 MPLJ 1102: 1960 MPC 596: 1961 (2) Cri LJ 122 (123) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 3).

—MADHYA PRADESH PUBLIC SECURITY ACT (25 of 1959)

——S. 3 (1) (a) — Validity — Order restricting person not to remain in any area or place in the State — Not unreasonable on ground that it is not in the interest of general public and for maintenance of public order — Expression "in the interests of general public" — Meaning and scope of — Constitution of India, Article 19 (1) (d) and (5).

An order under Section 3 (1) (a) directing a person not to remain in any area or place in the State cannot be said to be unreasonable on the ground that such a restriction has no connection whatever with the maintenance of public order or the security of the State. If because of his associations, contacts, influence and the facilities available in an area a person is in a position to act in a manner prejudicial to the security of the State or to the maintenance of public order, and if he is so acting or is likely to act in such manner, then clearly in order to prevent him from so acting it becomes necessary to prohibit him from remaining in that area. Such a prohibition, if imposed is clearly in the interests of the general public and for the maintenance of public order. "In the interests of the general public" is a very wide expression and embraces public security, public order, and public morality. It is not something different from security of the State, public order or public morality. It cannot, therefore, be said that the restriction which the order made under Clause (a) of Section 3 (1) has only far-fetched, hypothetical or problematical and not proximate connection with the security of the State or the maintenance of public order. AIR 1952 SC 221 and AIR 1960 SC 633, Rel. on. 1964 MPLJ 209: 1964 Jab LJ 303: 1964 (2) Cri LJ 160: ILR (1965) Madh Pra 778: AIR 1964 Madh Pra 175 (178) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) (a) — Restriction under, is reasonable both from substantive and procedural aspects.

The question whether the restriction imposed by certain provision of law is a reasonable restriction, must be determined on the nature of the right claimed, the object to be achieved, the means employed and the limitations imposed, and for this purpose both the substantive and procedural aspects or the impugned restrictive provision must be examined. Judged by both the substantive and the procedural aspects, Section 3 (1) (a) of the M. P. Public Security Act (25 of 1959) falls within the limits of authorised restrictions on the right conferred by Art. 19 (1) (d). ——S. 3 (1) (a) — Validity — Imposing of restriction without notice or hearing — Unreasonability of procedure does not affect validity of Section 3 (1) — Doctrine of natural justice — Applicability — Order not quasi-judicial — Action under, is preventive in nature — Therefore, exception to rule of natural justice.

Validity of Section 3 (1) is not affected by the unreasonableness of procedure based on the ground that the restriction under that provision can be imposed without notice or without hearing the person affected by the order. Giving of a notice or a hearing to a person against whom a restriction order was intended to be made before the making of that order cannot be sine qua non of the constitutionality of such a legislation. It is true that according to rules of natural justice a person whose right is sought to be affected by an action or order should be heard before any action is taken or order passed against him. But the doctrine of natural justice is attracted only where the function is quasi judicial. When the State Government or a District Magistrate makes an order under Section 3 (1) of the Act, it or he does not exercise any quasi judicial function. That apart, there is an exception to the rule of natural justice and that is that the hearing requirement may be excluded in emergency or under extraordinary exceptional circumstances. Action under Section 3 (1) is of a preventive nature, and the object of making an order under that provision would be altogether defeated if the order is not made promptly but deferred until after the person intended to be affected by the order is heard. ——S. 3 (1) (a) — Order under, based on satisfaction of the State Government or the District Magistrate with regard to prejudicial activities of a person — High Court will not enter into the truth or adequacy of grounds communicated to person if they have a rational probative value and are not extraneous to the scope of Section 3 (1) — The past activities of the person are relevant in giving rise to the subjective mental satisfaction of the State that the person was likely to indulge in objectionable activities. ——S. 3 (1) (b) — Validity — Asking a person to remain at particular place — Restriction is unreasonable — Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (d) and (5).

The power of the State Government or the District Magistrate as provided by Clause (b) of Section 3 (1) of the M. P. Public Security Act, cannot be held to be in the nature of reasonable restriction of fundamental right under Article 19 (1) (d). The restriction under it has no reasonable relation to the subject in view but is so drastic in scope that it goes much in excess of the object stated in Section 3 (1). It is a very serious matter to ask a person to leave his home and hearth and go and reside in some other place in the State where he is an utter stranger, where the climate may be uncongenial to him and where he has to experience difficulties in the matter of accommodation and maintaining himself. It is difficult to see how the object stated in Section 3 (1) is advanced by immobilising a person in a certain place. If the activities of a person in a certain area fall within the mischief of Section 3 (1) and it is desirable that he should be asked to remove himself as far away as possible from that area, then the obvious course to adopt is to extend the area within which he cannot remain by making an appropriate order under Clause (a). By asking a person to remain in a particular place, his freedom of movement in other parts of the State and the whole country is unreasonably restricted (Clause (b) of Section 3 (1) held invalid). 1964 MPLJ 209: 1964

——S. 12 (1) — An order under Section 12 (1) — Satisfaction of State Government — Justiciability — Basis of satisfaction — Action under S. 12 (1) when can be taken.

An order under Section 12 (1) can be made by the State Government only after satisfying itself as to the matter mentioned in Sub-section (1). But this satisfaction is open to review by the High Court when the person aggrieved by an order made under Sub-section (1) moves the High Court for setting aside the order. When therefore, a person applies to this Court under Sub-section (5), what this Court has to see is whether on the material that was before the State Government at the time of the making of the impugned order, the satisfaction of the Government with regard to the objectionable character of the publication was real or illusory and whether that material affords any justification for confirming, varying or reversing the order of the State Govenment.

The requiste satisfaction under Section 12 (1) must, therefore, be as to whether the reasonable and natural effect of the sale, distribution or circulation of the publication in question would be to undermine the security of the State or to prejudice the maintenance of public order or to offend against decency or morality. The publication said to be of the mischievous character mentioned in Section 12 (1) must be read as a whole, in a fair, free and liberal spirit. For purposes of Section 12 (1) a distinction must necessarily be drawn between a historical or literary work, on the one hand, and writing such as newspapers articles, pamphlets and other publications meant for the common and ordinary man on the other.

The truth or falsity of the objectionable matter in the publication is immaterial for determination of the question under Section 12 (1). If the impugned matter is of the character falling under Section 12 (1), then its quality in that respect is not made better by examining other books and publications or by the fact that no action has been taken by the Government in regard to these other publications. The question whether any newspaper, book or publication is of the nature described in Section 12 (1) must be decided on the nature, object and purpose of the publication, the time of the publication, the class of people for whom it is meant and the effect it would produce on the minds of the people into whose hands the publication is likely to fall.

The power conferred by that provision must be exercised with great caution and regulated by a full observance of the limitations imposed by the provision.

Applying these principles, it was held that the lesson in question was not of the nature described in Section 12 (1). 1963 (2) Cri LJ 521: 1963 MPLJ 489: 1963 Jab LJ 499: ILR (1964) Madh Pra 694: AIR 1963 Madh Pra 301 (303, 304, 306) (Pt A) (Prs 7 to 10, 17) (DB).

——S. 20 (1) and (2) — 'Regulate the entry of persons' — Meaning of — Government order prohibiting persons working in protected area from holding meetings, processions or demonstrations in the area — Order is intra vires.

The power under Section 20 (1) of the Act can be exercised by the Government whenever the Government considers it necessary or expedient in the interest of general public to regulate the entry of persons into any area. The words 'regulate the entry of persons' also imply restrictions being placed upon the persons who are allowed to enter into the said area. Therefore, an order made by the Government, whereby the persons working in the said area are made subject to the condition that they shall not hold meetings, processions or demonstrations in the said area, is intra vires of power of the Government as laid down in sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 20 of the Act. SECTION 12

——Ss. 12, 15 — Act does not contravene Article 21, Constitution of India — Constitution of India, Article 21.

The Act does not contravene Article 21 of the Constitution of India.

Law in Article 21 means State-made or enacted law and not the general principles of natural justice. Procedure established by law thus means procedure prescribed by the legislature.

The accused has no absolute right to be tried under the Code. No person has a vested right in any course of procedure. Section 1 (2) of the Code recognises the special jurisdiction or power conferred or any special form of procedure prescribed by any other law. The Legislature is left free to lay down any procedure within the ambit of the legislative powers conferred by Entry 2 of List III (Criminal Procedure) subject of course to the limitation that there is no invasion of fundamental rights.

Article 21 is not intended to be a constitutional limitation upon the powers of the Legislature otherwise conferred by the Constitution.

The Act is not open to challenge on the ground that the Legislature was not competent to undertake legislation in respect of special criminal Courts. 1952 Cri LJ 646: 1952 Nag LJ 300: AIR 1952 Nag 118 (122) (Pt A) (Prs 19, 21, 22) (DB).

SECTION 14

——S. 14 — Validity — Discrimination in criminal trials — Provision contravenes Article 14, Constitution of India, in so far as it empowers State to direct trial of any case by Special Judge and is ultra vires — Constitution of India, Articles 14 and 13.

The power given to the State Government under Section 14 to direct that any particular case be tried under the Act in a different way from that in which it would ordinarily have been tried involves discrimination and infringement of Article 14 of the Constitution. It enables the State Government to discriminate between man and man in the same locality—it may be even in respect of the same or a similar crime and to send one of them for trial by a Special Court, with all the risks and disadvantages which the special procedure involves, while leaving the other to be tried in the normal course by the regular Courts. It is an uncontrolled and unguided power left in the hands of the Government.

There is no discrimination if certain offences or classes of offences are directed to be tried by a Special Judge. Persons accused of such offences would be treated alike. They will be all subject to the procedure governing the trial of cases under the Act by a Special Judge. The power to direct certain classes of cases to be tried by a Special Judge may not also be regarded as discriminatory if there are good reasons for classification of such cases and treating the cases and the persons charged in such cases differently from other cases and the persons charged therein. Civil Revision Nos. 942 and 1113 of 1951 (Cal); AIR 1952 Cal 150 (FB), Rel. on; 72 IA 57, Disting; Case law discussed.

(Editorial Note: In State of West Bengal v. Anwar Ali Sarkar, AIR 1952 SC 75, which was an appeal from AIR 1952 Cal 150 (FB), the Supreme Court has held that the whole of Section 5 (1), West Bengal Special Courts Act (10 of 1950) (corresponding to Section 14 of the Madhya Pradesh Security Measures Act (23 of 1950), is ultra vires as it contravences Article 14, Constitution of India. —MADRAS MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC ORDER ACT (1 of 1947)

——S. 1 — Date of commencement — 12th March 1947 should be taken as date of commencement of the Act — Madras General Clauses Act (1 of 1891), Section 5.

Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act has not fixed any date or time for its commencement. Under sub-clause (3) of Section 1 it comes into force at once. The assent of the Governor-General was received on 11th March 1947, but the assent was published in the Fort. St. George Gazette only on 12th March 1947. In view of Section 5, Madras General Clauses Act (1 of 1891), 12th March 1947 should be taken as the date of the commencement of the Act: (1879) 4 QBD 230 and AIR 1948 Mad 288, Ref. (1949) 2 Mad LJ 663: 1949 Mad WN 733: 51 Cri LJ 615: AIR 1950 Mad 243 (246) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 1 (4) — Power conferred upon Provincial Government to extend duration of Act by Section 1 (4) is delegation of legislative power and is not valid.

The power of extending the life of an Act is really a power to bring the Act itself into existence for a further period and if not so brought would cease to be law. A bare power to extend an Act is not in the nature of conditional legislation. Such a power cannot be delegated. The power of extending the life of an Act is clearly legislative power. The power conferred upon the Provincial Government to extend the duration of the Act by Section 1 (4), Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1947, falls under the category of delegation of legislative power and is not valid. The Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1947, ceased to have operation and died a natural death on 11th March 1948: AIR 1949 FC 175, Foll. Case law discussed. (1949) 2 Mad LJ 663: 1949 Mad WN 733: 51 Cri LJ 615: AIR 1950 Mad 243 (251, 254) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 17) (DB).

——S. 2 (7) — Breach of rules — Offence — (Penal Code (1860), Sections 40, 42).

The Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act is a local law within the meaning of Section 42, Penal Code, applicable to the State of Madras. A local law does not necessarily include all the rules made under the provisions of a local law. Where a local law declares a breach of the rules made under its authority to be punishable, then a breach of such rules constitutes an offence within the meaning of Section 40, Penal Code. Therefore, when the act in respect of which apprehension or detention is made is in respect of an offence falling within a local law, it will be a detention in respect of an offence falling within the meaning of Section 40, Penal Code, and a rescue by others and the escape by the detainee attracts the application of Section 225-B, Penal Code, provided the detention is lawful. 1953 Mad WN 362: (1953) 1 MLJ 653: 55 Cr LJ 396: AIR 1954 Mad 321 (322, 323) (Pt A) (Pr 11).

——S. 2 (6) — No action taken under Section 2 (6) — Invocation of Police Act (1861), Section 23 — Permissibility.

Where beyond passing the detention order there is no evidence that action had been taken under Clause (6) of Section 2 the defect cannot be got over by invoking Section 23 of the Police Act, 1861. (1953) 1 MLJ 653: 1953 Mad WN 362: 1954 Cri LJ 396: AIR 1954 Mad 321 (323) (Pt B) (Pr 13).

——S. 2 (1) and (2) — Order of detention by District Magistrate — Wrong section inserted therein — It cannot be said that District Magistrate did not bestow attention on action he took. 1949 Mad WN 518: 62 Mad LW 573: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 337: 1952 Cri LJ 1206: AIR 1952 Mad 606 (607) (Pt C) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 2 (1) — Satisfaction of detaining authority — Antecedents, including activity outside Province, can be considered.

Since the object of the Act is essentially preventive, if the detaining authority is satisfied from the antecedents (including activities outside the Province) of the person sought to be detained that he is likely to act in the same manner hereafter as he had been doing in the past, then it is perfectly open to the detaining authority to pass an order of detention. It is not necessary to wait until mischief is done before preventive sections are invoked. (1950) 1 Mad LJ 69: 63 Mad LW 63: 1950 Mad WN 150: 1950 Mad WN (Cri) 34: 51 Cri LJ 710: AIR 1950 Mad 405 (406) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

——Ss. 2 and 3 — Detenu arrested, for offence under Explosive Substances Act — Subsequent order of detention under Madras Act 1 of 1947 — Grounds stating merely that detenu was smuggling explosives into Communist camps in Hyderabad State — Lack of good faith on part of Government — Ground being outside purview of Act detention is illegal — Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 491, (Per Horwill and Satyanarayana Rao JJ.; Balakrishna Iyer J., dissenting).

The detenu was arrested for having committed an offence punishable under the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, by transporting certain explosive substances from Bezwada to Jeggayyapet, but instead of being brought to trial for this offence an order of detention under Madras Act 1 of 1947 was served on him a month after. The grounds of detention supplied to the detenu merely stated that the detenu was clandestinely transporting certain explosive substances to Communist camps in Hyderabad State but they did not show how the supply of the explosives to Communists in Hyderabad State would endanger the transquillity of the Madras Province. The detenu applied under Section 491, Criminal P. C.

Held, (Per Horwill and Satyanarayana Rao JJ.; Balakrishna Ayyar J. dissenting) that as the ground mentioned was entirely outside the purview of the Act the order of detention was not justified. It should have been specifically and definitely stated in the grounds the activity of the detenu which was calculated to endanger the public peace of Madras Presidency so as to justify an order of detention under the Act. It was not permissible for the Court to enlarge the scope of the grounds by inference or implication or to interpret the grounds in the light of knowledge acquired by it through other channels: AIR 1950 Mad 162, Rel. on.

Held, further that the conduct of the Government in not prosecuting the detenu for an offence under the Explosive Substances Act which was punishable with a longer term of imprisonment afforded a basis for inferring lack of good faith on its part. The Act is not intended to enable the Government to deprive the liberty of a subject by first putting forward a case which they know fully well could not be substantiated in a Court of law and then take advantage of the provisions of the Act and detain the person in Jail. (1949) 2 Mad LJ 711: (1949) Mad WN 831: 51 Cri LJ 670: AIR 1950 Mad 266 (267, 269) (Prs 2, 3, 11, 12) (DB).

——S. 2 (1) — It is satisfaction of detaining authority that gives jurisdiction to it to act — Court not to examine conscience of detaining authority whether reasons for detention were sufficient — Detaining authority not exercising its mind at all or acting upon irrelevant considerations — High Court can interfere under Section 491, Criminal P. C. — Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 491.

Before at all exercising the power of detention and passing an initial order, therefor, the Provincial Government or its duly empowered delegate, must be satisfied that a person is acting or about to act or likely to act in a manner prejudicial to public safety or the maintenance of public order. This is a fundamental requisite essential to give jurisdiction to the detaining authority to act. It is the satisfaction of the detaining authority that matters. It is a personal or "subjective" and not an impersonal or "objective" standard of satisfaction. The Court cannot examine the conscience of the detaining authority to find out whether its reasons for satisfaction were sufficient. No outside decision is involved in this matter of satisfaction which rests solely with the detaining authority. The detaining authority can act on hearsay evidence and is not bound to derive its satisfaction from legal evidence. The information on which it acts is likely to be of a confidential character which need not be communicated to the detenu or disclosed in Court. If the detaining authority has acted in good faith and has come to a decision on relevant materials placed before it that detention is necessary, the Court cannot enquire into the sufficiency of the materials or reasonableness of its satisfaction in regard to the matters of which it is required to be satisfied.

It is open, however, to the detenu if he can, to establish that the detaining authority has not exercised its mind on the materials placed before it and has not satisfied itself about the necessity for the detention and therefore, the order for detention, though purporting to be passed under Section 2 (1) (a), must be deemed not to be an order under the section. If there is sufficient material before the Court for holding that the recital in the order is inaccurate and that the order is merely a routine order mechanically passed or the mere outcome of police recommendation and not of a decision on the part of the detaining authority under Section 2 (1) then the High Court would interfere under Section 491, Criminal P. C. Section 3 (1) requires the Provincial Government to communicate to the detenu the grounds on which an order for his detention has been made against him together with such particulars as it considers necessary to enable him to make a representation against the order for detention. If the grounds and particulars furnished disclose that the detaining authority had not exercised its mind at all or had applied its mind to and acted upon considerations wholly irrelevant to and outside the ambit and scope of Section 2 of Act 1 of 1947, then it is open to the High Court to hold that the detaining authority had not the requisite satisfaction regarding the necessity for detention and that the detention is bad for that reason. It is not permissible for the High Court to go into the correctness of the facts alleged by the detaining authority but it is equally clear that accepting the facts at their face value, the Court can say that the satisfaction of the detaining authority is not a real satisfaction or a satisfaction in accordance with law: Case law referred. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (173, 174) (Pt B) (Prs 28, 29, 30) (DB).

——S. 2 (1) — Acts done in approximate past to be relied upon to obtain satisfaction.

Acts done in the approximate and immediate past and not in the remote past, should alone be relied upon to obtain the satisfaction that is required under Section 2 (1). 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (174) (Pt C) (Pr 30) (DB).

——S. 2 — Some of grounds disclosed being within ambit of the Act and some outside — Order of detention bad — If however some grounds are good and some are vague and indefinite, order of detention can be justified on grounds that are definite.

If the grounds disclosed contain grounds, some within the ambit of the Act and some outside it, the order of detention would be vitiated wholly as in that event it would be impossible to say which of the grounds and to what extent the detaining authority was influenced by acts outside the Act in making the order of detention. If, however, some of the grounds are good and some are vague and indefinite and uncertain, the grounds which are uncertain and vague may be ignored and may be treated as non-existing, and the order of detention can be justified on the grounds which are definite and certain. AIR 1943 FC 1 and AIR 1948 Bom 334 (FB), Rel. on. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (165, 174) (Pt D) (Prs 6, 32) (DB).

——S. 2 — Detenu not to litigate facts — High Court can however scrutinise grounds disclosed to find out conditions of mind of detaining authority.

The detenu cannot litigate facts and must accept the facts disclosed by the executive authority. But if the reasons which influenced detaining authority in making the order of detention are disclosed and put on the record by the Government, High Court can scrutinise them to find out the condition of the mind of the detaining authority when it made the order. In view however, of the presumption of regularity and validity attaching to an official order, regular on the face of it, in view of the rule that it is only the satisfaction or state of mind of the detaining authority without reference to any external standard that matters and in view of the power vested in the Provincial Government under Section 3 (1) of refusing to disclose facts which it considers would be against the public interest to disclose, it will be difficult for the person challenging an order of detention on the ground above stated to substantiate his plea. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (175) (Pt E) (Pr 33) (DB).

——S. 2 — Order of detention not disclosing satisfaction of detaining authority is bad on face of it.

An order of detention may be bad on the face of it if it does not dislose the satisfaction of the detaining authority that the person ordered to be detained has acted or is about to act or is likely to act in a manner prejudicial to public safety or the maintenance of public order: AIR 1949 Mad 596, Rel. on. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (175) (Pt F) (Pr 34) (DB).

——S. 2 — Person already arrested under Section 151, Criminal P. C. — Order of detention not mala fide for that reason.

Merely because the order for detention is made where the person concerned has already been arrested under S. 151, Criminal P. C. the order cannot be said to be mala fide. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (176) (Pt H) (Pr 37) (DB).

——S. 2 — Association with party declared illegal — No inference that person was acting in prejudicial manner.

Even if a party is declared illegal, the mere association with that party would not justify the inference that the person was acting in a manner prejudicial to public safety. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (171) (Pt L) (Pr 17) (DB).

——S. 2 — Person taking part in elections or criticising proposal of Government to award compensation to Zamindars — Activity of person not to be considered as endangering public safety.

A political party is entitled to take part in the municipal or other elections and for that reason alone it cannot be said that the activity of a person concerned is such as to endanger public safety, nor his criticism of the proposals of the Government to award compensation to the Zamindars and inamdars under legislation pending sanction before the Governor-General for the abolition of the Zamindaries. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (171) (Pt M) (Pr 17) (DB).

——Ss. 2 (1), 15 — Authority of detaining authority need not be disclosed in order of detention.

It is not necessary to disclose the authority of the District Magistrate passing an order under Secion 2 (1) in the order of detention. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (172) (Pt N) (Pr 21) (DB).

——Ss. 2 (1) and 15 — Delegation of power — Meaning of — Delegation does not mean parting with all power by delegating authority — Notification No. G. O. No. Ms. 907, dated 21st March, 1947 — Effect of — Provincial Government can still exercise power under Section 2 (1) (a).

Delegation, as the word is generally used, does not imply a parting with powers by the person who grants the delegation, but points rather to the conferring of an authority to do things which otherwise that person would have to do himself. The notion, therefore, that the use of the word 'delegate' implies that the delegating authority parted with their own authority is misconceived.

Even if the language of the Notification No. G. O. No. Ms. 907, dated 21st March 1947, were otherwise, it is clear that merely because the Commissioner of Police is authorised by the Provincial Government by virtue of Section 15, Madras Act 1 of 1947, to exercise the power under Section 2 (1) of the Act, the Provincial Government is not deprived of their power under Section 2 (1): (1890) 25 QBD 391, Rel. on. (1948) 1 KB 349 and AIR 1945 PC 156, Disting.

The Government order in G. O. No. Ms. 907, dated 21st March 1947, however, makes it clear that the District Magistrates and the Commissioner of Police, Madras, were also empowered to exercise powers under Section 2 (1) in addition to the Provincial Government. It is not an absolute transfer by the Provincial Government of the power to pass an order of detention under Section 2 (1) of the Act, but a partial delegation or transfer of its power which is not prohibited by Section 15 of the Act. In view of the language of the Section, it would be perfectly open to the Provincial Government to say that they would not part with the power under Section 2 (1) entirely and would reserve to themselves a part of it. Of course in the case of the same person the Provincial Government and the Commissioner of Police at Madras cannot exercise the power of detention under Section 2 (1) of the Act. But there is nothing in the provisions of the Act to limit or restrict the authority of the Provincial Governmen to delegate its powers in the manner in which it was effected in the G. O. above referred to. (1949) 2 Mad LJ 61: 62 Mad LW 473: 1949 Mad WN 509: 51 Cri LJ 424: ILR (1950) Mad 167: AIR 1950 Mad 100 (101, 102) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5) (DB).

——S. 2 (1) — Satisfaction under — Detention of person in province — His activities outside province can be considered in arriving at satisfaction.

The Act applies to the whole of the Province, and the danger contemplated by the Act is the danger to the public safety and maintenance of public order of the province. The antecedent history of the person—whether he lived in Malava or elsewhere it does not matter — so long as it was proximate enough in date, if it is such as to produce the satisfaction in the mind of the detaining authority that the person concerned was likely to act in a manner prejudicial to public safety and the maintenance of public order, will be perfectly relevant material under the section. There is no objection for taking into consideration under Section 2 (1) of the Act the activities of the person outside the province to justify action under Section 2 (1) of the Act when at the time of action the person is in the province. (1949) 2 Mad LJ 61: 62 Mad LW 473: 1949 Mad WN 509: 51 Cri LJ 424: ILR (1950) Mad 167: AIR 1950 Mad 100 (102) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

SECTION 2-A

——S. 2-A (as amended by Act 17 of 1948) — For conviction under Section 2-A prosecution must prove that accused had knowledge or had reason to believe that an order of detention had been passed in respect of person harboured by him — Original order of detention not produced by prosecution — Proof of order by newspaper evidence is not sufficient when case does not fall under Section 65, Evidence Act — Conviction cannot be sustained — AIR 1944 PC 54, Foll. — Evidence Act (1872), Sections 64, 65. 1951 MWN Cri 71: 1951 Mad WN 243: (1951) 2 Mad LJ 52: AIR 1953 Mad 780 (781) (Pr 2).

——S. 2-A (1) (as amended by Madras Act 17 of 1948) — Person wanted for detention under S. 2 (1) (a) found concealed in accused's house — Accused knowingly not disclosing this fact in spite of previous intimation — Offence under Section 2-A (1) is committed. 1951 Mad WN 203 (2): 1951 Mad WN (Cr) 55 (2): (1951) 2 Mad LJ 29.

——S. 2-A (1) (as amended by Madras Act 17 of 1948) — Person against whom order of detention passed seen running away from accused's tea shop — No evidence that accused supplied either food or drink to him — No offence under Section 2-A (1). 1951 Mad WN 203 (2): 1951 Mad WN (Cri) 55 (2): (1951) 2 Mad LJ 29.

SECTION 3

——S. 3 — Detenu arrested for offence under Explosive Substances Act — Subsequent order of detention under Madras Act. 1 of 1947 — Grounds stating merely that detenu was smuggling explosives into Communists Camp in Hyderabad State — Lack of good faith on part of Government —Ground being outside purview of Act, detention is illegal. See Public Safety — Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act (1 of 1947), Section 2. 51 Cri LJ 670: AIR 1950 Mad 266 (DB).

——S. 3 — Unreasonable delay in complying with provisions of Section 3 (1), (2) or (5) — Continuance of detention becomes illegal.

Where the delay in communicating the grounds under Section 3 (1) or in submitting the case to the Advisory Council under Section 3 (2) or in passing final orders under Section 3 (5) is unreasonable and unexplained to the satisfaction of the Court, it must be held that the continuance of the detention becomes illegal on that ground: Case law discussed. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (181) (Pt I) (Pr 48) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) — Grounds supplied to detenu being vague and uncertain — His further detention becomes illegal or improper.

The provision of Section 3 (1) is mandatory and imposes on the Provincial Government a duty of communicating to the detenu the grounds on which the order was made. So far as the grounds are concerned, there is no power under the Act to withhold any of the grounds. So far as the facts are concerned, the Provincial Government are not bound to disclose all the facts if they consider that such a disclosure would be against public interest. The Act makes a distinction between facts, grounds and particulars. While all the grounds have to be communicated and such facts as would not endanger public interest alone could be disclosed, so far as the particulars are concerned, the Government are to communicate to the detenu so much of the particulars as would be sufficient in their opinion to enable the detenu to make a representation against the order. The Provincial Government, therefore, has to decide whether the particulars given and disclosed would be sufficient to enable the detenu to make a representation against the order. If the grounds are vague and uncertain, it would be open to the Government to supplement them by giving particulars to enable the person concerned to make a proper representation. If the grounds communicated are vague and uncertain, and no particulars are given the non-observance of the rule makes the further detention of detenu illegal or improper: Case law referred. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (168, 182) (Pt J) (Prs 11, 50) (DB).

——S. 3 — Detenu making representation on basis of vague and uncertain grounds — Detenu not precluded from agitating question before High Court.

In cases where on the basis of vague, indefinite and uncertain grounds a representation is made by the detenu to the best of his ability and after the matter is considered by the Advisory Council, the Provincial Government passes a final order of detention, there is no further means of remedying the defect. In such a case it cannot be said that when a Provincial Government failed to discharge its duty the fact that the detenu did not complain at the time of making the representation of want of particulars, he is precluded from agitating the question before the High Court. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (170) (Pt K) (Pr 15) (DB).

In spite of the enactment of Section 16, it is now well settled that an order of detention made under the Act is open to challenge in an application under Section 491 on the ground that it was not made in conformity with the powers conferred by that Act: Case law referred. 1949 Mad WN 549: (1949) 2 Mad LJ 310: 51 Cri LJ 525: AIR 1950 Mad 162 (173) (Pt A) (Pr 26) (DB).

—MADRAS MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC ORDER ACT (23 of 1949)

PREAMBLE

——Pre. — Scope and effect of Act—If special law — Special and local laws — Distinction — Escape from police custody — When an offence — Arrest without authority or under improper or invalid authority — Resistance to — If offence.

The word 'offence' means a thing punishable under the Penal Code or any special or local law. The special laws contemplated are laws such as those that create fresh offences, i. e., laws making punishable certain things which are not already punishable under the Penal Code. But other Acts are those that create no fresh offences but merely provide a supplementary or alternative punishment of offences already primarily punishable under the Penal Code or which can be dealt with under preventive or reformative provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Madras Act 1 of 1947 (now Act 23 of 1949), is not a special law. It can be considered a local law applicable to the State of Madras. A local law does not necessarily include all the rules made under the provisions of a local law. Where a local law declares a breach of the rules made under its authority to be punishable, then a breach of such rules might constitute an offence within the meaning of Section 40 of the Penal Code.

A person cannot be convicted of escape unless the custody in which he was detained was lawful. A person about to be arrested is entitled to know under what power the constable is arresting him and if he specifies certain power which the person knows the constable has not got, he is entitled to object to such arrest and escape from custody, such custody not being lawful one.

A detention and a rescue by others and the escape by the detenu will attract the application of Section 225-B, Penal Code, provided the detention was lawful. 1953 Mad WN 362: 55 Cr LJ 396: (1953) 1 MLJ 653: AIR 1954 Mad 321 (322, 323) (Pts A, B) (Prs 11, 13).

——S. 2 — Provisions relating to preventive detention are ultra vires as being inconsistent with Constitution of India, Arts. 21, 22 — Detention whether is validated by Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950.

The provisions of the Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act, 23 of 1949, relating to preventive detention, viz., Sections 2 (1) (a), 3, 4, 4-A and 15 are totally repugnant to the provisions of Articles 21 and 22 of the Constitution of India and are, therefore, ultra vires and void. It, therefore, follows that the detention of a person made under that Act cannot be held to be legal, in any event after 26-1-1950, which is the date of the commencement of the Constitution of India.

Further, the Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950, promulgated by the President on 26-1-1950 with the object of continuing the detention of all persons detained under the Maintenance of Public Safety Orders and Acts of the several States prior to the commencement to the Constitution has failed to achieve its purpose. The order has proceeded on a clear misconception and totally erroneous view of the powers of the President under the Constitution in regard to preventive detention and the order is therefore, void. The detention, of a person which is otherwise illegal for the above reasons is not validated by the President's Order of 26-1-1950.

(Editorial Note.— The Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order 1950, had already been repealed at the date of this decision by Section 16 of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (4 of 1950). 1952 Cri LJ 170: AIR 1951 Mad 1015 (1030, 1031, 1041) (Pt A) (Prs 34, 63, 67) (DB).

——Ss. 2, 19 — Ex post facto legislation creating crime — Validity of — Constitution of India, Article 20.

Per Govinda Menon, J.— Prior to Constitution of India, an ex post facto legislation creating a crime for the first time could be validly made. Thus, by the operation of Section 19, Madras Act, 23 of 1949, all acts done in pursuance of Madras Act, 1 of 1947, on or after 12-3-1948 were rendered valid. Hence, if a person had been arrested for example, on 17-8-1948 and detained and subsequently a provision like Madras Act 23 of 1949 was passed by the Provincial Legislature which took effect retrospectively from a date anterior to 17-8-1948, such an arrest and detention would be valid.

But the Constitution of India, in its Article 20 gives protection in respect of conviction for offences. This means that ex post facto legislation regarding crimes is made illegal. That is, it is not competent either to the Parliament or the Legislature of a State to enact a law creating a crime for the first time and make the same

—MADRAS MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC ORDER ORDINANCE (4 of 1949)

——S. 1 (3) — Powers of Governor-General and Governor to promulgate Ordinances compared — Latter's powers to make law by Ordinances is co-extensive with power of Legislature to legislate — Sections 1 (3), 4-A and 19 of Ordinance are not ultra vires — Government of India Act (1935), Sections 42 and 88 — Public Safety — Madras Maintenance of Public Order Ordinance (4 of 1949), Sections 4-A and 19.

The Governor-General's power to promulgate an Ordinance is not affected in any way by the Legislature being in session, whereas the Governor's is, and the Governor-General's power is circumscribed to those of emergency whereas the Governor's power can be exercised when he is satisfied that there are circumstances which render it necessary to take immediate action. Therefore, though similar in some respects, there is no complete analogy between the Governor's powers and the Governor-General's powers. But there can be no doubt that the Governor's power of making law by Ordinances is co-extensive with the power of the Legislature to legislate subject to the restrictions contained in Section 88, Government of India Act.

The power of a Governor to make Ordinances being as wide as the powers of the Legislature, there is no reason why a Governor should not be at liberty to promulgate retrospective Ordinances having the effect even of re-opening transactions which had been adjudicated upon by Courts of law. The Provincial Legislature can pass a law creating a crime for the first time and giving it retrospective effect, and a Governor exercising the power of promulgating an Ordinance, if he conforms to the provisions of Section 88 of the Act, can also do likewise and such an Ordinance will have the same force and effect as an Act of the Provincial Legislature. Case law discussed.

In Ordinance 4 of 1949 it cannot be said that there is no express provision that the Ordinance is to apply to a time anterior in date to its promulgation, because Section 1 (3) clearly says so In spite of the fact that the preamble does not in so many terms refer to the retrospective aspect, that portion of it mentioning that it was necessary for the Governor to take immediate action for the maintenance of public safety and to prevent and to put down disorders involving menace to the peace and tranquillity of the province is sufficiently wide to include cases of detentions under a previous invalid statute or Ordinance Section 1 (3) of the Ordinance is not, therefore, ultra vires.

The High Court having held that Section 4-A of the Ordinance 1 of 1949 was invalid because it was only an amending Act and not a re-enactment, it cannot be said that the Governor by re-enacting it in Sections 4-A and 19 in Ordinance 4 of 1949 acted in any manner in derogation of the decision of the High Court, Sections 4-A and 19 of the Ordinance cannot, therefore, be held to be ultra vires the powers of the Governor. —MADRAS MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC ORDER (REMOVAL OF DOUBTS AND AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE (1 of 1949)

——Ss. 2, 3 (a), (b), 4 — To remove doubts by declaratory Act and to amend an Act, original Act must be in force — Sections 2, 3 (a) and Section 4 are of no effect — Section 3 (b) is enacting provision and is valid.

To remove doubts by a declaratory Act, there should be in existence an Act, the doubts in which have to be removed. If the Act had already ceased to be in force, a declaratory Act would have no operation. An amending Act also presumes the existence of an orinigal Act. If the original Act, which was a temporary Act, terminated after the lapse of time, the amending Act would be inoperative. The amending provisions of the Ordinance are of no effect as the main Act came to an end when the first year expired. Unless there is a re-enacting provision in the Ordinance which amounts to a new Act, the declaratory and amending provisions of the Ordinance are not valid. Hence, Sections 2, 3 (a) and 4 which purport to insert a new Section 4-A of the Ordinance are of no effect, as they do not purport to enact or revive a new law but only seek to amend or clear doubts in the old Act. Section 3 (b) however, is an enacting provision though the opening words of the section state "For the removal of doubts it is hereby declared" and it retrospectively validates action, proceedings, notifications and orders made under the Act, and it is valid and operative: AIR 1949 FC 175, Foll. (1949) 2 Mad LJ 663: 1949 Mad WN 733: 51 Cri LJ 615: AIR 1950 Mad 243 (257, 258) (Pt D) (Prs 24, 25, 27) (DB).

—MYSORE PUBLIC SECURITY ACT (12 of 1940)

——S. 3 — Standard of proof required for reasonable satisfaction — Burden of proof.

Where the technicalities prescribed under Section 3 have been scrupulously followed, a presumption is raised that the order is properly made and the burden of rebutting the presumption is shifted on to the person that alleges a misuse. The standard of evidence required for conviction is different from that required for a reasonable satisfaction of the necessity for detention in the interest of public safety or maintenance of public order. For conviction the Court has to be convinced of the guilt of the accused and the benefit of a reasonable doubt goes to the accused. But for the purpose of detention it is enough if the Government or any officer duly empowered is reasonably satisfied of the necessity of his detention, and there can be no benefit of doubt, since the public safety and maintenance of public order are the paramount concern of Government, during the times of emergency. AIR 1945 Bom 533, Foll. ('51) 29 Mys LJ 28.

——S. 3 — Arrest under Section 3 under warrant — It is desirable to serve copy of warrant on detenu.

It is true that the rules do not compel the authorities to serve a copy of the warrant on the detenue. Indeed there need be no warrant at all. Section 2 clearly lays down that the officer may "himself arrest without warrant": but where a warrant as a matter of fact has been issued, it may be desirable that such copies are served to facilitate the defence and avoid confusion that may arise from merely inferring reasons or basing arguments upon such inferences. ('51) 29 Mys LJ 28.

——S. 3 — Detention order by authorised person, fixing period — Validity.

An officer authorised under Section 3 is competent to detain for a specific period not exceeding 15 days and the initial order for the mere reason of fixing a period does not render itself ultra vires the powers under Section 3. ('51) 29 Mys LJ 28.

——S. 3 — Satisfaction required under Section 3 is personal to officer — Power of the Court to go behind satisfaction of officer.

The "satisfaction required under Section 3 is personal to the detaining officer and not an impersonal requirement and if there is sufficient indication that the officer has brought his mind to bear upon the material and comes to the conclusion, it satisfies the conditions prescribed therein. The satisfaction is that of the officer and he is not required to satisfy the person arrested. It is not open to the Court to inquire into the material or dissect the opinion of the officer to find out whether the reasons that satisfied the officer are sufficient to satisfy the Court as well. AIR 1945 Bom 533, Rel. on. ('51) 29 Mys LJ 28.

——Ss. 3, 4 — Sections are not mutually exclusive.

The executive has taken power to itself under Section 3 to detain suspected persons and under Section 4 to control the movements of suspected persons. As to what is the appropriate section it is for the executive to decide. Obviously it depends upon general atmosphere in the country at the time, the intensiveness of the activity of the person, his status in the public life of the country and other factors. Taking these circumstances into consideration, it is left to the executive to decide whether the conrol of the movement of the person is sufficient or whether detention is necessary. Unless the nature of the acts done in Section 4 is expressly excluded from the purview of Section 3 which is general in character, it cannot be said that Section 3 does not apply.

The function of the Court is merely to examine whether the particular provision under which the detention is made is applicable to the circumstances of the case. It is not the function of the Court to interfere with the discretion of the Government or dictate the choice of any particular provision of law to act upon. ('51) 29 Mys LJ 28.

——Ss. 3, 37 —Order of detention under Section 3 — Validity — Jurisdiction of High Court to entertain petition under Section 491, Criminal P. C. — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 491.

Where an order of detention is passed under Section 3 of the Act, it must be established on behalf of the Government that the detaining authority strictly complied with all the rules of procedure laid down in that section and observed all the safeguards referred to therein, and it is not enough if the provision in that section are substantially complied with Section 3. ('48) 53 Mys HCR 265, Rel. on.

According to the wording of Sec. 3, Clause (1), the District Magistrate before making the arrest, or directing the arrest, should be satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the person mentioned in the order has acted, is acting or is about to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety or peace.

Hence where the order of detention except reproducing the wording of Section 3 does not mention anything to indicate the existence of any material justifying the arrest and detention under Section 3 and there is no material before the Court to show that the detaining authoriy had applied its mind with a view to satisfy himself of the existence of circumstances justifying the order, the order cannot be held to be in strict compliance with law and must be held to have been made without jurisdiction and therefore the jurisdiction of the High Court to entertain a petition for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus is not taken away by virtue of Section 37 of the Act read with Section 491 (3), Criminal P. C. The detention of the accused in such circumstances must be held to be illegal and the detenu is entitled to be released. ('50) 28 Mys LJ 303 (DB).

——S. 3 — Detention under — There is no provision in the Act requiring the detaining authority to furnish the detenu with reasons for his detention. ('50) 28 Mys LJ 303 (DB).

——S. 3 (2) — Composite Order of arrest and detention is illegal.

Under Section 3 (2) of the Public Security Act an order of detention should be passed only after the arrest is effected and not before. A composite order for arrest and detention passed by a Distict Magistrate cannot be said to be in strict compliance with Section 3 and therefore renders the detention invalid and illegal. ('50) 28 Mys LJ 231 (DB).

——S. 3 — Order of detention under — Strict compliance with provisions of Section 3 is essential — Order not stating satisfaction of magistrate — No material on record to show such satisfaction — Detention is invalid — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 491.

In order to hold that an order alleged to have been made under Section 3 of the Public Security Act, is one made under that section, it must be established on behalf of the Government that the detaining authority strictly complied with all the rules of procedure laid down in that section and observed all the safeguards referred to therein, and it is not enough if the provisions in that section are substantially complied with.

Where the order of detention passed under Section 3 of the Act does not mention that the District Magistrate was satisfied that there were reasonable grounds for believing that the person named in the order had acted, was acting or was about to act in a manner prejudicial to public safety or peace and there is no evidence before the Court about such satisfaction on the part of the District Magistrate, the order of detention must be held to be illegal as the satisfaction of the District Magistrate required by the section is a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction under Section 3. ('50) 28 Mys LJ 231 (DB).

——S. 3 — Original Order of detention passed under Section 3 illegal — Subsequent order of Government extending the term of detention must also be held to be illegal — AIR 1946 Bom 32, Rel. on. ('50) 28 Mys LJ 231 (DB).

——S. 3 — Detention under — Validity — Jurisdiction of High Court to determine — Bar under Section 491 (3) Mysore Criminal P. C. when operates — Mysore Criminal P. C., Sec. 491.

The bar to jurisdiction contained in Section 491 (3) Mysore Criminal P. C. can be invoked only if the Government establishes that the detention of the petitioners is a valid detention under the Mysor Public Security Act, 1940, or, in other words, that it is an order made in strict conformity with the provisions of Section 3 of the Public Security Act and within the scope of the powers conferred by that section. The High Court has jurisdiction to see whether that is done. If the High Court finds that the requirements of S. 3 of the Public Security Act are not complied with, it has jurisdiction to hold that the order of detention is illegal and it cannot be regarded as an order made under Section 3 of the Public Security Act. If, on the other hand, the High Court is satisfied that the requirements of Section 3 are complied with and the order is within the scope of the powers conferred by Section 3, the bar of jurisdiction contained in Section 491 (3), Mysore Criminal P. C. comes into play, and it is not competent for it to go further and enquire into the sufficiency of the materials and the reasonableness of the grounds upon which the detaining authority was satisfied that it was necessary to make the order. AIR 1943 FC 75; AIR 1944 FC 86, Rel. on. Case law Ref ('50) 28 Mys LJ 231 (DB).

SECTION 4

——Ss. 4 and 3 — The executive has taken power to itself under Section 3 to detain suspected persons and under Section 4 to control the movements of suspected persons. Unless the nature of the acts done in Section 4 is expressly excluded from the purview of Section 3 which is general in character it cannot be said that Section 3 does not apply. ('51) 29 Mys LJ 28.

SECTION 37

——Ss. 37, 3 — Order of detention under Section 3 not in strict compliance with law — Order must be held to have been made without jurisdiction — The jurisdiction of the High Court to entertain a petition for the issue of a writ of Habeas Corpus is not taken away by virtue of Section 37 of the Act read with Section 491, Cr. ——S. 37 — Application under Section 491, Criminal P. C. — Jurisdiction of High Court how far affected stated — Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 491.

Section 491 was introduced into the Mysore Criminal Procedure Code by Amending Act VII of 1948 which is later than the Mysore Public Security Act of 1940. The omission of the words "purporting to be taken or made or deemed to have been so taken or made under the Public Security Act" in sub-section (3) of Section 491, Mysore Criminal P. C. of Criminal Procedure would indicate that, to that extent, the provisions contained in Section 37 of the Public Security Act were modified and the bar of jurisdiction was confined in the case of petitions filed in the High Court under Section 491, Code of Criminal Procedure only as regards orders made under the Public Security Act. Moreover, the words "purporting to be taken or made or deemed to have been so taken or made under this Act" used in Section 37 of the Public Security Act cannot cover cases where the orders were made by the District Magistrate without jurisdiction and are entirely ultra vires. The protection afforded under Section 37 of the Public Security Act in respect of proceedings or orders purporting to be taken or made or deemed to have been taken or made under the Act can only apply to cases where there is an irregular exercise of jurisdiction as distinct form a complete absence of jurisdiction. ('50) 28 Mys LJ 231 (DB).

PREAMBLE

• ——Pre.—Validity of Act—Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order (1950) — Interval between midnight of 25th-26th January and signing of Order by President—Whether material for validity — Constitution of India, Article 373 — General Clauses Act (1897), Sections 5 (3) and 3 (12).

The Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950, being an Order made by the President under Article 373 of the Constitution, is to be deemed an Act of Parliament and as such a Central Act. The order came into force about 10-50 A. M. on 26th January 1950. But by virtue of Section 5 (3) read with Section 3 (12), General Clauses Act, it should be deemed to have come into force for legal purposes from the midnight of 25th-26th January 1950, even though it might have been actually signed by the President only after 10-50 A. M. on 26th.

Hence, in considering the validity of the Orissa Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1948, the short interval of time between the midnight of 25th-26th January and the exact time of the signing of the Order by the President, becomes immaterial. 51 Cri LJ 1189: ILR (1950) Cut 222: AIR 1950 Orissa 157 (158) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (FB).

● ——Pre. — Act was validly extended to Orissa States which have by agreement of 15th and 30th December 1947 have transferred their administrative Control to Dominion of India — Delegation of Contral by Dominion Government to Orissa Government, by virtue of Extra-Provincial Jurisdiction Act (1947) is valid — Act of 1947 is not ultra vires — Extra Provincial Jurisdiction Act (1947) — International law — Extra-Territorial Legislation.

By Instruments of Accession executed by Orissa States on 16th August 1947, the Orissa State gave the Dominion Legislature power to make laws on defence, external affairs and ancillary matters, regarding the States. By subsequent agreements of 15th and 30th December 1947, the Rulers ceded to the Dominion Government full and exclusive authority and jurisdiction by transferring administration of the States (which included legislative powers) for the governance of the States.

[Per Ray C. J. — Validity of Instruments of Accession and subsequent agreements, being acts of two Sovereign States cannot be questioned in municipal Courts — Conception of Sovereign State, Government and legislation discussed.]

The powers thus transferred to the Dominion Government were validly delegated to the Government of Orissa by virtue of the Extra Provincial Jurisdiction Act 1947. The Act is not ultra vires. The Executive authority of a Sovereign State can exercise extra-territorial powers over a foreign territory and can promulgate laws in that behalf, subject only to limitations of International law.

Notification of Government of India delegating its authority to Orissa Government and Orissa Government's Administration of Orissa States Order, 1948 are intra vires.

Consequently, extension by the Orissa Government of the Orissa Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1948, which was originally applicable only to Province of Orissa, to all Orissa States, including Bamra and Kalahandi States, is intra vires : Case law and Texts reviewed. 51 Cri LJ 683: ILR (1949) 1 Cut 1: AIR 1950 Orissa 67 (69, 70, 72, 73, 76, 79) (Prs 17, 19, 20, 21, 23, 25, 26, 44, 59, 60) (SB).

● ——Ss. 2, 3 and 4 (as amended in 1949) — Validity — Public Safety — Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order (1950) — Constitution of India, Articles 13 and 22.

The provisions of the Orissa Act dealing with preventive detention are void under Article 13 (1) of the Constitution on account of their inconsistency with Article 22 of the Constitution.

Sections 3 and 4 of the Orissa Act are void being inconsistent with the Constitution. Section 2 by itself is unworkable because no law merely authorizing the detention of a person under some circumstances, without any provision for fixing the duration, can be said to be workable. The entire law contained in Sections 2, 3 and 4 must be held to be invalid on the application of the doctrine of severability.

Nor can the Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950 be of any avail to the State in justification of the continuance of detention after the Constitution came into force. Prahalad Jena v. State, 51 Cri LJ 1189: ILR (1950) Cut 222: AIR 1950 Orissa 157 (160, 162, 168) (Pt B) (Prs 5, 10, 31) (FB).

● ——Ss. 2, 3 — Successive orders of detention.

The Government have the power to pass any number of successive orders against the same person as the occasion may require. But if it appears that the fresh order is nothing more in substance than an extension of the previous order that would amount to an evasion of the imperative provisions of Section 3. Hence an order of detention under Section 2 passed against a person who has been already in detention by virtue of a prior order and without any fresh material disclosed for passing of the fresh order is illegal. Where a detenu is arrested under an invalid order of detention of a District Magistrate under Section 2 (2), a subsequent order of detention under Section 2 (1) (a) passed by the Provincial Government on substantially different grounds is not an extension of the previous order and cannot be pronounced invalid for that reason. ● ——Ss. 2 and 3 (as amended by Act (6 of 1949)) — Prior invalid order of detention — Detenu released — Subsequent camouflaged order on substantially same grounds — Validity — Contempt of Court.

Where a detenu was released by the High Court on the ground of invalidity of order of detention and was immediately re-arrested under a camouflaged order of detention containing substantially the same grounds of detention for the earlier illegal order without existence of any fresh material giving rise to fresh occasion for passing the order:

Held, that the second order of detention must be held to be illegal especially when it is not attempted to be justified by invoking the provisions of the Amending Act (6 of 1949).

Held, further that even if the order of the District Magistrate might have been passed with the best of motives in view of the apprehension that the detenu, after release, might go underground, it would nonetheless be contempt of Court prima facie. ● ——S. 2 — Want of bona fides on part of Government — Onus.

The commission of illegalities by subordinate officers is not by itself any reason for imputing bad faith to the Provincial Government. Before the order of the Government can be pronounced to be a fraudulent exercise of its power, the same must be proved like any other fact.

The burden of substantiating the plea of want of bona fides is on the detenu. It may be that the burden on the detenu to make out the want of bona fides on the part of the Government is not so heavy as the burden would be on the Government to prove its bona fides, in case there is sufficient material on the side of the detenu to shift the onus on to the Government. But mere suspicion and conjecture cannot take place of tangible material required for shifting the onus. Prahalad Panda v. The failure of the authority effecting or ordering arrest under Section 3, Patiala State Public Safety Ordinance as amended by subsequent ordinances, to report forthwith the arrest to the prescribed authority under sub-section (2) of the said section does not affect that arrest of the person concerned, but it makes his detention illegal and void. The failure of the authority making or directing an arrest under Section 3 of the Patiala State Public Safety Ordinance (11 of 2003) after the expiry of that Ordinance, to make any mention of the second amending Ordinance 3 of 2004, not only does not make the arrest or detention void ab initio but does not affect them in any way. The mention of the original ordinance in the order when if the second amending ordinance had not been promulgated the original ordinance would have been no longer in existence, implies that the order is being made under the original ordinance as amended up to date. The Courts must interpret the various provisions of the Constitution in such a manner as to make them consistent as far as possible; and the various provisions can be read consistently if one regards Arts. 21 and 22 as setting out, qualifying and safeguarding the right of personal liberty of every person and Art. 19 as dealing only, and independently, with certain special rights of such citizens as are already at liberty.

Such deprivation of personal liberty as is involved in a detention order under Act IV of 1950 is dealt with by Arts. 21 and 22 and not by Article 19 of the Constitution. If the Act therefore is in conformity with the provisions of Arts. 21 and 22 of the Constitution, it is good law and is not hit by Art. 13 (2) and therefore, not void.

Meredith, C. J. and Das, J., (Shearer, J. contra): The provisions of S. 14 are however, very drastic and void being in conflict with Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution and perhaps with Art. 32 as well. But S. 14 is not an integral and inseverable part of the Act and does not render the whole Act void.

The fact that the detenu is undergoing trial for a substantive offence or has been convicted for an offence does not operate as a bar to the passing of a detention order under S. 3 of the Act AIR 1946 Nag 99; 23 Pat 252; 27 Pat 773 (FB); 29 Pat 410, Ref. ——S. 1 — Construction of Act — Strict construction.

The Preventive Detention Act constitutes a serious infringement upon Civil liberty and to the extent that it constitutes that infringement it must be strictly construed, and the Court must always be vigilant to see that every safeguard provided in that Act has been complied with. 1956 Cri LJ 875: ILR (1956) Bom 792: 58 Bom LR 473: AIR 1956 Bom 490 (491) (Pt A) (Pr 1) (DB).

——S. 1—Scope and object of Act—Duty of Court — Principles to be applied in construing grounds of detention — (Constitution of India, Art. 22).

Preventive Detention Act confers very wide powers upon the executive and it undoubtedly constitutes an inroad upon the personal freedom of a citizen which is guaranteed to him under the Constitution. It is true that Parliament in its wisdom enacted this piece of legislation for the security of the State and, there is always the conflict between the security of the State on the one hand and the personal freedom of the citizen on the other. But as far as the Court is concerned, it should be unaffected by questions of policy which lead the executive to detain a particular citizen. The function and the duty of the Court is to see that every constitutional safeguard which the Act provides has been satisfactorily assured to the person detained. If the Court comes to the conclusion that any constitutional safeguard has not been carried out, then even though the detention might be bona fide, even though it may be the result of high policy, the Court must set the detenu free. In considering the grounds, the Court must examine each ground and satisfy itself as to its validity. The Court must also consider whether proper particulars are furnished in order to enable the detenu to make a proper representation to the advisory board. But if the Court is satisfied that the order has been made bona fide, the care and caution has been given to the making of the order, that proper grounds have been furnished and every attempt has been made to give such particulars as are possible, then it is open to the Court to say that it should take a reasonable view of the order made by Government. It would then not be proper to dissect the order so as to find out whether there are mistakes in punctuation, whether the language used is proper, and whether there has been lapses of grammer or of English. 58 Bom LR 602: ILR (1956) Bom 715.

——Ss. 1 (5) and 11 (A) (as amended by Preventive Detention (Second Amendment) Act (1952)) and Preventive Detention (Amendment) Act (1954) — "Things done and omitted to be done" — Detention for period beyond life of Act — Validity — (Constitution of India, Art. 22 (4)) — (Words and Phrases).

Per Mitter, J.:— The words "things done or omitted to be done" in S. 1 (3) mean acts or omissions and all that the expression saves is the liability or the immunity as the case may be in respect of such acts or omissions.

An order of detention can be successfully impugned before the life of the temporary Act is extended by subsequent legislation. Once, however, a fresh life is added to the temporary Act by a subsequent legislation, the original order of detention on the score that it was for a period beyond the life of the temporary Act under which it was made, cannot be challenged, for, then the order as well as the consequent detention must be deemed to have been under the original Act.

The entire order of detention, the duration of which is fixed for a period going beyond the expiry of the Act cannot be held to be void ab initio but only that part of the order which goes beyond the expiry of the Act, becomes illegal on the actual expiry of the Act, but as the Act did not in fact expire, no part of the detention becomes illegal. 1955 Cri LJ 1055: ILR (1957) 2 Cal 149: AIR 1955 Cal 374 (376) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

——S. 1 (3) — Detention under — Application for writ of habeas corpus — Scope of proceedings in High Court — (Practice).

In an application for writ of habeas corpus in the cases of detention under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 the High Court cannot treat the cases as though they were cases under trial before them so as to entitle them to consider the evidence and substitute their judgment for that of the State Government. It would be wrong on principle to do so as it is for the State Government to examine the materials and come to a judgment on the question. 1952 Cri LJ 1101: AIR 1952 Pat 298 (303) (Pt C) (Pr 13) (DB).

●——S. 1 — Interpretation — Act if emergency legislation — Interpretation of Statutes — Emergency legislation.

Per Meredith C. J.:— The Act nowhere specifies the existence of an emergency or that it is emergency legislation. The principles of interpretation laid down for emergency legislation have no application at all, and the Courts must follow the ordinary principle of construction that legislation dealing with the liberty of the subject must be construed, if possible, in favour of the subject and against the Crown, or in India, against the Government. While mere belief in or acceptance of any political ideology may not be a ground for detention under the Act, affiliation to a party which is alleged to be spreading its "doctrine of violence rendering life and property insecure and trying to seize power by violence" may, in certain circumstances lead to an inference that the person concerned is likely to act in a manner prejudicial to public safety, order or tranquillity. ('51) 64 MLW 116: 1951 MWN 88: 1951 MWN (Cri) 28: 1951-1 MLJ 169: 52 Cri LJ 396: AIR 1951 Mad 115 (116) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5) (DB).

●——S. 3 — Right of detenu — Limitations — Satisfaction of appropriate authority — Grounds of — Rights under Art. 22 (5) of Constitution — (Public Safety — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5) and (6)).

The right of the detenu to be furnished with facts or particulars is subject to the limitation mentioned in Cl. (6) and even if the grounds communicated are not as precise and specific as might be desired, the appropriate authority has the right to withold such facts or particulars, the disclosure of which it considers to be against the public interest. AIR 1956 SC 531; 1956 SCJ 559, Foll. Under Section 3 of the Preventive Detention Act, it is the satisfaction of the appropriate authority which is necessary for an order of detention and if the grounds, on which the appropriate authority has said that it is so satisfied, have a rational connection with the objects which are to be prevented from being attained, the question of satisfaction cannot be challenged in a Court of law except on the ground of mala fides. Clause (5) of Art. 22, confers two rights on the detenu, namely, first, a right to be informed of the grounds on which the order of detention has been made, and secondly, to be afforded the earliest opportunity to make a representation against the order. If grounds which have a rational connection with the objects mentioned in Section 3 are supplied, the first condition is complied with. But the right to make a representation implies that the detenu should have such information as will enable him to make a representation and if the grounds supplied are not sufficient to enable the detenu to make a representation, he can rely on the second right. The second right, however, is again subject to the right of privilege given by Cl. (6) and the obligation to furnish grounds and the duty to consider whether the disclosure of any facts involved therein is against public interest, are both vested in the detaining authority and not in any other. ——S. 3 — Act is not enacted to deal with habitual criminal.

The law of Preventive Detention is not meant for punishing persons who cannot be brought to book under the ordinary criminal law of the land. The authorities cannot be permitted to take recourse to the law of Preventive Detention because they have failed to secure a conviction under the ordinary criminal law. If a different view is taken, it would create a situation which would be extremely dangerous to individual liberty. If the police are displeased with a particular individual all that they have to do is to start a number of cases against him, and if they fail for want of evidence he can be locked up under the Preventive Detention Act and those very facts which formed the subject-matter of his prosecution could be called in aid for detaining him. The law of Preventive Detention was not enacted to deal with the habitual criminal. There may be circumstances such as communal disturbances and riots in which the detention of a notorious goonda may be justified. The justification, however, would not be the fact of his being a notorious goonda but the existence of circumstances making his detention imperative in the interest of public order. AIR 1960 Punj 332 and AIR 1949 Pat 299, Rel. on. 1965 All WR (HC) 266: 1966 All Cr R 196: ILR (1965) 2 All 261.

——Ss. 3, 7 and 13 — Power of State Government to revoke or modify under S. 13 order of detention — Does not include power to modify grounds under S. 7 — Constitution of India, Art. 25 (5).

The grounds mentioned in Section 3 of the Act are quite different from the grounds mentioned in Section 7 of the Act. The grounds referred to in Section 3 of the Act are the grounds of the order, which, along with other particulars, the District Magistrate is required to report to the Government. On the other hand, the grounds mentioned in Section 7 of the Act are the grounds which the authority responsible for making the order is required to communicate to the detenu.

The meaning of the words "detention order" in Section 13 of the Act cannot be stretched to cover within its ambit the grounds mentioned in Section 7 of the Act. In this view of the matter, the power given to the State to revoke or modify a detention order cannot empower the State to modify the grounds under Section 7 of the Act in a case where the order itself was passed by a different authority, namely the District Magistrate.

According to Article 22 (5) of the Constitution, the District Magistrate alone would be the authority competent to communicate the grounds. If, therefore, Section 13 is construed to entitle the Government to modify the said grounds in such a way as to supersede them with grounds of its own and to communicate the same to the detenu, S. 13 would come into conflict with the aforesaid constitutional provision, and itself become void to that extent.

Section 13 of the Act cannot be invoked by the State for the purpose of modifying the grounds already issued by the District Magistrate under Section 7 of the Act and to communicate the same to the detenu. Even assuming that Section 13 can be invoked for such purpose the modified grounds cannot be served after the expiry of prescribed period of 5 days from the detention order. ILR (1961) 1 All 427.

——S. 3 (1) and (2) — Two separate procedures provided for preventive detention — One is under Section 3 (1) by State Government — Another is under Section 3 (2) by executive officers — Concurrent exercise of powers in respect of common detention order not contemplated — Indiscriminate mixing of the two procedures held vitiated entire proceedings. ILR (1961) 1 All 427.

——S. 3 — Scope — Person detained under — If prisoner — A person detained in the custody of a Superintendent of Jail under an order of the Governor under Section 3 (1) (a) (ii) of the P. D. Act is not a prisoner within the meaning of Section 52 of the Prisons Act and therefore is not liable to be punished under that provision. 1954 All LJ 351: 1954 Cri LJ 1326: AIR 1954 All 626 (629) (Prs 12, 14) (DB).

——S. 3 — Constitution of India, Art. 21 — Procedure prescribed by law — Preventive Detention Act, if fully prescribes procedure by which liberty may be taken away — Since Article 21 permits deprivation of liberty by procedure established by law, it is obvious that the discretion of deciding what the procedure should be and to what extent it need to be prescribed has been given entirely to the legislature. Obviously it cannot be necessary that every detailed step of the procedure need be mentioned. In the case of Preventive Detention Act the legislature empowered the authorities to make an order of detention on being satisfied that one of the conditions laid down in Section 3 exists and it is not necessary that the legislature should also have gone on to say by what process that satisfaction should have been arrived at. 1950 All LJ 526 (2): AIR 1951 All 456 (457, 458) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

——S. 3 (1) (a) and (b) — Applicability and relative scope of.

Section 3 (1) (a), provides for the detention of any person if the conditions laid down therein are satisfied, whereas Cl. (b) prescribes for the detention of any person who is a foreigner within the meaning of the Foreigners Act for the purposes mentioned therein namely, with a view to regulating his continued presence in India or with a view to making arrangements for his expulsion from India. Clause (a) applies to any person and the word 'person' is comprehensive enough to take in citizens as well as foreigners. The mischief sought to be averted by Clause (a) applies equally to a citizen as well as to a non-citizen. While Clause (a) is concerned with the internal and external security of the State, Cl. (b) deals with the preliminary steps necessary to take action under the Foreigners Act, 1940. The scope of the two sub-sections is different and they were intended to meet different contingencies and, therefore, they cannot be so read as to exclude a foreigner from the operation of the word 'person' in Cl. (a). (1957) Mad LJ (Cr) 34: 1957 An LT 223: 1957 Cr LJ 703: ILR (1957) Andh Pra 167: (1957) 1 An WR 79: AIR 1957 Andh Pra 143 (145) (Pt A) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 3 — Object of Act — No offence need be proved — Satisfaction of detaining authority is subjective — Grounds of detention, if they have rational connection with object sought to be prevented, question of satisfaction is not justiciable — But order under S. 3 can be challenged on ground of want of bona fides.

The object of the Act is not to punish a person for having done something but to intercept him before he does a prejudicial act and to prevent him from doing it. In the case of such detention, no offence is proved nor any charge formulated, and the justification is suspicion or a reasonable probability and not a conviction warranted by legal evidence. AIR 1950 SC 27; 1917 AC 260, Rel. on.

Since the action under Section 3 is taken on suspicion or anticipation, its test is a subjective test based on the cumulative effect of different acts, even spread over a considerable period. For such preventive detention, it is obvious that it would be difficult, almost impossible, to lay down objective rules of conduct, the failure to conform to which should lead to preventive detention. As the very expression "preventive detention" implies, it is enacted with the object of preventing the person concerned from acting prejudicially to any one of the objects set out in the section. Therefore, under Section 3, it is the satisfaction of the appropriate authority which is necessary, and if the grounds of detention on which that authority has stated that it is so satisfied have a rational connection with the objects, which are to be prevented from being attained, the question of satisfaction is not justiciable. AIR 1958 SC 163, Rel. on.

Since the satisfaction is that of the appropriate authority and not of the Court, it must follow that the question as to sufficiency of materials, on which the satisfaction is arrived at, is also not an issue in which the Court can go into, nor also into the question whether the materials placed before the authority, upon which its suspicion is founded, are true or false. Therefore, the satisfaction of the appropriate authority as to matters specified in Section 3 is the only condition for the exercise of the power and the Court cannot substitute its own satisfaction for that of the authority.

Though the satisfaction of the appropriate authority is the only condition for the exercise of the power under Section 3 and the question of that satisfaction is not justiciable, an order of preventive detention, can be challenged on the ground that it was made in mala fide exercise of power. AIR 1953 SC 451; AIR 1958 SC 163, Rel. on.

Where the detention of the petitioner was ordered on the ground that he was acting prejudicially to the maintenance of public order in a certain village and its neighbouring villages in a certain district, the question that has to be considered is whether the grounds, which were communicated to the petitioner and which presumably were the grounds upon which the satisfaction of the District Magistrate was based, had a rational connection with the object for which the order was passed, namely, to prevent the petitioner from acting prejudicially to the maintenance of public order in these places. (1965) 6 Guj LR 632: ILR (1965) Guj 644.

The classification of foreigners into those who are British subjects of the kind set out in the definition of 'a foreigner' in Section 2 (a) of the Foreigners Act, 1946, and others, so as to make the former not foreigners for the purposes of the Foreigners Act and the Preventive Detention Act, is a reasonable and rational classification and so does not offend Article 14. There is no individual discrimination and it is easily understandable that reasons of State may make it desirable to classify foreigners into different groups. Section 3 (1) (b) of the Preventive Detention Act or S. 3 (2) (c) of the Foreigners Act is not, therefore ultra vires as offending Article 14 of the Constitution. Hans Muller of Nurenburg v. ●——Ss. 3, 14 — Validity — Constitution of India, Arts. 13 (2), 19, 21 and 22.

Per Full Bench:— The various provisions of the Constitution can be read consistently if Articles 21 and 22 are regarded as setting out, qualifying and safeguarding the right of personal liberty of every person and Article 19 as dealing only, and independently, with certain special rights of such citizens as are already at liberty.

Such deprivation of personal liberty as is involved in a detention order under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, is dealt with in Articles 21 and 22 of the Constitution, and not Article 19. The Detention Act being in conformity with the provisions of Articles 21 and 22 of the Constitution, is good law, and is not hit by Article 13 (2).

Contras — Section 14 of the Detention Act however is void, inasmuch as it is in conflict with Clause (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution. Probably, it is also in conflict with Art. 32 of the Constitution.

But Section 14 not being an integral inseverable part of the Detention Act, the Detention Act under Art. 13 (2) of the Constitution is void only to the extent of the contravention; in other words, Section 14 of the Detention Act must go, and the Court can then see the grounds not for the purpose of judging the sufficiency or otherwise of the grounds given, but for the purpose of seeing whether the person detained has had a real opportunity of making an effective representation against the order of detention. 3. Preventive detention.

●——S. 3 — Objective standard of conduct — Failure to make provision of, whether affects section.

Per Kania C. J. and Patanjali Sastri J.:— Section 3 cannot be impugned on the ground that it does not provide an objective standard which the Court can utilize for determining whether the requirements of law have been complied with. The reason is that no such objective standard of conduct can be prescribed, except as laying down conduct tending to achieve or to avoid a particular object. For preventive detention, action must be taken on good suspicion. It is a subjective test based on the cumulative effect of different actions, perhaps spread over a considerable period. For the purposes of preventive detention, it would be difficult, if not impossible to lay down objective rules of conduct failure to conform to which should lead to such detention. As the very term implies, the detention in such cases is effected with a view to prevent the person concerned from acting prejudicially to certain objects which the legislation providing for such detention has in view. ●——S. 3 — Petitioner holder of license to sell rationed cloth — Shop closed and license withdrawn — Whether can he be detained on ground that he is likely to indulge in black-marketing.

Preventive detention depends on suspicion — Suspicion inferred from circumstances, and it is for the detaining authority to be satisfied about the inference to be drawn. The mere closure of the shop of the petitioner who was a holder of a licence to sell cloth or even the temporary seizure of his goods is no ground for holding that the order of detention on the ground that the petitioner is likely to indulge in black-marketing prejudicial to the maintenance of supply of essential commodities and services, is mala fide. ——S. 3 (1) — Alleged facts or ground non-existing — Detention order falls.

Where the facts alleged by the State Government exist but two inferences are possible it is for the State Government to make up its mind as to the inference to be drawn. 4. Satisfaction of detaining authority.

●——S. 3 — Proof of 'satisfaction' of Minister — Affidavit by his Secretary — Sufficiency — Evidence Act (1872), S. 14.

As a matter of abstract law, the state of man's mind can be proved by evidence other than that of the man himself, and if the Home Secretary has the requisite means of knowledge, for example, if the Minister had told him that he was satisfied or he had indicated satisfaction by his conduct and acts, and the Home Secretary's affidavit was regarded as sufficient in the particular case, then that would constitute legally sufficient proof of the satisfaction of the Home Minister. But whether that would be enough in any given case, or whether the "best evidence rule" should be applied in strictness in that particular case, must necessarily depend upon its facts. State of Bombay v. Purshottam Jog, (1952) 2 Mad LJ 338: 1952 SCR 674: 54 Bom LR 869: 1953 SCA 893: 1952 SCJ 503: 1952 Cri LJ 1269: AIR 1952 SC 317 (319) (Pt D) (Pr 17).

——S. 3 (1) — Satisfaction — Material given in grounds not existing in fact — Effect.

When admittedly a most important material is placed before the detaining authority, but the material turns out to be a material which did not exist, it cannot be said that the detaining authority applied its mind to all the relevant and proper circumstances which he must do before he makes the order contemplated by the Act, and that there was a proper satisfaction which would justify the making of the order. 1956 Cri LJ 875: ILR (1956) Bom 792: 58 Bom LR 473: AIR 1956 Bom 490 (492) (Pt D) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) (a) — Satisfaction of detaining authority — Question of maintenance of public order — Grounds must be germane to that question — Grounds germane to other emergencies — Validity of order — (Constitution of India, Art. 22).

The power to detain is conferred upon the State in order to meet various emergencies and the detaining authority must be satisfied that there is a prejudicial activity on the part of the person sought to be detained which has a bearing on that particular emergency. If the detaining authority seeks to detain a person in the interest of the maintenance of public order, then the grounds on which the order is made and which are communicated to the detenu must be germane to the question of the maintenance of public order. Even though the grounds may be germane to the other emergencies contemplated by Section 3 (1) (a), inasmuch as the power is not exercised for the purpose of meeting that particular emergency, the order would be bad if every one of the grounds does not fall within the ambit of the exercise of the particular power under S. 3 (1).

The activity relied upon by the detaining authority must be such as being reasonably capable of being considered as a prejudical activity or it must be possible to infer from the specific activity referred to in the ground that what the detenue was doing was something which is prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. In other words, the ground relied upon must have a rational probative value and the probative value must be from the point of view of the prejudicial activity alone which can come within the ambit of the Act. 1954 SCR 418, Disting. 58 Bom LR 60: ILR (1956) Bom 715.

——S. 3 (1) (a) — Nature of satisfaction required.

The satisfaction required is that there must be at least a reasonable probability of the person against whom an order is sought to be made acting in a prejudicial manner. It is not necessary that the detaining authority must feel absolute certainty that if the person concerned was not detained he would act in a prejudicial manner. AIR 1951 Bom 161 (164) (Pt B) (Pr 11) (DB).

——S. 3 — Satisfaction of detaining authority — Person given benefit of doubt in criminal case — If can be detained.

Where the petitioner was acquitted in a criminal case not because there was no basis for the charge against him but because the Court which tried him found that the case against him was not proved beyond reasonable doubt, and, therefore, the benefit of that reasonable doubt had to be conferred upon him, these facts can nevertheless form sufficient data before the detaining authority upon which the satisfaction required under S. 3 can be founded. (1960) 1 Guj LR 140: (1960) 1 Guj HCR 114: 1960 Cri LJ 1588: AIR 1960 Guj 43 (46) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

——S. 3 — Power of detention — Condition precedent for exercise.

It is the satisfaction of the detaining authority that matters under S. 3 and it is a condition precedent to the exercise of the power of detention under the section. AIR 1951 Madh Bha 51 (53) (Pt A) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 3 — Satisfaction under — Nature of — Burden of proof — How discharged.

The word 'satisfied' does not import an arbitrary or irrational state of being satisfied. It means 'reasonable' satisfaction. But this condition about 'reasonable satisfaction' is not an objective condition precedent of fact capable of determination by a Court of law like any other positive fact. It is a subjective condition incapable of being determined by a party other than the one who has taken action in the matter.

As S. 3 of the Act gives plenary power to the detaining authority, it is for him to arrive at the reasonable satisfaction and decide whether it is necessary to detain the person. Where, therefore, an order of detention ex facie shows that the authority making the order of detention was satisfied, a presumption arises in favour of the detaining authority and the burden lies on the petitioner who challenges the bona fides of the detaining authority to show, not that there was no 'reasonable satisfaction', but to show that as a matter of fact the order of detention was passed wihout such satisfaction as is required and that the detaining authority did not hold the opinion which he professed to hold that, therefore, although the forms of law have been observed, there has been a fraud on the Act or an abuse of the powers given by the Legislature: (1941) 3 All ER 338 and 388; AIR 1945 PC 156 and AIR 1950 FC 129, Rel. on.

The heavy burden which lies on the petitioner is not discharged by a mere denial or by asserting that he is not aware of any reasons or that he does not know why he has been detained or that he has not done anything wrong: Case law referred. AIR 1951 Madh Bha 51 (53, 54) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 11) (DB).

——S. 3 — Constitution of India, Art. 132 — Substantial question of law — If the applicant was a member of a communist party which itself was indulging in unlawful subversive activities that by itself would be sufficient for the Government to come to the conclusion that his being at large would be prejudicial to the maintenance of public order in the State. There is no substantial question of law involved in such a case. See Constitution of India, Article 132. 52 Cri LJ 252: AIR 1951 Mad 61 (DB).

● ——S. 3 (1) — Satisfaction — Fresh order against person in detention — Material must be examined afresh.

Per Full Bench — The State Government can be said to be reasonably satisfied even where the materials for satisfaction are activities in which the detenu indulged a long time ago and when during the interval the detenu has been continually in detention provided that the State Government examines the material afresh before passing the new order.

Per Hemeon Ag. C. J.:— That the detaining authority must apply its mind afresh to the materials in its possession before the new order is passed is implicit in the terms of S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950. There must, therefore be a de novo scrutiny of the case of each detenu before the satisfaction which the law requires is reached; and it follows that it is not open to the detaining authority to pass an order of detention under the Act of 1950 on the mere ground that it had passed an order under an earlier enactment. 1951 All WR (Supp) 21: 1951 Nag LJ 71: ILR (1951) Nag 1: AIR 1951 Nag 1 (4, 5) (Pt A) (Prs 20, 30) (FB).

The presumption that all official acts are to be taken to have been regularly performed is one that 'may' be drawn by a Court. In a matter regarding the liberty of a subject the High Court will not be prepared to uphold the validity of an order by reliance on any such presumption.

Thus R. 2 of the Subsidiary Rules of Business cannot validate an order of detention passed by Home Secretary, as the authority of the Minister in charge who could have passed the order to Home Secretary to deal with the case cannot be presumed. 18 Cut LT 307: ILR (1952) (Cut) 353: 1952 Cri LJ 1051: AIR 1952 Orissa 200 (201) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

If orders of preventive detention fall under Cl. (iii) of sub-rule (b) of R. 8 of the Subsidiary Rules it would follow that even though the secretary deals with such cases they have to be submitted to the Chief Minister and Governor and if there is no proof of the same, the orders are invalid. 18 Cut LT 307: ILR (1952) Cut 353: 1952 Cri LJ 1051: AIR 1952 Orissa 200 (202) (Pt C) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 3 — Satisfaction of Provincial Government — Delegation of responsibility from Minister to Home Secretary — Validity — (Constitution of India, Art. 166 (3) — Rules of business of Orissa Government, R. 8 — Subsidiary Rules of Business, R. 2).

Having regard to Art. 166 (3) of the Constitution and R. 8 of the main Rules of Business made by the Governor, the satisfaction of the concerned Minister must be taken to be the satisfaction of the Provincial Government, but there is no legal provision at all for the delegation of that responsibility from the Minister to the Home Secretary. Rule 2 of the Subsidiary Rules cannot be treated as authorising or validating any such delegation of responsibility. ILR (1951) Cut 624: 18 Cut LT 58: 1952 Cr LJ 1113: AIR 1952 Orissa 200 (202) (Pt D) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 3 — Satisfaction of the detaining authority — Proof.

The question whether or not the Deputy Commissioner at the time he passed order under Section 3, Preventive Detention Act, was satisfied that it was necessary to arrest the petitioner with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the public peace and order is a question of fact and if the petitioner's position was that such a satisfaction did not exist he should definitely assert the fact in the petition.

Further where a Deputy Commissioner revoked his first order and passed a second order, the very fact that there was some variation in the grounds of detention and in one respect even the order in which the facts were alleged to have taken place was also changed goes to show that the Deputy Commissioner did go into the matter afresh and he passed the new order after he was satisfied of the necessity of it. ILR (1952) Patiala 445: 1953 Cri LJ 1519: AIR 1953 Pepsu 145 (146) (Pt D) (Pr 5).

——S. 3 — Satisfaction of detaining authority— Onus — Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 103 — Constitution of India, Arts. 154, 166.

When an order expressed to be made by the Rajpramukh and authenticated by a person authorised in this behalf by the rules is produced, it shall be accepted as an order made by his Highness the Rajpramukh and if the order contains a recital of a fact, under Clause (2) of Article 166 the presumption in so far as it relates to its execution, does not extend to the correctness of that recital, that is to say, the Court can go into the matter and decide whether or not the recital was correct or not. This means that it is open to the Court to decide whether the Chief Secretary who made the order of detention on behalf of his Highness the Rajpramukh satisfied himself about the necessity of detention before he made the order. In a case of this kind the onus is initially upon the State to prove that the authority who made the order of detention was satisfied in respect of its necessity. But if an order expressed to be made in the name of the Rajpramukh and duly authenticated by a person authorised in this behalf has been produced the onus shifts to the other side. ●——Ss. 3, 7 — Order of detention — Nature and contents — (Constitution of India, Art. 22).

The detenu has to be served with a copy of the order passed by the authority contemplated by sub-section (2) of Section 3, containing, firstly, recitals in terms of one or more of the sub-clauses of Clauses (a) and (b) of Section 3 (1), which may be called the 'preamble', and secondly, the grounds contemplated by Section 7, namely, the conclusions of fact which have led to the passing of the order of detention, informing the detenu as to why he was being detained. If the grounds do not contain all the particulars necessary for enabling the detenu to make his representation against the order of his detention, he may ask for further particulars of the facts, and the authority which passed the order of detention is expected to furnish all that information subject, of course, to the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 7; that is to say, the person detained shall not be entitled to the disclosure of such facts as the authority making the order, considers against public interest to disclose. Thus, the order of detention to be served upon the person detained would usually consist of the first two parts, namely, the preamble and the grounds, but it may also consist of the third part, namely, the particulars, if and when they are required or found to be necessary. But the particulars referred to in sub-sections (3) and (4) of Section 3, would not be identical with the third part of the order. The preamble cannot be treated as the ground of detention contemplated by Section 7. 1951 SCJ 208: (1951) 1 Mad LJ 389: AIR 1951 SC 157, Rel. on. Naresh Chandra Ganguli v. State of W. ●——Ss. 3 and 13 — Former defective order — Subsequent fresh order free from defect — Constitution of India, Art. 22.

Before a person is deprived of his personal liberty the procedure established by law must be strictly followed and must not be departed from to the disadvantage of the person affected. This proposition, however, applied with equal force to cases of preventive detention before the commencement of the Constitution. The Constitution does not make any difference in regard to the position. The position is now made more clear by the express provisions of Section 13 of the Preventive Detention Act which provides that a detention order may at any time be revoked or modified and that such revocation shall not bar the making of a fresh detention order under Section 3 against the same person. As in habeas corpus proceedings the Court is to have regard to the legality or otherwise of the detention at the time of the return and not with reference to the date of the institution of the proceeding, in the absence of proof of bad faith, the detaining authority can supersede an earlier order of detention challenged as illegal and make a fresh order wherever possible which is free from defects and duly complies with the requirements of the law in that behalf. The question of bad faith, if raised, would certainly have to be decided with reference to the circumstances of each case but the observations in one case cannot be regarded as a precedent in dealing with other cases. The power of revocation conferred on the State Government by Section 13 is untrammelled by any restrictions. There is nothing in the Act to suggest that this power of revocation cannot be exercised unless the procedure prescribed by Sections 9 and 10 has been followed. The State Government can revoke the District Magistrate's order at any time and at any stage of the proceedings.

Where, therefore, the Government revokes an order of detention passed by the District Magistrate and itself passes an order of detention, the orders of the Government are not ultra vires on the ground that requirements of Sections 9 and 10 of the Act had not been complied with in respect of the District Magistrate's order. 1951 All WR (HC) 502: 1951 All Cri Cas 123: 1952 Cri LJ 372: AIR 1952 All 180 (180, 181) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 7, 9).

But at the time when the order of detention was actually served on the detenu, A had left charge and another District Magistrate B was in charge of the District. The grounds of detention were furnished to the detenu on 19-6-1950:

Held, (1) that an order passed by a District Magistrate, who is subsequently transferred and relieved of his duties, does not lose its value and cease to be an order of a District Magistrate. ——Ss. 3 (2), 12 and 13 —Detention order under S. 3 (2) — Non-specification of detention period — Legality — Defect if can be cured under Section 13 — Constitution of India, Art. 22.

The specification of the period of detention is one of the indispensable essentials that would go to make the order of detention legal and valid in the eye of law. It is, therefore, imperative for the detaining authority to prescribe the term of detention, and failure to do so and leaving it to the maximum period permissible under the law if intended would make the order of detention doubtlessly vague.

The defect caused by the non-specification of the period of detention cannot be cured by the fact that the Government in the exercise of powers conferred upon it by Section 13 can revoke or modify the order of detention.

The existence of another remedy that may possibly be used by the Government for affording relief cannot validate the order of detention which was unsustainable in law when it was made. 2 Pepsu LR 421: 52 Cri LJ 33: AIR 1951 Pepsu 1 (2, 3) (Prs 3, 4).

● ——S. 3 — Validity of detention — Failure of one of the grounds for detention — Effect.

The power to issue a detention order under Section 3 of the Preventive Detention Act depends entirely upon the satisfaction of the appropriate authority specified in that section. The sufficiency of the grounds upon which such satisfaction purports to be based, provided they have a rational probative value and are not extraneous to the scope or purpose of the legislative provision cannot be challenged in a Court of law, except on the ground of mala fides. A Court of law, is not even competent to enquire into the truth or otherwise of the facts which are mentioned as grounds of detention in the communication to the detenu under S. 7 of the Act. AIR 1951 SC 157, Rel. on.

Where however the Government itself while confirming the detention in exercise of its power under Section 11 admits that one of the two grounds mentioned in the original order is substantial or non-existent, to say that the other ground which still remains, is quite sufficient to sustain the order would be to substitute an objective judicial test for the subjective decision of the executive authority which is against the legislative policy underlying the statute. In such cases, the position would be the same as if one of these two grounds was irrelevant for the purpose of the Act or was wholly illusory and this would vitiate the detention order as a whole. Where orders of detention expressly state that the Governor of Punjab was satisfied of their necessity and that they were made by his order, the mere fact that they are signed by the Home Secretary would not make them defective. ● ——Ss. 3 (1), 9 and 11 (as amended by Act 4 of 1951) — Fixing of period of detention in initial order itself — Order cannot be supported.

It is clear that the Preventive Detention Act (1950) as amended requires that every case of detention should be placed before an Advisory Board constituted under the Act (Section 9) and provides that if the Board reports that there is sufficient cause for the detention "the appropriate Government may confirm the detention order and continue the detention of the person concerned for such period as it thinks fit" (S. 11). It is, therefore, plain that it is only after the Advisory Board, to which the case has been referred, reports that the detention is justified, the Government should determine what the period of detention should be and not before. The fixing of the period of detention in the initial order itself is therefore, contrary to the scheme of the Act and cannot be supported. Makhan Singh v. ● ——Ss. 3, 12 — Order of detention not specifying period — Validity.

Even if the order of detention passed under Section 3 does not specify the period during which the detenus are to be under detention, the order is not invalid as Section 12 prescribes a maximum period of one year and hence such orders cannot be said to be of indefinite period or unlawful on that ground. The mere fact that the order of detention under Section 3 (1) of the Preventive Detention Act was passed by one Chief Commissioner, but the grounds were supplied by his successor-in-office, does not warrant the inference that these grounds were those which satisfied the then Commissioner who made the order of detention in the matter of the requisite satisfaction before passing the order. It is not the satisfaction of the individual but of the authority that is required. It is the authority and not the person who has to be satisfied and who has to furnish the grounds on which the order was passed. 1952 Cr LJ 683: AIR 1952 Bhopal 6 (9, 10) (Pt A) (Prs 12, 13).

——Ss. 3, 11 — Detention order under S. 3 — Necessity to state period of detention — Case referred to Advisory Committee and detention order confirmed — Period of detention not mentioned — Detention order if valid.

Where an original order of detention is passed under Section 3 as it stood before its amendment in 1951 it is not necessary to state therein the period for which the detenu is to be detained. (1951) Cri Appl. No. 235 of 1951 (Bom) D/. 17-4-51, Rel. on.

Merely because there could not be detention of a longer duration than one year from the date of the order, it cannot be held that the detention order had to mention the period for which the detenu was to be detained by the jailor. The detaining authority could very well say 'until further orders', and even if he did not use the words but merely said that the detenu should be detained, the jailor knowing that the detention could only be for one year would naturally understand that before the expiry of one year orders would be received as to when the detenu was to be released. (1942) AC 206, Rel. on.

Nor is it necessary when subsequently the case of the detenu is referred to the Advisory Committee and the State Government confirms the order of detention that they must mention the period during which the detenu would be detained further. 53 Bom LR 717: 21 Bom Cr C 210: 1952 Cri LJ 81: ILR (1952) Bom 134: AIR 1952 Bom 1 (6, 8) (Pt C) (Prs 13, 14) (DB).

——S. 3 — Legality of order — Burden of proof.

Onus to prove that the authority who makes the order of detention is satisfied about the necessity of detention in the words of S. 3 lies upon the State. But when an order duly authenticated by a competent authority is produced and it is mentioned in that order that the order is made after the authority is satisfied the onus shifts to the detenu. ——S. 3 — Validity of detention — (Constitution of India, Art. 226).

Action under S. 3 is preventive and not punitive and can be taken only with a view to preventing person from doing something prejudicial to public order.

Petitioner was all along detained in jail as an undertrial prisoner in three cases for about six months. In one of them he was acquitted and in another he was discharged. Immediately after his acquittal and while the third case was pending against him he was served with an order of preventive detention under Section 3 mentioning his past activities prior to his detention extending for a period of two years as the grounds of detention. Held, that the order of detention was made for a collateral purpose as there was likelihood that the object was either to punish him for his past acts or to prejudice his defence in the case pending against him. The order of detention was, therefore, illegal. 1953 Cr LJ 1210: ILR (1952) Patiala 620: AIR 1953 Pepsu 111 (112) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——S. 3 — Satisfaction of detaining authority — Whether material before authority had connection with matters referred to in S. 3 (1) (a) — Power of Court to consider.

With a view to determining whether the order of detention is legal the Court has to consider whether the detaining authority was satisfied as a matter of fact or he could be satisfied on that material or information that was before him. If the nature of the material be such that when believed it could afford a ground for satisfaction the order of detention cannot be characterised as illegal merely on the ground that the material was not sufficient but when it has no connection whatsoever with any of the three matters referred in Cl. (a) of Section 3 (1) the inference is clear that the ground upon which the order of detention is made is outside the scope of the Act and accordingly the order is illegal and ultra vires and is made without any authority. 3 Pepsu LR 77: 1952 Cri LJ 1485: AIR 1952 Pepsu 126 (127) (Pt C) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 3 — Past activities.

The nature of the action under the Preventive Detention Act is one intended to prevent a person from acting in any manner prejudicial to the maintenance of the supplies and services essential to the community in future. It is absolutely necessary that his future must be judged by his past. It is not until the past activities of an individual spreading over a period of time, not distant or remote, have been watched and scrutinised, will it be possible to come to any reasonable conclusion as to his conduct in future. Once the objectionable nature of his activities for a period prior to his arrest is brought to light, the authorities on being satisfied as to his future behaviour would inevitably take action of a preventive character. The grounds of an order referring to the detenu's activities in the recent past, therefore, constitute a valid basis of action for his detention. 52 Cri LJ 3: 1951 ALJ 203: AIR 1951 All 838 (844) (Pt C) (Pr 24) (DB).

Held, the distance of time is immaterial unless there is practically no connection between the past and present activities. It is no doubt true that the detaining authority could take into the consideration the proximate and immediate past of the detenu while passing an order of detention, but it is only the immediate past, the antecedents and the history of the detenu, that alone could be taken into consideration if there be nothing between immediate past and the order of detention.

It is impossible to gauge the mental attitude of the detenu as it existed about the time the detention order was passed by its comparison with that obtained six months before. 1952 Cri LJ 683: AIR 1952 Bhopal 6 (10, 12) (Pt D) (Pra 15, 23, 24).

——S. 3 — Past acts.

Where past acts form a chain with the connected acts which might imperil the security of the State or the maintenance of public order, and all the acts show the mental make-up of the would-be detenu at the relevant dates and are useful aids in finding out the potential activities of the would-be detenu, such past acts form the basis of the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority. ——S. 3 — Previous penal acts.

It is no doubt true that the object of a preventive detention Statute is mainly preventive but it does not follow that previous penal acts of the would-be detenu are irrelevant. The normal process of a criminal trial may be inappropriate or ineffective. Past acts even if they have gone beyond the stage of preparation or of attempts to commit penal offences and have even resulted in the commission of penal offences, are relevant for sustaining an oder of detention. ('52) 56 Cal WN 427: 1953 Cri LJ 310: AIR 1953 Cal 81 (82) (Pt B) (Pr 12) (DB).

●——Ss. 3 and 7 — Statements relating to past conduct in grounds of detention — Whether justiciable — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (6).

The correctness of statement relating to the past activities of a detenu contained in the grounds of detention is not justiciable. The satisfaction under S. 3 being a subjective one, no Court can substitute its opinion of the material for that of the authority directing detention, and thereby hold the satisfaction to be wrongly reached. There is however a difference between irrelevant ground and incorrect ground. To hold it incorrect, an adjudication of relevant facts is necessary, which means jurisdiction to order production of the relevant data and this jurisdiction cannot be exercised in view of Art 22, Cl. (6) of the Constitution of India Bompalli Sathia v. Government of Hyderabad, 52 Cri LJ 1527: AIR 1951 Hyd 162 (162) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (FB).

The object of the Preventive Detention Act was no doubt preventive and not punitive detention; but from this it is erroneous to infer that past penal acts of the would-be detenu cannot be taken into account in finding out his likely course of action in the future. As a matter of fact it is largely from the past activities of a person that his behaviour in the future can be inferred. The normal process of investigation and trial according to the Code of Criminal Procedure may be found to be ineffective and inadequate to meet a real situation of lawlessness. The object of the Preventive Detention Act is no doubt preventive and not punitive detention. But from this object of the Act, it is erroneous to infer that past penal acts of the would be detenu cannot be taken into account in finding out his likely course of action in the future. Moreover, when a number of notorious dacoits operate in co-ordination over extensive areas aided and abetted by their agents who give them shelter, arms, information as regards police posting and who intimidate witnesses from giving evidence against the dacoits, the normal process of investigation and trial according to the Code of Criminal Procedure may be found to be ineffective and inadequate to meet a real situation of lawlessness. The question whether in such a situation a person should or should not be detained in order to prevent him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order is not for the decision of the Court. Madh BLR (1954) Cr 108: 1954 Cri LJ 1062: Madh BLJ 1954 HCR 582: ILR (1954) Madh B 445: AIR 1954 Madh Bha 125 (127, 128) (Pt C) (Pr 9) (DB).

The detaining authority can fall back upon the grounds existing prior to the original detention of the detenu under the Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act in 1948 for his fresh detention under the Preventive Detention Act in 1950. The mere fact that a person has committed an offence or that he has been convicted for an offence would not by itself afford a ground for detaining him under S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act, but his antecedent conduct in committing the offence may be taken into consideration by the detaining authority in arriving at the conclusion that he was likely to act in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of the public order. Hence where the detenu was complained of being in the habit of harbouring dacoits and affording them protection and supplying information to them of movements of the police, and particular instances of when and where he had harboured certain dacoits were mentioned in support of the belief that he was likely to do so in future also, with a view to avoid which the detention was considered necessary the order cannot be held to be illegal on the ground that harbouring of dacoits is not a matter for consideration for the maintenance of public order. 9. Prosecution or detention.

—S. 3 — Arrest unaccompanied by prosecution — Subsequent detention.

It is true that the distinction between the two forms of action, namely, punitive action such as a criminal charge and preventive detention is clear cut and it is not open to the detaining authority to punish a man for some act which could only have constituted the basis of prosecution. But the mere fact that the arrest was originally ordered for a specific offence but it was not followed by prosecution for that offence cannot affect the power of the detaining authority to take preventive action after the interim or final release of the person detained. It cannot be held that where an arrest unaccompanied by prosecution is followed by an order of detention, the Court must hold that the detention was mala fide. The burden of proving that the order was mala fide lies upon the detenu Case law discussed. 52 Cri LJ 3: AIR 1951 All 838 (842, 843) (Pt B) (Prs 17, 20) (DB).

make a strike illegal and if a detaining authority acting under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, thinks that one or the other of those conditions exists and the strike which is incited to be resorted to by the person to be detained is illegal on that score, it is open to the detaining authority to take action under the Preventive Detention Act against the person concerned. In this connection it is not correct to argue that no action for detaining a person can be taken under the Preventive Detention Act unless there is a prior determination by a Labour Court or the Industrial Court that the strike is an illegal one. 53 Bom LR 127: 21 Bom Cri Cas 80: 52 Cri LJ 418: ILR (1951) Bom 546: AIR 1951 Bom 33 (40, 44, 45) (Pt E) (Prs 12, 23) (DB).

——S. 3 (as amended in 1951) — Incidents punishable under ordinary Criminal law — Detention order on grounds relating to such incidents — Competency — Autre fois acquit — Principle of — Protection against double jeopardy under Article 20 (2), Constitution of India — Applicability — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 403 — Constitution of India, Art. 20 (2).

The basis of the Preventive Detention Act of 1950 as amended by Act 4 of 1951 is that the Central Government or the State Government is given the power to make orders of detention against certain persons provided such Government is satisfied on the grounds mentioned in Section 3 of the Act. The satisfaction is of the appropriate Government and not of the Courts. Such satisfaction as is laid down in S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act is not limited to be based on the existing laws of the lands. Fundamentally, therefore, the operation of the existing laws of the land of the determination of the offences by Courts under such laws and the result arising therefrom whether of acquittal or discharge or even of conviction (for instance only a sentence of fine and not of imprisonment) cannot be allowed to operate as a restriction on the powers of the Government to detain under Section 3 of the Preventive Detention Act. To allow it to do so would be to completely eliminate the very justification of the Preventive Detention Act. For if the ordinary laws of the land and their application to any particular person by the Courts were enough to meet the situation which the Preventive Detention Act was intended to meet, then it is difficult to imagine either the purpose or the object of such an Act.

The central purpose of the Preventive Detention Act is preventive detention justified by national security and maintenance of public order and essential supplies and services and its purpose is not criminal conviction justified by legal evidence and by existing laws relating to crimes and offences. The consideration of the Court and the consideration of the Government are in this context disparate and do not belong to the same realms of scrutiny. The principle of autrefois acquit under Section 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has no application because the satisfaction of the Government under the Preventive Detention Act is not a "trial". The constitutional protection against double jeopardy under Art. 20 (2) of the Constitution is also inapplicable because satisfaction under the Preventive Detention Act is not a "Prosecution". There is and can be no identity of offence or of prosecution between detention under the Preventive Detention Act and trial conviction by a Court of law.

Hence, an order of detention under the Preventive Detention Act is not illegal merely because it nullifies a previous order of discharge or acquittal by a Court in a Criminal or a quasi-criminal case.

There is no reason why acquittal must necessarily mean that the acquitted person nevertheless cannot be acting in a manner prejudicial to national security or maintenance of essential supplies and services as mentioned in S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act and why if the Government is satisfied on that account it cannot in such a case come to the conclusion that it is necessary to detain him. A person can be detained under the Preventive Detention Act even if he has not committed an offence proved under the Penal Code or under any other Act. It is entirely erroneous to think that the ordinary criminal laws of the country and the Preventive Detention Act are substitutes for each other. If anything, they are complementary. 56 Cal WN 42: 1952 Cri LJ 204: ILR (1953) 1 Cal 89: AIR 1952 Cal 26 (29, 30) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 15, 16, 18) (DB).

——S. 3— Contravention of S. 3, Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946 — Two remedies open to authorities — They must choose one.

Where the facts alleged against a person are that he has contravened the provision of S. 3, Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, he can either be detained under the preventive measures or prosecuted in a Court of Law. The authorities concerned cannot have resort to both the forms, i.e., of preventively detaining and seeking conviction in a Court of Law. For it is a well settled principle that the detaining authority must make a choice either to preventively detain the offender under the provisions of the Preventive Detention Act or to challan him in a Court of Law for the alleged offences which he is stated to have committed. AIR 1950 Bom 202, Rel. on. 52 Cri LJ 916: ILR (1952) Hyd 71: AIR 1951 Hyd 94 (94, 95) (Pr 1) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) — Two courses, prosecution and detention, open to Government — Power of Government to choose one.

It is not a rule of law that when a person is accused of an offence the only alternative is to prosecute him, and there is no legal authority to detain him. Public safety and the maintenance of public order are paramount concern of the Government, and the power of the State Government to order the detention of a man is not lost if the Government are not in possession of sufficient evidence to secure his conviction. It is not necessary for the executive authority to make a choice between prosecution and detention at the earliest stage and it is not the law that unless such a choice is made the order of detention should be regarded as invalid. What is required is that the executive authority should act according to law, reasonably and in good faith. In all cases it is a question of fact whether the order of detention is mala fide or not. AIR 1951 Pat 68, Foll.; 23 Pat 252, Expl. 52 Cri LJ 1231: ILR 30 Pat 653: AIR 1951 Pat 153 (154) (Pt B) (Pr 3) (DB).

——S. 3 (2) — Detention of person accused of offence — Legality — Mala fide order — Test.

It cannot be stated as a rule of law that when a person is accused of an offence, the only alternative is to prosecute him, and there is no legal authority to detain him. It is a fallacy to say that the right to prosecute a person under the ordinary criminal law and the right to detain him are mutually exclusive. AIR 1945 Bom 533, Rel. on.

There is no rule of law that unless a choice of one of two alternatives, prosecution or detention, is made at the earliest moment, the order of detention must be held to be invalid. The proper approach is to consider the facts of each case and then consider whether the order of detention is mala fide or not.

No doubt there may be cases in which there will be a clash between the different rights, if and when both detention and prosecution are made and pursued at the same time. In such cases, if the State Government wish to pursue the prosecution it must be prepared to comply with the safeguards of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and must give to the undertrial prisoner such rights as he may have under the law. It would not be open to the State Government to fall back on Cl. (3) of Art. 22 and hold an investigation or trial in disregard of the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Apart, however, from this difficulty which may arise in some cases, the test whether a detention order is or is not mala fide depends on whether the order is for the purpose mentioned in the order itself namely, the maintenance of public order, or whether it is for any ulterior or collateral purpose. 52 Cri LJ 603: AIR 1951 Pat 68 (74, 75) (Pt E) (Prs 11, 13) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) — Detention and prosecution whether can be simultaneously made — Test to be applied.

Whether detention of a person and prosecution started against him can be simultaneously made does not depend on any rule of law; the question has to be approached, and answered in each case on the footing whether the order of detention in view of the pending prosecution, is bona fide or not. For answering the question the uncontroverted facts may have to be considered, and the test will be whether the order of detention is for the purpose it purports to be or really for any ulterior or collateral purpose. 52 Cri LJ 406: ILR 30 Pat 630: AIR 1951 Pat 47 (52) (Pt E) (Pr 15) (DB).

——S. 3 — Mala fides — Inference.

It cannot be stated as a rule of law that when a person is accused of an offence, the only alternative is to prosecute him, and there is no legal authority to detain him. The right to prosecute a person under the ordinary criminal law and the right to detain him are not mutually exclusive. ■ ——S. 3 (1) (a) — Order of detention of person already in jail custody is beyond the powers of the District Magistrate — Such person cannot act in prejudicial manner — Subjective satisfaction of detaining authority — Justiciability — Past conduct of person, relevancy of.

Before an order of detention can be validly made by the detaining authorities specified by S. 3 (2), the authority must be satisfied that the detention of the person is necessary in order to prevent him from acting in any prejudicial manner as indicated in Cls. (i) to (iii) of S. 3 (1) (a). Since the Act authorises the preventive detention of citizens without a trial, the material provisions of the Act must be strictly construed and safe-guards which the Act has deliberately provided for the protection of citizens must be liberally interpreted. The satisfaction of the detaining authority to which S. 3 (1) (a) refers is his subjective satisfaction, and so is not justiciable. Therefore it would not be open to the detenue to ask the Court to consider the question as to whether the said saisfaction of the detaining authority can be justified by the application of objective tests.

If any of the grounds furnished to the detenue are found to be irrelevant while considering the application of Cls. (i) to (iii) of S. 3 (1) (a) and in that sense are foreign to the Act, the satisfaction of the detaining authority on which the order of detention is based is open to challenge and the detention order liable to be quashed. Similarly, if some of the grounds supplied to that detenue are so vague that they would virtually deprive the detenu of his statutory right of making a representation, that again may introduce a serious infirmity in the order of his detention. If, however, the grounds on which the order of detention proceeds are relevant and germane to the matters which fall to be considered under S. 3 (1) (a), it would not be open to the detenue to challenge the order of detention by arguing that the satisfaction of the detaining authority is not reasonably based on any of the said grounds.

Though the satisfaction of the detaining authority contemplated by S. 3 (1) (a) is subjective of the said authority, cases may arise where the detenue may challenge the validity of his detention on the ground of mala fides and in support of the said plea urge that along with other facts which show mala fides, the Court may also consider his grievance that the grounds served on him cannot possibly or rationally support the conclusion drawn against him by the detaining authority. It is only in this incidental manner and in support of the plea of mala fides that this question can become justiciable; otherwise the reasonableness or propriety of the said satisfaction contemplated by S. 3 (1) (a) cannot be questioned before the Courts.

In deciding the question as to whether it is necessary to detain a person, the authority has to be satisfied that if the said person is not detained, he may act in a prejudicial manner, and this conclusion can be reasonably reached by the authority generally in the light of the evidence about the past prejudicial activities of the said person. But the past conduct or antecedent history of the person on which the authority purports to act, should ordinarily be proximate in point of time and should have a rational connection with the conclusion that the detention of the person is necessary.

The question about the validity of the satisfaction of the authority will have to be considered on the facts of each case. The detention of a person without a trial is a very serious encroachment on his personal freedom and so, at every stage, all questions in relation to the said detention must be carefully and solemnly considered.

Where a person is undergoing imprisonment for a very short time and it is known that he would soon be released from jail, it may be possible for the authority to consider the antecedent history of the said person and decide whether his detention would be necessary after he is released from jail and if the authority is bona fide satisfied that such detention is necessary he can make a valid order of detention a few days before the person is actually released. On the other hand, if a person is sentenced to a long term of imprisonment, the authority cannot pass an order soon after the sentence is pronounced, directing the detention of the person after he is released from jail at the end of the long period of sentence imposed on him. Therefore, the question as to whether an order of detention can be passed against a person who is in detention or in jail, will always have to be determined in the circumstances of each case.

If a person is already in jail custody as a result of a remand order passed by a competent authority, it cannot rationally be postulated that if he is not detained, he would act in a prejudicial manner. At the point of time when an order of detention is going to be served on a person, it must be patent that the said person would act prejudicially if he is not detained and that is a consideration which would be absent when the authority is dealing with a person already in detention. The satisfaction that it is necessary to detain a person for the purpose of preventing him from acting in a prejudicial manner is thus the basis of the order under S. 3 (1) (a), and this basis is clearly absent in the case of a person already in jail custody. Therefore, the detention of the person in the circumstances of this case, is not justified by S. 3 (1) (a) and is outside its purview. The District Magistrate who orders the detention of the detenue acts outside his powers conferred on him by S. 3 (a) when he holds that it was necessary to detain the person in order to prevent him from acting in a prejudicial manner. ——S. 3 — Detenu under detention under U. P. Maintenance of Public Order (Temporary) Act (4 of 1947) — Order under S. 3 served while under such detention — Period of detention enhanced —Validity of detention order and enhancement of period.

While the detenu was under detention under the U. P. Maintenance of Public Order (Temporary) Act, 1947, a detention order under S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, was served upon him converting his detention under the U P. Act into one under the Preventive Detention Act. The grounds of detention communicated to him under S. 7 of the Act were presumably the same as the grounds which had been communicated to him previously in connection with his detention under the U. P. Act. The matter went up in due course before the Advisory Board under S. 9 of the Act and on the report of the Advisory Board the Government confirmed his detention order and directed that he be detained for a period of eleven months more.

Held, that the order of detention was valid though it was not passed on fresh materials.

Held, further, that the order enhancing the period of detention being strictly in accordance with the provisions of the Act, it could not be said to be illegal or invalid. 52 Cri LJ 422: AIR 1951 All 18 (20, 21) (Pt C) (Prs 4 to 6) (DB).

——S. 3 (2) — Applicability — Order of detention against detenu already in custody — "Validity".

When a person is in custody and is, therefore, already prevented from acting in a manner prejudicial to the security of the State, it cannot be said that the satisfaction of the State as required by S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act is real. Thus where the petitioner was arrested on 17th March, 1951, in connection with an offence under the Official Secrets Act and was in custody from that date as under-trial prisoner till 18th April, 1952, the order of detention passed on 10th February, 1952, lacks the reality of satisfaction required by S. 3 of the Act and is not valid. ILR (1953) 5 Assam 109: 55 Cri LJ 747: AIR 1954 Assam 93 (94) (Pr 3).

——S. 3 — Applicability — Order of detention against person already in jail custody — Legality.

When a person is not free to act at all, as when he is in jail custody, the question of satisfaction in terms of S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act does not arise by reason of his confinement as an under-trial prisoner in jail custody, as he is already prevented from acting in any manner prejudicial to the purposes mentioned in S. 3 of the Act. Where a person is already prevented from so acting by reason of his detention in jail custody, it is futile to say that the detaining authority is satisfied with respect to him that it is necessary to pass an order of detention against him. The element of satisfaction must necessarily relate to a point of time when a person has freedom of action. 1952 Cri LJ 1670: ILR (1952) 4 Assam 381: AIR 1952 Assam 175 (176) (Prs 2, 3).

——S. 3 — Person already in detention — Subsequent order under S. 3 — Validity.

(Per Ram Labhaya J., and Thadani C. J.):— When a person is already in detention in pursuance of his being accused of a non-bailable offence another order of detention under S. 3 is not necessary. He is not in a position to act in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. The detaining authority, in these circumstances, cannot feel satisfied that an order of detention is necessary for any of the purposes mentioned in S. 3 for, by serving the order of detention on him, the situation does not improve at all, the person on whom the order is served being already in confinement. The satisfaction, therefore, of the detaining authority cannot be regarded as real.

Section 4 of the Rajasthan Public Security Ordinance (1949) became void on 26-1-1950 and so detention under the Ordinance of a person for a period longer than three months after the Constitution of India came into operation also became illegal. In such a case fresh order of detention can be passed against the person under S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act even if the acts were committed previous to the first order of detention. Section 6 of the General Clauses Act would not apply in such a case. 1950 Raj LW 204: 52 Cri LJ 425: AIR 1951 Raj 69 (72) (Pt F) (Pr 11) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) — Requisite satisfaction of detaining authority — Omission to mention details of Section 3 (1) in detention order — If indicates carelessness on part of detaining authority — Detention order by Chief Commissioner, Bhopal — Omission to state place of activity — Effect.

Where the preamble of the detention order clearly states the purpose with which the order is passed viz. to prevent the detenu from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of the public order and the security of the State, nothing more is required to be stated in the order. The mere fact that the order omitted to state that the order was passed under sub-cl. (ii) of Cl. (a) of sub-secion (1) of S. 3 of the Act does not indicate any carelessness on the part of the detaining authority. If at all it indicates anything it may be said to be a typing or clerical omission. AIR 1945 Bom 212, Disting.

Where the detention order is passed by the Chief Commissioner, Bhopal, the presumption that the authority acted within its jurisdiction and powers clearly arises and implies and indicates the place of the activities unless it is otherwise shown. AIR 1948 Bom 360, Disting.

It is the authority and not the person who has to be satisfied and who has to furnish the grounds on which the detention order was passed. 1952 Cri LJ 683: AIR 1952 Bhopal 6 (9, 10) (Pt C) (Prs 12, 13).

——Ss. 3 and 4 (as amended by amending Act of 1951) — Detention order not mentioning place of detention — Failure to detain detenu in place determined in accordance with S. 4 — If renders detention order invalid or vague.

Section 4 whether of the original Act or the amending Act does not empower the detention of the petitioner as distinguished from his detention in a particular place. The order of detention actually is passed under the provisions of S. 3, and S. 12 of the amending Act makes it quite clear that what is continued after the coming into operation of the amending Act is the detention order. Consequently the failure to detain a detenu in a place determined in accordance with the provisions of S. 4 of the original Act or the Act as amended would not render the detention order, that is the order passed under S. 3, an invalid order.

Failure to mention in the detention order the place where he is going to be detained does not render the order vague or invalid.

Where there is a valid order for detaining the detenu, the absence of a valid order directing his detention in a particular place would not compel the Court to release the detenu if a valid order directing that he be detained in a particular place is passed by a proper authority before his release. 47 Bom LR 396 (FC), Rel. on. 53 Bom LR 717: 21 Bom Cr C 210: 1952 Cri LJ 81: ILR (1952) Bom 134: AIR 1952 Bom 1 (4, 5) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 7, 11) (DB).

Where it is mentioned in the order of detention, that the detaining authority was satisfied within the meaning of Section 3, that it was necessary to make the order with a view to prevent the detenu from acting in a manner prejudicial to the security of the State and maintenance of public order, the mere fact that the grounds supplied make no reference to the security of the State, does not justify the inference that the satisfaction of the detaining authority required under Section 3 was wanting. 3 Pepsu LR 288.

13. Mala fides — General.

●——S. 3 — Mala fides — Relevant consideration.

On the question of mala fides of an order of detention, it is not a relevant consideration whether the activities of the appellant were liked or disliked by the authorities concerned. The only relevant consideration is if the order of detention was made for ulterior purposes or purposes other than those mentioned in the detention order. Puranlal Lakhanpal v. ●——S. 3 — Mala fides — Test.

Where the grounds of detention are not wholly the same as the facts in respect of which the prosecution was launched and the proceeding under Section 107 of the Criminal P. C., was initiated, the contention that the detention is in respect of the very same matter for which the prosecution was launched and that the detention order is in the nature of interference with the course of justice and therefore mala fide is not sustainable. ●——S. 3 — Question of mala fide — Question of fact (Obiter).

Obiter — It may be that where the grounds on which a detention order is based are also the subject-matter of a criminal prosecution the order of detention may amount to abuse of the statutory powers. But this does not mean that such an order is necessarily mala fide. Such a circumstance calls for scrutiny as to bona fides of the detention order but the question of mala fides has got to be decided as one of fact with reference to all the circumstances of an individual case. Thakur Prasad Bania v. State of Bihar, 1955 All WR (Supp) 115: 1955 All LJ 802: (1955) 2 MLJ (SC) 165: 1955 SCJ 669: 1955 BLJR 659: 1955 Andhra WR (SC) 419: 1955 SCA 1079: 1955 Cr LJ 1408: AIR 1955 SC 631 (631) (Pt C) (Pr 2).

●——S. 3 — 'Mala fides' — Subsequent order of detention mentioning same grounds as prior order — Detenu all the while in jail in intervening period — Subsequent order cannot be said to be mala fide.

If while the detenu is in jail under a prior order of detention under a provincial Act, a subsequent order of detention under the Preventive Detention Act is passed against him after several months mentioning the same grounds as in the prior order it cannot be said that the subsequent order is mala fide or passed mechanically without proper satisfaction. The past conduct or antecedent history of a person can be taken into account when making a detention order, and, as a matter of fact, it is largerly from prior events showing the tendencies or inclinations of the man that an inference could be drawn whether he is likely even in the future to act in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. If the authority satisfied himself that the original ground was still available and that there was need for detention on its basis, no mala fides can be attributed to the authority from this fact alone. Ujagar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1952) SCA 648: 1952 SCJ 521: (1952) 2 MLJ 641: 1952 SCR 756: 1953 Cr LJ 146: AIR 1952 SC 350 (352) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

●——S. 3 — Satisfaction — Large number of detention orders passed overnight.

(Per Das J.) — Where the authorities had already applied their minds to the suspected activities of each of the several detenus and were satisfied as to the necessity of detaining them but there being doubts as to the validity of the local Acts and the Preventive Detention Act having been passed in the meantime the question was to make fresh orders under the new Act.

Held, that under the circumstances it could not be said that the fact that a large number of fresh orders of detention were made "overnight" indicated bad faith on the part of authorities. ——Ss. 3 (1) and 7 — Order of detention — Mala fides — Test of.

An order of detention passed against a person by the authority exercising powers under Section 3 (1) of the Preventive Detention Act can be said to be lacking in bona fides when it is found that the basic facts on which the order of detention is founded were not before the detaining authority on the date the order has been made or if the grounds are not such as a rational human being would consider connected in some manner with the objects which were to be prevented from being attained or where the authority has not applied its mind in the manner the Act required it. A detenu against whom an order of detention has been passed can challenge the order on mala fides and if so challenged, it is open to the High Court to examine the question. 1961 Nag LJ (Notes) 34.

——S. 3 — Mala fide — Failure of prosecution under ordinary criminal law — Detention order thereafter if mala fide.

Failure of prosecution under the ordinary criminal law cannot by itself be said to make the subsequent application of the Preventive Detention Act mala fide. Where the Government chose to bring the offender to book under the ordinary criminal laws of the country and the Government was told by the courts that he was outside the reach of such laws, then, it is not mala fides but bona fides of the Government when it applies the Preventive Detention Act only as a means of last resort where the ordinary laws of the land had failed. It only shows that the Government acted with good faith and was reluctant to apply its summary powers of preventive detention in the first instance.

A prior unsuccessful application of the ordinary criminal laws of the country to a citizen does not make a subsequent application of the Preventive Detention Act to that citizen ipso facto mala fide. 56 Cal WN 42: 1952 Cri LJ 204: AIR 1952 Cal 26 (30, 31) (Pt C) (Prs 19, 21) (DB).

——S. 3 — Mala fides — Test.

Although the matter as to whether the Government would have recourse to preventive detention or a criminal prosecution is a matter left to the discretion of the Government, the law enjoins that the Government should elect to take one step or the other. If there is a pending prosecution then the question might arise as to whether the order of detention is bona fide or not. The test would be whether the order of detention is for an ulterior purpose. This would have to be decided on the particular facts and circumstances of the case. No hard and fast rule can be laid as to when and in what cases a criminal case ought to be continued and the detention proceedings not resorted to. C. (1898), S. 491) — (Constitution of India (1950), Article 226).

Satyanarayana J. — An order of detention passed under the law of preventive detention can be challenged on the ground that there is lack of bona fide on the part of the authority exercising the power. ILR (1949) Mad 377, Rel. on.

A statutory authority must always be exercised honestly and without malice. There should be no fraudulent exercise of the power conferred or colourable exercise of it to gain an ulterior object. The question when that power has been exercised mala fide will depend upon the circumstances of the case. 1942 AC 206; 1917 AC 260; 1942 AC 284; 1945-2 MLJ 325 (PC) and 1949-2 MLJ 310, Ref. to.

When the question of the validity of an order of detention is being decided by the Court in an application for a writ of Habeas Corpus, the Government passes a fresh order to arrest the detenu if he is set at liberty, and alleges as its reason for passing the order the difficulty of arresting the detenu, a dangerous communist whose subversive activities would be a threat to the security of the State, as he would go underground immediately, the reason is unconvincing. Further the Government which apprehending an adverse judgment acts with alacrity and passes the fresh order after full consultations with all its legal advisers and even communicates it, before Judgment is delivered to the police officer present in court for execution if the detenu is set at liberty but fails to inform the court of the fresh order and the reasons for passing it, the omission to do so is a serious circumstance reflecting upon the bona fide of the Government in passing the order.

Raghava Rao J. — It is open to a detenu to show that the order of detention was a fraudulent exercise of the power vested in the Government. The burden of showing that is on him and he can sustain the burden only if he successfully rebuts the presumption of bona fide on the part of Government. AIR 1945 FC 18, Rel. on.

'Malice' and 'mala fide' in connection with an order of detention are cognate terms expressive of the same legal idea. 'Malice' in law can mean nothing more than intention to injure another by doing an act in disregard of the latter's right, wifully and wrongfully, without reasonable and probable cause. It does not mean personal ill feeling or spite. These terms in relation to an order of detention express the legal idea of an intention on the part of the Government to misuse or abuse the power vested in it and not necessarily connotative of moral turpitude on the part of the Government or anybody connected with it.

A detention order issued for the purpose of flouting the decision of Court, holding the previous order of detention invalid on merits, would be a mala fide order. But if the decision had proceeded on the ground that the law under which the prior order was made was invalid or that the order itself was in an irregular form a fresh order passed under a fresh legislation or in a valid form would not be necessarily mala fide. Where, however, the Government, passes an order even before the judgment is delivered and allege that they passed the order because they anticipated the judgment to declare the prior order invalid on the technical ground that it did not mention the period of detention, when they had no justification for such belief, and even the fresh order omits to rectify the defect the circumstances leave no doubt that the intention of the Government was to flout the decision of the court. ILR (1949) Mad 377, Ref. to.

Further when having passed such an order they refrain from mentioning it to the court, so as to enable the court to take the reasons therefor into consideration before it pronounces judgment against it is a circumstance which goes to show the indirect motive and improper conduct of the Government. 65 Mad LW 876: (1952) 2 Mad LJ 690: 1953 Cri LJ 224: AIR 1953 Mad 41 (45, 49, 50, 51) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 9, 14, 17, 18) (DB).

● ——S. 3 (1) — Mala fides — Test — Preventive detention and punitive action — Distinction.

There is no rule of law that unless a choice of one of two alternatives, prosecution or detention, is made at the earliest moment, the Order of detention must be held to be invalid as mala fide. The proper approach to the matter is to consider the facts of each particular case and then consider whether the order of detention was mala fide or not. Where on the basis of the grounds of detention stated against a detenu, the Court is unable to hold that the order of detention was for an ulterior purpose or collateral purpose and not for the purpose of preventing him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community, the order of detention cannot be held to be mala fide. The distinction between "preventive detention" and "punitive action" must always be kept in mind; the first has reference to a likelihood of some prejudicial activity in future, while the second has reference to some past action for which punishment is needed. Where the State Government has unequivocally stated that it is satisfied that it is necessary to pass on order of detention to prevent him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community and has also withdrawn the prosecution against him, it cannot be held that it was for any purpose other than that stated by the Government. 23 Pat 352; 6 DLR (Pat) 69, Ref. ILR 31 Pat 97: 1952 Cr LJ 493: AIR 1952 Pat 185 (FB).

——S. 3 (1) — Bona fide order — Court's power to test — Mala fide order, meaning of — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5).

The Court can examine the grounds in order to see if the order of detention is bona fide or whether the grounds on which the order of detention is founded are based on materials of rationally probative value. If the alleged grounds or the facts on which they are stated to be based, do not exist at all, then the order of detention cannot be said to be bona fide order. When it is stated that the order is mala fide, no dishonest motive is necessarily imputed. It merely means that the order is bad for want of necessary care and caution, or is for some purpose other than what is stated in the order of detention. If an order of detention is stated to be based on certain grounds but on uncontroverted facts it appears that those grounds do not really exist, then it follows that the order of detention is made for reasons other than those disclosed in the grounds; in that sense the order will be a mala fide order and will also contravene Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution. 52 Cri LJ 406: ILR 30 Pat 630: AIR 1951 Pat 47 (54) (Pt G) (Pr 20) (DB).

Where an order of detention is challenged on the ground of mala fides, what has got to be made out is not the want of bona fides on the part of the police but want of bona fides, as well as the non-application of mind, on the part of the detaining authority, viz., the Government, which for this purpose must be taken to be different from the police. Even assuming that all the cases against the detenue had ended favourably to the detenue, that would merely mean that the allegations against him were not proved. Raghava Rao J. — The failure of the Government to take steps to appeal against the order of the High Court declaring the detention order under which the detenu is detained invalid is not proof of the mala fide of the fresh order passed by it. If the Government felt satisfied about the emergency of the situation so far as to resort to the speedier course of a fresh order instead of the normal remedy of an appeal which might involve delay in making sure of the detenu if he once gets off, they may do so provided their action is well founded otherwise their failure to appeal cannot render the order invalid or illegal. 65 Mad LW 876: (1952) 2 Mad LJ 690: 1953 Cri LJ 224: AIR 1953 Mad 41 (51) (Pt G) (Pr 20) (DB).

●—S. 3 — Satisfaction of detaining authority — Mala fides — Evidence Act (1872), Sections 101 and 103.

The satisfaction of the authority making the order as to the matters specified in the Act is the only condition for the exercise of his powers and the Court cannot substitute its own satisfaction for that of the authority. It is, however, open to the detenu to establish, if he can, that the order was made mala fide and in abuse of powers and the order of detention may be declared invalid if it could be proved to have been made by the authorities concerned in mala fide exercise of their power. The burden of proving the absence of good faith is upon the detenu and it is certainly a heavy burden to discharge. Mere suspicion is, however, not proof. Ashutosh Lahiri v. —Ss. 3 (1) (a) (ii) and 4 — Mala fides — Proof — Onus — Detention — (Constitution of India, Art. 226).

It cannot be laid down as a matter of law that an order of detention under the Preventive Detention Act can, in no circumstances, be passed when a person is already in custody. Whenever a detention order is passed for the detention of a person who is already in detention, the question that would arise would be whether the detaining authority could feel satisfied that the order was necessary for the purposes of the Act. This essentially is a question the determination of which must depend on the circumstances of each case.

The necessity of the order may be questioned and it may be argued in a given case that the order is not made bona fide. An order may be challenged as having been made mala fide without imputing any improper motive to the detaining authority. An order can be said to have been made mala fide when there is malice in law though there may be no malice in fact and the malice in law may be deemed to exist when an order is made contrary to the objects and purposes of the Preventive Detention Act or when the detaining authority permits itself to be influenced by consideration which are outside the scope of the Act. In all cases where this question arises, it will have to be decided with reference to the circumstances of each case.

Petitioner was arrested and detained and a case under Section 8-B, Assam Maintenance of Public Order (Amendment) Act, 1951, was registered against him. He was, however, released on basis of a final report by police under S. 173, Cr. P. Code, which stated that though investigation had not been completed, Government had decided to drop the case as the available evidence was of such a nature that its disclosure in Court was not in the interest of State. On his release he was again arrested under an order of detention under Sections 3 (1) (a) (ii) and 4, Preventive Detention Act, which had already been passed in anticipation of his release.

Held, that in the circumstances the subsequent order of detention could not be regarded as having been made mala fide or wrong in law merely because he was not prosecuted for the specific offence for which he was arrested and the order of detention was passed while he was already in detention. The burden of proving mala fides on part of Government lay on detenu and having failed to discharge it the order could not be declared invalid. The detention orders are not mala fide simply because the District Magistrate passed them shortly after the previous detention orders were set aside by the High Court; nor can they be held to be mala fide or bad on the ground that only the past activities of the detenus were relied upon. The onus of proving mala fides of detaining authority rests on the petitioner. The facts proved by the petitioner must be such as to amount to proof of mala fides. The Court cannot base its decision on suspicion. ('52) 56 Cal WN 427: 1953 Cri LJ 310: AIR 1953 Cal 81 (83) (Pt E) (Pr 15) (DB).

—S. 3 — Mala fides — Burden of proof.

The burden of substantiating the plea that the order is mala fide is primarily upon the detenu.

The mere fact that the detenu challenges the factum or bona fides of the order or the fact that in such cases the Government is in possession of information on the subject does not shift the onus on the Government. (1942) AC 284 and AIR 1945 FC 18, Rel. on.

The sole fact that the petitioner was arrested under some provision of the ordinary law and subsequently detained under the Preventive Detention Act would not by itself make the act of the Government 'mala fide' AIR 1948 All 281 and AIR 1949 Mad 712, Rel. on. ILR (1953) Hyd 459: 1953 Cr LJ 1845: AIR 1953 Hyd 277 (279) (Pt C) (Prs 6, 6a) (DB).

The arrest of a person under Section 151, Criminal P. C., or under some other provisions of ordinary law does not preclude the exercise of the powers under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950. Nor is the mere fact that the person was first arrested under the ordinary law and later ordered to be detained in itself, sufficient to prove that the order of detention was mala fide. There must be other circumstances or evidence to show that the detaining authority acted mala fide. AIR 1948 All 281; AIR 1949 Mad 712 and AIR 1950 Mad 162, Ref.

——S. 3 — Detention under — Validity — Mala fides — Detention order pending prosecution — Burden of proof.

The detention order under Section 3 in cases where the prosecution is pending or imminent, is a serious step for the executive authorities to take. It must be made with full appreciation of the fact that the order in such cases has grave consequences on the judicial trial and must bear scrutiny of the Courts on the footing that such an order was called for notwithstanding such appreciation. A detention order passed without such appreciation may well be held to be lacking in bona fides on the facts of an individual case.

It is true that the satisfaction of the detaining authority under Section 3 of the Preventive Detention Act which has been held to be "reasonable satisfaction" is not liable to be controlled by the Courts. The issue of reasonable satisfaction is not justiciable, but the case of bona fides of the exercise of the power or the abuse of the power when raised on proper material is justiciable. A case of want of bona fides may be made out, not merely by proof that the order of detention was in fact made for ulterior purposes, that is, for purposes outside the needs of prevention, but also when the order is made without taking into consideration any important circumstances which notionally and legitimately arise for consideration, when making an order of detention in a particular case. The standing of bona fides under the penal law is defined in Section 22 of the I. P. C. as being "due care and attention". It cannot be anything less where the exercise of drastic statutory power interfering with the liberty of the citizen is concerned.

The burden of making out want of bona fides of the detention order is on the detenu though such burden of proof is not so onerous as that on the prosecution in a criminal case.

Per Das J. — I would hesitate to accept as correct the broad proposition that the power of detention cannot be exercised as against a person who is being prosecuted on the same facts which constitute the grounds of the detention and that an order of detention in such cases without making a choice between the two courses is ipso facto and without more abuse of the power of detention". Case law ref. 1952 Cri LJ 1039: ILR (1951) Cut 441: AIR 1952 Orissa 52 (56, 57, 58) (Pt A) (Prs 10, 12, 13) (DB).

——Ss. 3, 13 — Detention order — Validity — Mala fides — Burden of proof.

The burden of proving bad faith is on the detenus, and the burden is a fairly heavy burden.

When the law gives the State Government the power to issue a fresh order of detention after the revocation of the Order of the District Magistrate, the exercise of that power cannot be held to be mala fide merely because the State Government passed the orders of detention at a time when a habeas corpus application was pending in the High Court. 52 Cri LJ 603: AIR AIR 1951 Pat 68 (71) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) — Mala fide order — Onus.

The onus of showing that the order is mala fide rests on the detenu; and the onus is a heavy onus which may be very difficult to discharge. One of the ways by which a detenu can show that the order is not bona fide is by stating facts by means of an affidavit, and if those facts are uncontroverted they may be taken into consideration by the Court for the purpose of seeing if the order is bona fide or if the order is based on materials of a rationally probative value, or if the order contravenes the fundamental right guaranteed by Article 22 (5) of the Constitution. A mere denial by the detenu would not be enough to discharge the onus which rests on him; but the detenu may be in a position to state definite facts which would show that the order of detention was bad either for want of good faith, or on the ground that it was based on materials which did not at all exist in fact. 52 Cri LJ 406: ILR 30 Pat 630: AIR 1951 Pat 47 (54) (Pt H) (Pr 20) (DB).

——S. 3 — Mala fides — Onus.

The detenu can always establish that the order was made in abuse of the powers and thus mala fide, and that he was entited to his liberty and release. The onus of proof in this respect, however, is on the detenu. Mere allegations, even suspicion that the grounds are mala fide is not enough to impair the order of detention. 1961 (2) Cr LJ 547: 63 Punj LR 242.

——S. 3 (2) — Bona fides — Burden of proof.

The burden of proof is on the detenu to challenge the bona fides of the order of detention. ('51) 4 Sau LR 45 (DB).

13 (C). Mala fides — Inference.

——Ss. 3 and 9 — Mala fides — Inference of.

Where the grounds of detention are supplied to the detenu along with the order of detention in order to enable the detenu to make a representation without delay, the Government can place the case before the Advisory Board at any time within the period allowed under Section 9. The mere fact that the Government had made an undue haste in obtaining the decision of the Advisory Board for purposes of confirming the order of detention cannot lead to inference of mala fide on part of Government especially when there is no allegation of any violation of any provision of the Act. 1953 Cr LJ 770: ILR (1953) 5 Assam 66: AIR 1953 Assam 97 (100) (Pt C) (Pr 22).

——S. 3 — Detention order — Allegation of bad faith of authority — Prior unsuccessful criminal proceeding not sufficient basis.

Allegation of bad faith is quite easy to make but very difficult to substantiate. The mere circumstance that some of the particulars in this case related to facts which formed the basis of prior unsuccessful criminal proceedings will not necessarily lead to the inference that there was bad faith on the part of the detaining authority. To hold that bad faith was established the Court would require very much more than that. AIR 1952 Cal 26, Rel. on. 1963 (2) Cri LJ 499: AIR 1963 Cal 589 (591) (Pt D) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 3 (2) — Mala fide orders — Order of detention after release in Criminal case.

Where persons are detained in prison upon criminal charges it would be unnecessary to make any orders of detention, because whilst they were in prison they would be safe and would be unable to commit any acts of a subversive nature. Once an order for their release was passed whether by way of a discharge or by granting bail, different considerations would arise. Such person would be at large, and if they were dangerous, the fact that they were discharged in some criminal case or the fact that they had been granted bail would in no way prevent them from carrying dangerous activities. The very circumstances would by themselves justify the making of the order for detention which up to then would have been unnecessary if it was honestly believed that the person detained under the order was dangerous. It cannot be inferred that the orders were mala fide merely because they were made when it became clear that the detained person would be released from custody. To hold that the orders were mala fide, something more than these mere circumstances would have to be established. 1953 Cri LJ 361: AIR 1953 Cal 129 (134) (Pt D) (Prs 34, 35) (DB).

——S. 3 — Person arrested and detained in police custody with intention of being prosecuted for certain crime — Government changing its mind and preventively detaining him — Detention is not mala fide.

The Government have the choice either to prosecute the person arrested or to preventively detain him. Where a person is arrested and kept in police custody under lawful orders of remand in connection with a certain incident, for the purposes of investigation and ultimately prosecuting him, but subsequently the Government decides to preventively detain him and drop further criminal proceeding against him, the fact that he was interrogated while in police custody prior to the serving of the detention order on him does not show that the detention was for some collateral purpose and mala fide. ——S. 3 — Mala fides — Inference of — Acquittal of detenu in criminal trial—Action under Act — If mala fide.

Even after the acquittal of the detenu in a regular criminal trial Government can proceed to take action under the Preventive Detention Act. The action under the Act after the acquittal does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the action of the Government is mala fide. MBLR 1955 Cr 265: Madh BLJ 1955 HCR 30: AIR 1955 MB 65 (66) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 3 — Mala fides — Inference — Detention order against candidate for election passed by Home Secretary without approval of Minister-in-charge due to urgency, minister-in-charge being outside station — Subsequent approval by minister — Procedure in accordance with pre-existing practice — Order though illegal having been passed without legal authority, could not be challenged on grounds of mala fides. 1953 Cr LJ 349: 19 Cut LT 58: AIR 1953 Orissa 33 (36) (Pt B) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 3 — Mala fides.

Preventive justice in all cases must proceed to a ceratin extent upon suspicion or anticipation as distinct from proof. For passing an order for detention it is really the satisfaction of the Magistrate which is necessary. If the police have sufficient material to satisfy him he can act under the Act, even though there is no detailed evidence of the type on which a Court of law can convict an accused. Hence the fact that the police were unable to furnish a detailed report till a date very near the one on which the order was passed cannot lead to the inference that the order was passed mala fides in the absence of materials. 1952 Cri LJ 543: AIR 1951 Pat 439 (2) (442) (Pt D) (Pr 6) (DB).

14. Defence of India — Relations with foreign powers.

——S. 3 — 'Foreign power' — Meaning of — Pakistan — Effect of order passed by Governor-General under Art. 392 (3) of the Constitution.

On a correct interpretation of the meaning of the words 'the relations of India with foreign powers' in Section 3, Pakistan must be regarded as a foreign power, although that country may be a part of the Commonwealth as India is. Apart from its membership of the Commonwealth, the independent sovereign status of Pakistan is the same as the sovereign status of any country outside the Commonwealth. The Constitution (Declaration as to Foreign States) Order, 1950, made under Article 392 (3) read with Article 367 (3) does not take Pakistan outside the category of a foreign power. The Order only declared that a country within the Commonwealth would not be a Foreign State for the purposes of the Constitution. It cannot be brought into aid for the purposes of construing the expression 'foreign affairs' appearing in Item 9 of List I of the Seventh Schedule and the expression 'foreign powers' in Section 3 of the Act. These expressions must be construed in the ordinary way giving the words their ordinary meaning. There is, therefore, no doubt that Pakistan is a foreign power. Jagan Nath Sathu v. ——S. 3 — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5) — Ground of detention — Whether punitive — Rational connection with objects of detention.

The objects of the appellant's detention were to prevent him from acting in a manner prejudicial to (1) the security of India and (2) her relations with foreign powers. One of the grounds communicated to the appellant was in these terms.

"That you addressed a Press Conference at New Delhi on 18th day of February, 1956, which was attended by a large body of Press Correspondents of foreign countries and that you made a speech (copy of contents of which is hereto annexed) containing various false statements about the conditions of the people of Kashmir. The combined effect of these statements is prejudicial to the security of India and to the relations of India with foreign powers."

● ——S. 3 (1) (a) (ii) and (2) — Scope — Detention on ground of speeches prejudicial to the security of the State or the maintenance of public order — Failure to indicate passages in speeches considered objectionable — If renders detention illegal — Constitution of India (1950), Articles 19 and 22 (5).

An order of detention made under sub-s. (2) read with Cl. (a), sub-clause (ii) of sub-s. (1) of S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act was attacked on the ground that it was illegal as it was based on the ground of making speeches prejudicial to the security of the State or the maintenance of public order and that the grounds of detention failed to indicate the objectionable passages and thereby failed to comply with the requirements of Cl. (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution.

Held: (By the Full Court) It cannot be said that the detention would be illegal and ultra vires because it was based on the ground of making speeches prejudicial to the security of the State or the maintenance of public order. The validity of the detention is governed by the decision in A. K. Gopalan's Case, AIR 1950 SC 27 notwithstanding that the detenus' right under Art. 19 (1) (e) of the Constitution is abridged as a result of their detention under the Act.

(2) Per Kania, C. J., Patanjali Sastri and Das, JJ. (Mehrchand and Vivian Bose, JJ., contra):— To hold that Art. 22 (5) requires that, wherever detention is grounded on alleged prejudicial speeches the detaining authority should indicate to the person detained the passages which it regards as objectionable, would rob the provisions of the Act of much of their usefulness in the very class of cases where those provisions were primarily intended to be used and where their use would be most legitimate. It is difficult to see how the communication of particular passages or their substance is necessary in addition to the particulars already given to enable the detenus to make their representations. The requirements of Art. 22 (5) must be held to be sufficiently complied with where the time and place at which the speeches were alleged to have been made were specified and their general nature and effect was also stated even though the objectionable passages had not been indicated in the grounds of detention.

Mehrchand Mahajan, J.:— In the absence of any indication in the grounds as to the nature of the words used by the detenus in their speeches from which an inference has been drawn against them they would not be able to furnish a proper defence to the charge made against them. The detention order is therefore, illegal. Ram Singh v. ——S. 3 — Grounds for detention — Criticism of Government — (Constitution of India, Art. 19).

Criticism of the Government however, strong it may be or deprecating the action of the Government is not to be regarded as a justifying ground of taking action under the Preventive Detention Act, unless it is such as to undermine security or would tend to overthrow the Government. Freedom of speech and of the press lies at the foundation of all democracy. Disapprobation and criticism of any policy or administrative action of the Government with a view to obtaining redress by lawful means cannot be regarded as an act which is likely to create disaffection in the minds of the people so as to result in disturbance of public safety and the maintenance of public order. ILR (1953) Hyd 568: 1954 Cri LJ 52: AIR 1953 Hyd 295 (296) (Pr 7) (DB).

● ——S. 3 (1) (a) (ii) — Political party attempting to raise army — Matter affects security of State.

Per Mudholkar J.:— An attempt by a political party to raise a people's army is nothing short of setting the stage for a Civil War. It is one thing for the Government established by law to raise any force, be it the regular army or the territorial army or the Home Guards, but it is indubitably a different matter if the various political parties started having armies of their own and it is the primary duty of every Government to prevent it. Moreover, such an activity on the part of a member of the party contravenes the Arms Act. Connection between them and order — Nature of.

Where "maintenance of public order" is the reason mentioned in the order of detention of a detenu, the Court is entitled to examine the grounds to see whether there is any direct and causal connection between them and the maintenance of public order. If there is no direct and causal connection between them and the maintenance of public order, then the position that will follow is that it cannot be assumed, as a matter of course, that the detaining authority exercised its mind in an intelligent manner in regard to the case against the detenu and inasmuch as it did not do so it cannot be said to have acted in law honestly. 52 Cri LJ 732: ILR (1951) 2 All 493: AIR 1950 All 709 (711) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——S. 3 — Detention for preserving public order — Threat or force in exercise of civil right — May be sufficient ground.

——S. 3 — Public disorder of less serious character — Is covered by S. 3.

There is a dividing line between serious and aggravated forms of public disorder which are calculated to endanger the security of the State and the relatively minor breaches of the peace of purely local significance. Public order is certainly vulnerable to individual acts of lawessness some of which may be of a less serious character others of an aggravated nature. 1950 SCJ 418; (1950) 2 Mad LJ 390; AIR 1950 SC 124, Rel. on. 1962 (1) Cri LJ 311: ILR (1961) 1 Cal 276: AIR 1962 Cal 162 (164) (Pt D) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) (a) (ii) — Disturbance of public order — What constitutes — Public order may be disturbed even by ordinary case of breach of peace.

Maintenance of public order has been distinguished from security of the State or public safety. Security of the State may be endangered only by widespread public disorder, but public order may be disturbed even by an ordinary case of breach of public tranquillity or an ordinary case of the breach of the peace. Where the grounds taken collectively are certainly relevant to the question, the High Court is not concerned with the question whether the conduct of the petitioner constitutes a threat to the maintenance of the public order. The High Court is only concerned with the question whether the grounds are relevant to the object of the detention. The question whether the grounds are sufficient is not for the High Court to consider. AIR 1962 Cal 162, Rel. on. 1962 (1) Cri LJ 279: AIR 1962 Cal 119 (122) (Pt F) (Pr 10) (DB).

——S. 3 — "Public order" — Connotation of the term, indicated — Grounds of detention held outside scope of S. 3 — Detention held bad.

Condition that must exist before the power is exercised under S. 3 is that the District Magistrate must be satisfied that to prevent the person concerned from acting in a manner prejudicial inter alia to the maintenance of public order, it is necessary to detain that person.

The term "public order" is synonymous with public safety and tranquillity; it is the absence of disorder involving breaches of local significance in contradistinction to national upheavals, such as revolution, civil strife, war affecting the security of the state. AIR 1950 SC 124; AIR 1950 SC 128; AIR 1960 SC 633, Rel. on.

There must be a proximate or reasonable nexus between the activities alleged against the person concerned and the objective of S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, namely the maintenance of public order, in other words, the absence of disorder involving breaches of peace of local significance, as contradistinguished from national upheavals affecting the security of the nation. AIR 1946 Bom 32, Rel. on; AIR 1949 Pat 209; AIR 1950 Mad 266; AIR 1950 East Punj 172 and AIR 1960 Punjab 332, Ref.

Statutes, such as the Preventive Detention Act, conferring extra-ordinary powers of arrest and detention on mere suspicion or anticipation and not on legal evidence are obviously intended not as substitutes for ordinary trials or ordinary Courts, but are intended to deal with emergencies stated in the Act, one of which is the maintenance of public order. Ordinarily, a single offence or several offences dealt with by Penal Code or other penal statutes cannot be held to affect prejudicially the maintenance of public order to an extent which would call for the exercise of this extraordinary power. In a given situation, however, even a single act or series of acts might put in jeopardy the maintenance of public order and call for the exercise of this extraordinary power. When the authorities find that the maintenance of order and tranquillity are in danger and the normal administrative machinery is not sufficient or in a position to cope with such a situation such power can certainly and justifiably within the extent and scope of the Act, be exercised.

Held, that the grounds stated in the order were not within the scope of S. 3 and were in fact de hors it and therefore, the detention was illegal. (1965) 6 Guj LR 632: ILR (1965) Guj 644.

It is true that meeting a dacoit or making efforts, to get a person arrested for the offence of dacoity released on bail is not per se an act prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. But if a person associates himself actively with named, notorious and proclaimed dacoits and gangs of dacoits, aids, abets and harbours them in various ways, extracts money from the relations of person held to ransom by the dacoits and terrorises witnesses from giving evidence against persons accused of serious offences, then his activities are prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. A ground of detention containing a statement of fact showing the association of the detenu with such dacoits would, therefore, be a relevant ground. Madh BLR (1954) Cr 108: 1954 Cri LJ 1062: Madh BLJ 1954 HCR 582: ILR (1954) Madh Bha 445: AIR 1954 MB 125 (127) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

Merely because a person is of a dangerous character or is breaking the law in one manner or the other it does not mean that the maintenance of public order is being threatened unless the activities are of such a nature and the situation prevailing in a particular part of the country is such that if he is not detained, the maintenance of public order cannot be maintained or it would be endangered. If the local police is helpless in securing conviction successfully with regard to a person who is committing thefts and is indulging in gambling, drinking, assaults, etc., it does not mean that resort can be had to the provisions of the Preventive Detention Act in normal conditions unless some special circumstances exist which would show that the maintenance of tranquillity in the community would be prejudiced or endangered unless that person is detained. While it is true that the High Court has always to keep in view the object of detention in order to assess its relation or relevance to the particulars upon which the order is based, acts apparently sporadic and casual committed by a person in a particular locality, time and again are bound to have repercussions on public order. It would be an extreme proposition to hold that in no case can a person be preventively detained when acts of lawlessness are alleged against him which acts take place within months of each other and which have a certain family likeness demonstrating a tendency on the part of the person concerned to behave in a particular manner which is calculated to affect the peace of the locality. ——S. 3 — Application of Act to prevent commission of dacoities by gang — When permissible — Preventive detention solely on ground of relationship with dacoit — If legal.

The Preventive Detention Act is for several emergencies, among which one is prejudice to the maintenance of public order. Normally, a single dacoity or a number of dacoities cannot be held to affect prejudicially the maintenance of public order to an extent calling for the application of the Act. Such happenings are dealt with, either under the penal provisions against the formation of gangs, preparations to commit a dacoity or dacoity itself or under the preventive sections of the Criminal P. C. It is, however, possible, that with a single, or a number of gangs, acting in co-ordination, over extensive areas, maintenance of public order is so prejudiced as to call for application of this extraordinary law. When the executive authorities find that activities of the gang are so widespread as to have virtually annihilated or completely disarmed the normal administrative machinery, they may invoke the Preventive Detention Act.

At the same time, the detaining authority should act bona fide, in other words, after a fair and unprejudiced consideration of the allegation. This is particularly so, when one of the grounds is that the detenu is related to a proclaimed offender, against whom there are several cases of dacoity. It is possible that by exercising pressure on a relation a really dangerous man can be controlled, especially in a primitive society where family and clan-ties are very strong; but to punish or impose disabilities on a person solely on the ground of relationship, is against all the principles of modern jurisprudence. There should be something more definite. The allegation that he is co-operating with a dacoit is much too general.

Preventive detention is not a device to evade the scrutiny of the ordinary criminal Courts into allegations that the detaining authority itself does not seem to believe. AIR 1952 Vindh Pra 36 (37, 38) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 9, 10, 16).

The object of the Government in passing the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act (1946) and regulating the control of production and distribution of certain essential commodities, including iron and steel, was to ensure a fair and equitable distribution among the public. Where the activities carried on by the detenu were such as to interfere with the scheme underlying the Act and the Government orders they can rightly be regarded as prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies of essential commodities to the community. 1951 ALJ 203: 52 Cri LJ 3: AIR 1951 All 838 (845) (Pt E) (Pr 30) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) — Detention under — Validity — Smuggling and blackmarketing in rice if prejudicial to maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community.

The petitioner was arrested and detained under S. 3 (1) (a) (iii), Preventive Detention Act for action prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community. The grounds of detention served on him alleged that the petitioner was smuggling rice into his mill and was carrying on black-marketing activities in rice on a large scale in the course of which he was estimated to have made illegal profits amounting to about five lakhs of rupees.

Held, that the grounds alleged against the petitioner came within the scope of S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) Preventive Detention Act and as such the detention was not illegal. ('52) 1952 Cri LJ 306: AIR 1952 Mad 157 (158) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) — Applicability — Hoarding and selling in black-market foodgrains — Order of detention — If justified.

There can be no doubt that both hoarding and selling in the black-market foodgrains, are prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies essential to the community. From the emphasis laid on the words essential to the community, it can be safely predicated that selling in the black-market amounts to interfering with the normal supply to the community at large. Nor can it be said that preventive detention as a measure of social control with a view to safeguard the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community is beyond the range of reasonable restrictions on the citizen's right to personal liberty and freedom; the principle of reasonable restriction or reasonableness of law imposing restriction upon the liberty of citizens has no application to the laws prescribing preventive detention. ——S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) — "Maintenance of supplies and services essential to community" — Supply of cloth and commodities are included in the clause.

The word 'supplies' carries with it the meaning "to fill the needs of or to supply provisions to the community": in other words, the meaning of the words "maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community" in Cl. (iii) of S. 3 (1) (a) must "be the upkeep of the needs and the provisions essential to the community". This is the only proper meaning, which follows not only from grammatical construction, but also from the context in which the words have been used. The supply of cloth fills an essential need of the community and is a service to it. Any interference with such supply and service will be prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community. Where with regard to an essential commodity there is a system of controls, on which the maintenance of supplies and services depends, evasion of the control orders will prejudicially affect the maintenance or upkeep of the supplies and services essential to the community. The view point that the action of a petty shop-keeper will not prejudicially affect the maintenance of supplies and services, fails to take note of the control system; and further, if a number of petty shop-keepers indulge in similar activities, there will, undoubtedly be an artificial scarcity in cloth.

It is not open to the Court to consider the difference in degree, and treat some prejudicial activities as coming within the expression and some as not coming within it, though in the ordinary grammatical sense they all come within the expression. 30 Patna 630; 30 Pat 716, Approved.

——S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) — Blackmarketing and hoarding whether affect maintenance of essential supplies and service.

In S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) not only the word "supplies" but also the word "services" has been used. A supply of food or cloth which is essential to the community has a service aspect as well. The use of the word "maintenance" has also to be appreciated. Hence, the acts of black-marketing or hoarding must affect the maintenance of supply and service essential to the community. AIR 1951 Pat 47, Foll.

The words 'hoarding' and 'black-marketing' have a definite meaning in the context of a system of controls, such as will be found in the Foodgrains Control Order, the Cloth and Yarn Control Order and other Control Orders of a similar nature. The maintenance of supplies of food and cloth depends on this system of controls, and anybody who evades the Control Orders by hoarding (e. g. secreting part of the stock by making false entries in the stock register, or showing fictitious sales, etc.) or blackmarketing (e.g., selling at rate higher than the controlled rate) clearly acts in a manner which directly jeopardises the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community. 52 Cri LJ 1231: ILR 30 Pat 653: AIR 1951 Pat 153 (154, 156) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 7) (DB).

● ——S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) — "Maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community" — Adulteration of food stuffs.

The plain duty of the Court is to consider the words in the Act as they stand and give to them their ordinary meaning. The words "maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community" themselves have to be construed independently of what is stated in items 3 and 18 in the Concurrent List of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution and what is contained in R. 81 of the Defence of India Rules. The words cannot reasonably carry the meaning that any one who adulterated foodstuffs would be acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies or the continuity of supplies.

Where the facts stated in the orders of detention were that one R manufactured flour in a Mill B stored stone powder and mixing was done at the house of one M and that these persons entered into a conspiracy to profiteer by sale of flour at the expense of the health of the community.

Held, that the conduct of the persons did not come within the meaning of the words in Section 3 (1) (a) (iii), and the detention must be held to be illegal. 52 Cri LJ 1175: ILR 30 Pat 716: AIR 1951 Pat 134 (135, 136) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 9, 10) (FB).

——S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) — Interpretation of.

The word "and" between the words "supplies" and "services" is not used in any restrictive sense, but in a comprehensive sense. The manifest intention of Parliament, therefore in the use of the expression "maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community" in Section 3 (1) (a) (iii) is to provide for preventive detention for reasons connected with the maintenance of supplies essential to the community or the maintenance of services essential to the community or both.

Hence any activity which directly interferes with or threatens the maintenance of the supply of such primary necessities of life as food or cloth attracts the operation of S. 3 (1) (a) (iii). The supply of an essential commodity cannot be contemplated as entirely divorced from service; because an essential supply is a service to the community. Thus any apprehended act of black-marketing or hoarding will directly affect maintenance of supply and service essential to the community. 52 Cri LJ 406: ILR 30 Pat 630: AIR 1951 Pat 47 (50, 51) (Pt A) (Prs 9, 10, 11) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) (a), Cls. (ii) and (iii) — Clauses whether to be construed on principle of ejusdem generis.

Section 3 (1) (a) (iii) need not be construed on the principle of ejusdem generis as being related to Cl. (ii) which precedes Cl. (iii) and which relates to the security of the State or the maintenance of public order. The ejusdem generis rule is one to be appiled with great caution and not pushed too far. Where the words are clearly wide in their meaning, they ought not to be qualified on the ground of their association with other words. Hence the contention that the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community referred to in Cl. (iii) must have some relation to the maintenance of public order or the security of State mentioned in the preceding Cl. (ii) cannot be accepted as it leads to a narrow construction of Cl. (iii). 52 Cri LJ 406: ILR 30 Pat 630: AIR 1951 Pat 47 (52) (Pt C) (Pr 13) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) — "Maintenance of supplies and Services' — Meaning — Words and Phrases — 'And' 'Services'.

Though in order to give effect to the real intention of the legislature it may sometimes be necessary to hold that the conjunction "and" means "or" or vice versa it is clear by reading the whole of Cl. (a) and by comparing the words of sub-clauses, that the word "and' used in the expression 'maintenance of supplies and services' is used in the ordinary sense. Where, therefore, a person is detained under sub-clause (iii) of

Cl. (a) of S. 3 the detaining authority must be satisfied that the detention is essential with a view to preventing the person concerned from acting in any manner prejudicial to the maintenance of suppiles as well as services essential to the community.

It is true that one of the meanings of the word "service" is occupation or status of a servant, and when used in plural it can mean persons holding a particular occupation or members of a particular department but since supplies and services are bracketed together and the object of the legislature appears to be to keep intact their maintenance the word "services" as used in sub-clause (iii) merely means the means and methods necessary for regulating and maintaining supplies of some general demand. 52 Cri LJ 1438: AIR 1951 Pepsu 164 (168) (Pt C) (Prs 12. 13) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) — Applicability — Order detaining person selling soda ash at more than controlled price — If ultra vires — Soda ash — If essential commodity — View of executive — If subject to review by Court.

An order of the District Magistrate directing the detention of a person engaged in activities relating to the sale of soda ash at a price higher than its controlled price falls within the purview of S. 3 (1) (a) (iii), Preventive Detention Act and is not ultra vires. Because of the use the soda ash is put to, it is difficult to say that the District Magistrate is wrong in holding that it is an essential commodity.

As essential commodities have not been defined, what is regarded by the executive as an essential commodity must be subject to review by the Courts, though no doubt proper weight would be attached to the views of the Executive if supported by proper materials. 54 PLR 88: 1952 Cri LJ 416: AIR 1952 Punj 124 (128) (Pt A) (Pr 12) (DB).

Where the information obtained by the District Magistrate is that acting in his capacity as licensed wholesale dealer in food grains, the detenu sold such grains in the black market which implies that he parted with grain in favour of persons who did not have permits for purchasing such grains from him or who did not have ration cards for purchasing such stock or to persons possessing such permits or ration cards in excess of the quantity lawfully allotted to them, such conduct will certainly be prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies essential to the community. The order of detention made by the District Magistrate in those circumstances cannot be characterised as arbitrary and is warranted by the provisions of the Act. The information supplied to the detenu under S. 7 in such a case cannot be said to be too vague to be acted upon or to be answered effectively by the detenu. ('50) 1950 KLT 723: 52 Cri LJ 1089: ILR (1951) Trav-Co 1: AIR 1951 Trav-Co 217 (219, 220) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 10) (DB).

18. Arrangements for expulsion.

●——S. 3 (1) (b) — Applicability — Detention of foreigner to enforce order of expulsion — Nature and validity of (Foreigners Act (1946), Ss. 3 (2) (c) and 11 (1)).

The right to make arrangements for an expulsion includes the right to make arrangements for preventing any evasion or breach of the order, and the Preventive Detention Act confers the power to use the means of preventive detention as one of the methods of achieving this end. How far it is necessary to take this step in a given case is a matter that must be left to the discretion of the Government concerned, but in any event, when criminal charges for offences said to have been committed in his country and abroad are levelled against a person, an apprehension that he is likely to disappear and evade an order of expulsion cannot be called either unfounded or unreasonable. Detention in such circumstances can be rightly termed preventive and falls within the ambit of the Preventive Detention Act and is reasonably related to the purpose of the Act. Superintendent, Presidency Jail, Calcutta, 1955 SCA 487: (1955) 1 MLJ (SC) 188: 1955 Cr LJ 876: (1955) 1 SCR 1284: 1955 An WR (SC) 188: 1955 Mad WN 478: 1955 SCJ 324: AIR 1955 SC 367 (371) (Pt B) (Pr 20).

●——S. 3 (1) (b) — Detention by State Government before order of expulsion — Validity of.

The right to satisfy itself that the drastic method of preventive detention is necessary to enable suitable arrangements for expulsion to be made is expressly conferred on the State Government by Section 3 (1) (b) and as a State Government cannot expel, the conferral of the right can only mean that the State Government is given the power to decide and to satisfy itself whether expulsion is desirable or necessary, and if it thinks it is, then to detain until proper arrangements for the expulsion are made, one of them, and an essential one, being reference to the Central Government for final orders. Unless a State Government has authority to act in anticipation of orders from the Centre, it might be too late to act at all. It cannot, therefore, be argued that the arrangements contemplated by Section 3 (1) must follow and not precede the order, especially as they involve curtailment of a man's personal liberty. The Foreigners Act is not governed by the provisions of the Extradition Act. The two are distinct and neither impinges on the other. Even if there is a requisition and good case for extradition, Government is not bound to accede to the request. It is given an unfettered right to refuse under Section 3 (1) of the Extradition Act. Therefore, if it chooses not to comply with the request for extradition, the person against whom the request is made cannot insist that it should. The right is not his; and the fact that a request has been made does not fetter the discretion of Government to choose the less cumbrous procedure of the Foreigners Act when a foreigner is concerned provided always, that in that event the person concerned leaves India a free man. If no choice had been left to the Government, the position would have been different but as Government is given the right to choose, no question of want of good faith can arise merely because it exercises the right of choice which the law confers in ordering detention of the person under Section 3 (1) (b) of the Preventive Detention Act. ——S. 3 — General order by State Government directing that detenus were liable to be detained in specified jails — Power of detaining authority to direct detention of person in one of them.

The detaining authority can direct the detention of a person in its own jurisdiction where the local Government has, by a general order, specified that the detenu can be detained in a jail which is within the jurisdiction of the detaining authority. Just as when a person is convicted, no order is required from anybody and the Court which convicts an accused person can send him to the prison within its jurisdiction for undergoing the sentence, similarly the detaining authority is empowered to send him in a jail where by a general order the State Government has directed the detenus were liable to be detained. 53 Bom LR 717: 21 Bom Cr C 210: 1952 Cri LJ 81: ILR (1952) Bom 134: AIR 1952 Bom 1 (11) (Pt H) (Pr 22) (DB).

——S. 3 (2) — Order of detention passed by Deputy Commissioner — Legality — Presumption of regularity — (Evidence Act (1872), Section 114).

As Section 3 (2) only authorises particular officers to make the order of detention, an order would not be a good order if made by some other officer. Under the said sub-section not only the satisfaction must be the satisfaction of one of the officers named therein but the order directing a person to be detained must be an order made by one of such officers. An order, therefore, made by a Deputy Commissioner as such and not as a District Magistrate is without jurisdiction, even if the order states that it was being made under Section 3 (1) (a) (iii) of the Act and the doctrine of presumption of regularity cannot be invoked for presuming that the Deputy Commissioner acted in his capacity as a District Magistrate. 58 CWN 363: 1954 Cr LJ 1496: AIR 1954 Cal 518 (519) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Ss. 3 and 5 — Illegality of arrest — Detention not per se invalid.

The illegality of the arrest does not per se make the order of detention invalid.

Where it is the propriety and legality of the detention within the jurisdiction of the State Government which is in controversy there is no reason why the State Government cannot detain the detenu at a jail, which is within its jurisdiction on valid grounds. The fact that at the time the order was made, the would-be detenu was residing outside the territorial jurisdiction of the State of West Bengal, the Government whereof made the order is not material. ——Ss. 3 and 5 — Relative scope of — Detenu arrested in French territory — Detention by Government within jurisdiction — Validity.

There is no reason why the State Government cannot detain a detenu within its jurisdiction on grounds which are neither vague nor irrelevant and which in the opinion of the State Government imperil the security of the State or the maintenance of public order, although the would-be detenu was arrested in French territory by virtue of an order passed by the State Government. The illegality of the arrest does not make the order of detention illegal. In a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, it is the propriety and legality of the detention within the jurisdiction of the State Government which is in controversy.

Section 5 of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, as amended by Act 4 of 1951, plainly provides for passing an order of detention of the would-be detenu even though he is outside the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the Government, which may mean either the Central or the State Government. This connotes the exercise of the power of detention of a "person to be detained", i.e., the would-be detenu even when he is in a foreign territory. The section does not draw any distinction between deliberate and unintentional exercise of extra-territorial powers. The use of the word "merely" was not intended to restrict the exercise of extra-territorial powers. The word "merely" was used for an entirely different purpose, viz., that a detention order, otherwise valid, cannot be challenged solely on the grounds specified in S. 5 (a) and (b). Sections 3-A, 4 (a) and (b) cannot be read as limiting the scope of Section 5. 56 CWN 427: 54 Cr LJ 310: AIR 1953 Cal 81 (84, 85) (Pt H) (Prs 36, 41, 42, 43, 47, 52, 54, 55) (DB).

The State of Bombay cannot, for the purpose of Preventive Detention Act, pass orders for detaining a person found within its territory for his activities in the State of Madras or direct that such a person be interned in the State of Madras. Therefore, when the Commissioner of Police, Bombay arrested and detained a person as he was wanted by the Madras Police for detention, the arrest and detention are illegal. Where such a person is transferred to the State of Madras under Section 2 of the Transfer of Detained Persons Act and after such transfer the Commissioner of Police, Bombay cancels the order of detention he would be entitled to be released and the order of detention cannot be validated by the Madras Government by serving a fresh order of detention without first releasing him. 64 Mad LW 142: 1951 Mad WN 81: 52 Cri LJ 94: (1950) 1 Mad LJ 174: 1951 Mad WN (Cri) 21: AIR 1951 Mad 583 (585, 588, 589) (Prs 6, 13, 14, 15) (DB).

The defence of India, the relations of India with foreign powers or the security of India is a matter regarding which a District Magistrate under Section 3 (2) of the Preventive Detention Act cannot make an order of detention. If there are a number of grounds for detention by the District Magistrate some intra vires and some extra vires the District Magistrate, and it cannot be said that the grounds extra vires did not prevail on him when he made the order, the order of detention cannot be regarded as intra vires the District Magistrate and is bad. 52 PLR 429: 52 Cr LJ 17: AIR 1951 Simla 157 (159, 160) (Pt D) (Pr 5) (DB).

21. "Forthwith."

●——Ss. 3 (2), (3) and 7 — Past activities — If could be ground for future detention —Duty to report 'forthwith' to the State Government the fact of passing orders for detention — Scope.

"Forthwith" in Section 3 (3) of the Preventive Detention Act cannot mean the same thing as "as soon as may be" in Section 7, and the former is more peremptory than the latter. The difference between the two expressions lies in this that while under Section 7 the time that is allowed to the authority to send the communication to the detenu is what is reasonably convenient, under Section 3 (3), what is allowed is only the period during which he could not, without any fault of his own send the report. Under Section 7 the question is whether the time taken for communicating the grounds is reasonably requisite. Under Section 3 (3) it is whether the report has been sent at the earliest point of time possible, and when there is an interval of time between the date of the order and the date of the report, what has to be considered is whether the delay in sending the report could have been avoided. On the facts it was found that the delay between 13th January, 1956 when orders were passed and the 21st January, 1956 when the reports to the State Government were made could not have been avoided by the Commissioner of Police, Bombay as the Commissioner and his staff were busy in spotting and rounding up the miscreants during the unusual and tense situation in Bombay caused by disturbances. In the circumstances it was held that the reports were sent 'forthwith' within the meaning of S. 3 (3) of the Preventive Detention Act.

What a person is likely to do in future can only be a matter of inference from various circumstances and his past record will be valuable, and often the only record on which it could be made. Accordingly, it cannot be contended that past activities could not constitute grounds for detention in future. Keshav Nilkanth Joglekar v. The Commissioner of Police, Greater Bombay, 1957 MPC 49: 1956 SCJ 715: 1956 SCA 1123: 1957 Cr LJ 10: 1957 All LJ 132: 1956 SCR 653: 1957 BLJR 260: 59 Bom LR 87: 1957 All WR (HC) 144: AIR 1957 SC 28 (30 to 33) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 8, 10, 11, 13).

●——S. 3 (3) — Non-compliance with —Effect — "Forthwith" — Meaning — Words and Phrases.

Where the order of detention is made by a subordinate authority, it is essential that the reports of the fact together with the grounds on which the order has been made, should be furnished to the State Government as soon as possible. The Legislature has used the expression "forthwith", but "forthwith" cannot in the context mean "instanter". It means "in a reasonable time", as soon as the party who is to perform the act can reasonably perform it. "Forthwith" has practically the same significance as the other expression used in Section 7, "as soon as may be", and again it is a question of fact as to whether in a particular case the subordinate authority has complied with this mandatory provision of the statute. A non-compliance with this provision would result in the detention being invalid.

The grounds and particulars by the subordinate authority should be furnished to the State Government before the grounds are furnished to the detenu.

Although the furnishing of the grounds to the detenu may take some time, no time need be taken as far as the furnishing of the grounds and particulars under Section 3 (3) is concerned, because whereas in the case of the former the grounds would have to be formulated and the detaining authority would have to consider what materials should be held back in public interest, no such question would arise in the case of the latter. 22. Report to State.

——Ss. 3 (3) and 7 (1)—Grounds of detention communicated to detenu under S. 7 — If to be sent to the State Government along with the report under S. 3 (3).

Section 3 (3) of the Preventive Detention Act requires the authority to communicate the grounds of its order to the State Government, so that the latter might satisfy itself whether detention should be approved. Section 7 requires the statement of grounds to be sent to the detenu so that he might make a representation against the order. The purpose of the two sections is so different that it cannot be presumed that the expression "the grounds on which the order has been made" is used in Section 3 (3) in the same sense which it bears in Section 7. The communication that has to be served on the detenu under Section 7 of the Act is a formal document setting out the grounds for that order and the particulars in support therefor, subject of course, to Section 7 (2); whereas the reports to the State under Section 3 (3) is a less formal document in the nature of a confidential inter-departmental communication, which is to contain the particulars on which the order was made. It could not have been intended that the contents of the two communications which are so dissimilar in their scope and intendment should be identical. The grounds are conclusions of facts and not a complete detailed recital of all the facts.

Accordingly the failure on the part of the Authority to send along with his report under Section 3 (3) the very grounds which he subsequently communicated to the detenu under Section 7 is not a breach of the requirements of that sub-section and it was sufficiently complied with when he reported the materials on which he made the order. 23. "Approval".

——S. 3 (3) — Essentials — Approval based on incorrect considerations — Validity.

The approval that the Parliament required from the State Government under Section 3 (3) is an approval arrived at after considerations of all relevant and material circumstances. It is not a mechanical approval; it is an approval which requires a certain mental process and that mental process can only be possible provided not only relevant and proper materials are placed before the Government, but also correct facts are placed before the Government. If the Court is satisfied that the State Government gave its approval on incorrect facts placed before it, then the approval is vitiated by extraneous factors and it cannot be an approval required by law.

Held, on facts, that the order of detention made by the Police Commissioner was bad by reason of the fact that an important ground mentioned was not a correct ground also by reason of the fact that the detaining authority did not and could not apply its mind to the relevant circumstances which were required by law and finally for the reason that the approval given by the State Government was not a proper approval. 1956 Cr LJ 875: ILR (1956) Bom 792: 58 Bom LR 473: AIR 1956 Bom 490 (493) (Pt E) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Ss. 3, 7 and 12 — Grounds supplied to detenu must be connected with preventive order — Failure to establish such connection — Right of detenu — Constitution of India, Art. 22.

The grounds supplied to a detenu must be connected with the order of preventive detention. If it is found that they are not so connected, it cannot be said that the requirements of Art. 22 (1), (3), (5) of the Constitution of India had been complied with. Failure to establish a connection between them and the order of detention would make the order invalid. Thus, it is open to a detained person to contend before the Court that the grounds on which the order has been made have no connection at all with the maintenance of public order or have no connection with the circumstances or class of cases under which a preventive detention order could be supported under Section 12, Preventive Detention Act, 1950. 52 Cri LJ 732: ILR (1951) 2 All 493: AIR 1950 All 709 (713) (Pt D) (Pr 14).

person was an incorrigible smuggler, as his smuggling activities continued even in June and July, 1951.

——Ss. 3 and 7 — Grounds — Sufficiency — Extent of facts or particulars to be disclosed — Right of detenu — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (6).

The grounds which have to be furnished to a detenu must be not only the words of the Section under which action has been taken, but must disclose to him the facts upon which action has been taken, though it is not necessary for the detaining authority to disclose such facts as in his opinion, would be against the public interest to disclose, in view of Art. 22 (6) of the Constitution. What must be disclosed are the conclusions of facts of the detaining authority. Every fact ought to be disclosed which is not protected by Art. 22(6) of the Constitution. There is no justification to limit the "grounds" to only just those facts which would be sufficient in the opinion of the Court to enable the detenu to make a defence. The scheme of the Preventive Detention Act is not merely to import mechanically the language of Cls. (a) and (b) of S. 3 (1) of the Act into the grounds given under Section 7 but to give all facts, particulars and details on which the detention is based. All those must be given in the grounds which are to be furnished to the detenu as soon as may be after his detention.

Where the ground stated is that the detenu is an active worker of the "communist party and in furtherance of the aims of the organisation he has been secretly and actively engaged in organising dangerous and violent agitation so as to cause widespread disturbance of peace and disorder in the city and other parts of the District," without telling the detenu what were the activities in which he ever indulged, it must be held that it is vague and insufficient. But if all the necessary particulars are given in the other grounds and they would enable the detenu to make a representation to the State and also disclose to him sufficient particulars upon which action has been taken against him, the order of the detention cannot be held to be illegal. It is, the satisfaction of the detaining authority which has to result in the detention of the detenu, provided, of course, it is not mala fide and it is not based upon anything which is arbitrary or capricious, it would not be open to the detenu to call in effect upon the detaining authority to produce before the Court evidence upon which action is taken. 51 Bom LR 653 (FB), Expl.; 52 Bom LR 794, Foll. 21 Bom Cri Cas 80: ILR (1951) Bom 546: 52 Cr LJ 418: 53 Bom LR 127: AIR 1951 Bom 33 (43) (Pt I) (Pr 21) (DB).

——S. 3 — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5) — Grounds of detention — Detention under S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950.

The expression "the maintenance of public order" is comprehensive enough to include "the security of state". Therefore, when the grounds supplied to the detenu do not suggest that there were other grounds besides those mentioned it cannot be said that they do not disclose all the grounds merely because they were described as concerning maintenance of public order while the order stated that the detention was for the security of State as well. See Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5). 52 Cri LJ 543: AIR 1951 Pat 439 (2) (DB).

——S. 3 — There must be material for satisfaction of authorities — Single instance of obstruction to police held was not sufficient.

It is true that in a case of detention under Preventive Detention Act it is the satisfaction of the detaining authority that must be looked to, but unless there is any material on the strength of which the said authority can be satisfied that it is necessary to order the detention of the person concerned with a view to preventing him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of the public order, etc. the mere fact that it is mentioned in the order that he was so satisfied is not sufficient.

Where the only allegation against the detenu was that he obstructed a Police Sub-Inspector in recovering an abducted muslim woman from his house, for which offence a case under Section 353 I. P. C. was registered against him:

Held, that this solitary incident could not form the basis for thinking that the detenu was likely to engage in future in activities prejudicial to maintenance of public order, specially when the State had not even cared to place on record an affidavit of the officer who made an order of detention on behalf of his Highness that he had any material before him at the time of the order on which his satisfaction was based. It was observed that it was a case of high-handedness and misuse of the drastic powers that Preventive Detention Act has vested in the Executive Authorities, and that the detenu was ordered to be detained not with a view to preventing him from indulging in any kind of illegal activities but to teach him a lesson for offending a police officer. 1953 Cri LJ 120: ('52) ILR (1952) Patiala 107: AIR 1953 Pepsu 16 (16) (Prs 2a, 2b).

——S. 3 — Preventive detention — Grounds.

The admittedly settled legal propositions that pertain to detention under the Preventive Detention Act are:

(i) The propriety of the detention order is the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority and cannot be questioned in Court of law. Satisfaction of the detaining authority is to be based on the grounds supplied, supported by instances and particulars; (ii) What is justiciable is whether said grounds and particulars probatively had a proximate casual connection with the object of the detention; (iii) to sustain order of detention, the grounds and each of them have not only to be relevant, but they must not also be vague; (iv) if the said satisfaction is well-based as alleged then the order can only be challenged on grounds of mala fides. 1942 AC 206, Rel. on. 1961 (2) Cr LJ 547: 63 Punj LR 242.

——Ss. 3, 7 — Constitution of India, Art. 22 — Grounds supplied to detenu vague — Non-disclosure of grounds in public interest — Rights of detenu — Detention Order held invalid.

The detenu has to be served with a copy of the order passed by the authority contemplated by sub-section (2) of Section 3 containing, firstly ,the recitals in the terms of one or more of the sub-clauses (a) and (b) of Section 3 (1) which may be called the preamble, and secondly, the grounds contemplated by Section 7, i.e. the conclusions of fact which led to the passing of the order of detention informing the detenu as to why he was being detained. If the grounds do not contain all the particulars necessary for enabling the detenu to make his representation, the detenu may ask for further particulars of the facts and the authority which passed the order of detention is expected to furnish all the information, subject of course to the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 7, that is to say, the person detained is not entitled to the disclosure of such facts if the authority making the order considers it against public interest to disclose. Therefore, the order of detention to be served on the person detained would usually consist of the first two parts, namely, the preamble and the grounds, but it may also consist of the second part, namely, particulars, if and when they are required or found to be necessary.

The obligation to furnish grounds and the duty to consider whether disclosure of any facts involved therein is against public interest are both vested in the detaining authority. If such privilege is exercised, the detenu cannot be heard to say, apart from the question of mala fides, that the grounds did not disclose the necessary particulars or that in the absence of such particulars he was not in a position to make an effective representation.

Held, that a ground having been kept vague and indefinite and no particulars thereof having been given in spite of the demand made therefor, coupled with the fact that the privilege exercised was to a limited extent, the impugned order must be held to be invalid on this ground (1965) 6 Guj LR 632: ILR (1965) Guj 644.

● ——Ss. 3 and 5 — Grounds — Sufficiency of — Vagueness.

Where the ground alleged for the detention is capable of being, and has in fact been, intelligently understood by the detenu, it cannot be said that the material furnished to him was not sufficient to enable him to make a representation. It cannot in such a case be held that the grounds are vague. Santhamma v. State of Hyderabad, 52 Cr LJ 1402: ILR (1951) Hyd 654: AIR 1951 Hyd 128 (131, 132) (Pt C) (Pr 13) (FB).

——S. 3 (1) — Order of detention under— Validity — Powers of Court to determine — Vagueness of grounds — Effect.

Though it is not competent to the Court to enquire into the sufficiency of the materials and the reasonableness of the grounds on which the detaining authority was satisfied that it was necessary to make the order under Section 3 (1) the grounds can be scrutinised to see whether the detaining authority had the state of satisfaction necessary to make an order under the section. Unreported decision in Cri. Misc. No. 57 of 1950, Rel. on.

Where a careful scrutiny of the grounds show that they are indefinite and vague on which it is clearly not possible for the applicant to make any representation and they also show that the District Magistrate had not the state of satisfaction which he professed to have when he made the order of detention, statutory requirement of satisfaction has not been fulfilled and the detention of the applicant is not justified. AIR 1951 Madh Bha 56 (58, 59) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 12) (DB).

——S. 3 — Ground sufficient to satisfy authorities — Vague ground.

Merely because a ground is vague it cannot be considered that it is no ground at all and therefore not sufficient to satisfy the authorities, and a vague ground does not stand on the same footing as an irrelevant ground, which can have no connection at all with the satisfaction of the Government. 1951 SCR Vol. II, P. 212, Foll. 1952 Cri LJ 1526: ILR (1951) Mys 455: AIR 1952 Mys 85 (87) (Pr B) (Pr 6) (DB).

If a person is arrested on a charge of offence or misbehaviour likely to prejudice the public peace under Section 107, Cr. P. Code, and then those proceedings are dropped and recourse is had to Section 3 (1) of the Preventive Detention Act, for his detention, and then after a long time, he is supplied with very vague grounds, he is entitled to have it adjudged that the grounds are not true and that he is detained illegally of improperly, so as to entitle him to be released under Section 491, Cr. ——Ss. 3 (1) (a) and 7 — Facts and particulars of detenu's acts — Disclosure of — Duty of Government.

The Government is not bound to supply the facts and particulars of the detenu's acts, on the basis of which it forms the satisfaction that it is necessary to make a detention order with a view to preventing the detenu from acting in any manner prejudicial to public peace, etc. But where the ground of detention supplied to the detenu merely states that the detenu is constantly engaged in doing something without telling him anything further it falls short of the requirements of law, because it does not give any information to the detenu which he can controvert and show that there exist no grounds for his detention. Such a ground, therefore, is vague. AIR 1950 SC 211, Disting. ILR (1953) Patiala 1: 54 Cr LJ 1710: AIR 1953 Pepsu 190 (191) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——Ss. 3, 7 — Grounds — Vagueness.

The question as to what information would be sufficient to enable the detenu to make a proper representation has to be decided with reference to the facts of each case and it cannot be held as a general rule that without specification of time of the activities the ground of detention would always be considered to be vague and indefinite. It is not always necessary that the time of a particular activity must also be given in order to make a ground explicit, if otherwise it is clear enough to make the detenu understand what is being complained against him. (In view of the particulars supplied, ground held not to be vague for want of specification of time of activity). Case law Discussed. 52 Cr LJ 1100: AIR 1951 Pepsu 134 (134) (Pr 4).

——S. 3 — Detention under — Grounds for — Consideration by Court — (Constitution of India, Art. 22).

The cases decided by the Supreme Court show (i) that whether the grounds given are sufficient or not is not within the ambit of the decision of the Court and it is the subjective decision of the Government which is implied. (ii) There must be a rational connection between the grounds stated by the Government and the objects which are to be prevented under the statute; (iii) that the grounds must not be vague and this applies to each one of the grounds communicated to the detained persons, but this is subject to the claim of privilege under Cl. (6) of Article 22 of the Constitution; (iv) that even if one of the grounds is vague and the others are not, the detention is not in accordance with the procedure established by law and is therefore illegal; and (v) that a detenu can challenge his detention in a court of law on the ground of mala fides.

Held, on a consideration of the grounds supplied to the detenu that they were neither vague nor insufficient to enable him to make a proper representation. The second ground no doubt did not give the facts although it did indicate what was the nature of the activities objected to, but withholding facts is not contravention of the constitutional rights of the petitioner. ILR (1956) Punj 374: 1957 Cr LJ 1168: AIR 1957 Punj 235 (237, 238) (Prs 14, 16, 19).

——S. 3 — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5) — Vagueness of grounds — Where the grounds are so vague that the detenu cannot make an effective representation he has a right to approach the Court and complain that there has been an infringement of his fundamental right and even if the infringement of the second part of the right under Art. 22 (5) is established he is bound to be released by the Court. See Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5). AIR 1953 Raj 177 (DB).

——S. 3 — Detention grounds — Dates of activities not mentioned — If sufficient to make grounds vague and insufficient.

Merely because the dates relating to the various activities mentioned in the grounds supplied to the petitioner are missing, the grounds cannot be held to be vague and indefinite. Whether reference to the dates of these activities is necessary in order that the grounds may cease to be vague and indefinite would always depend upon the facts of each case and the nature of the grounds supplied to the detenu. ——Ss. 3 and 7 — Ground for detention — Relevancy — Test of.

In determining whether a ground of detention is or is not relevant to the detention, the grounds of detention must be regarded as a whole. A ground of detention containing a statement of facts showing the association of the detenu with notorious and proclaimed dacoits is a relevant ground: AIR 1952 SC 324; 1952 SCJ 476 and AIR 1954 Madh B 125, Ref. Madh BLJ 1954 HCR 1442: Madh BLR 1955 Cri 268: 1955 Cri LJ 476: ILR (1955) Madh B 98: AIR 1955 Madh Bha 36 (40) (Pt G) (Pr 9) (DB).

——S. 3 — Relevancy of grounds — Determination of.

In determining whether a ground of detention is or is not relevant to the detention, the grounds of detention must be regarded as a whole. The relevancy of the ground in question cannot be determined from the ground standing by itself.

The gravamen of the indictment against the detenu was that he actively associated with notorious dacoits, aided, abetted and harboured them, concealed and confined, abducted or kidnapped women and intimidated witnesses from giving evidence against accused persons. Grounds Nos. 7, 8 and 9 only narrated instances of the petitioner's close association with dacoits.

Held, that the acts mentioned in items Nos. 7, 8 and 9 under the other items formed a chain of acts of the petitioner which might prejudice the maintenance of public order. For determining relevance of any one ground the grounds of detention must be regarded and read as a whole. 1952 SCJ 476: AIR 1952 SC 324; AIR 1959 SC 1335, Relied on.

Held, that the plain reading of the grounds and particulars supplied clearly showed that none of the grounds was irrelevant. In any event, if they were read as a whole, the statements calling upon persons to build up strong movement for Punjabi Suba demand and rousing communal passions that it must be attained at all costs and not refraining from even preaching violence, could not be said to be wholly unconnected with the maintenance of public order. 1961 (2) Cri LJ 547: 63 Punj LR 242.

24 (C). Grounds for order — Whether the order is vitiated by one or more extraneous grounds.

——S. 3 (1) (a) (ii) — Grounds for order — Order based on various grounds—Some of them too vague — Some others were decided in favour of detenu at his previous trial before competent Court — Order held vitiated on both grounds — Constitution of India, Arts. 21 and 22 (5) — Vagueness of grounds for detention — Estoppel —Grounds decided in favour of detenu at previous trial cannot be made basis for his subsequent detention. 1965 All WR (HC) 266: 1965 All Cr R 196: ILR (1965) 2 All 261.

——S. 3 (1) (ii) — Detention order made on totality of facts — Particulars of grounds of detention should not be considered in isolation.

Where the detention order was made on the totality of the facts contained in the particulars attached to the ground it would not be right to take a particular ground and study it in isolation from the rest. It would be only necessary to take the particulars together and in order to see whether they could have reasonably produced the personal satisfaction of the authority making the order and whether all of them were such as to have enabled the detenu to make an effective representation against the order. ——S. 3 — Several grounds of detention — One of them subject-matter of prosecution — Detention is not illegal.

Where there are several grounds of detention and one of them is the subject-matter of a criminal prosecution that does not make the order of detention illegal. If it be proved that the detention was resorted to for a collateral purpose, then it would be a different matter. The question has to be approached and answered in each case on the footing whether the order of detention in view of the pending prosecution is bona fide or not. For answering the question the uncontroverted fact may have to be considered and the test will be whether the order of of detention is for the purpose it purports to be or really for any ulterior or collateral purpose. MBLR 1955 Cr 265: Madh BLJ 1955 HCR 36: AIR 1955 MB 65 (65) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Ss. 3 and 7— Several grounds of detention— One or more beyond scope of Act — Entire order of detention is vitiated.

When out of the several grounds of detention one or more are beyond the scope of the Act under which an order of detention is made, even if some of the grounds are legal, the entire order of detention is vitiated thereby and in the application of this principle the reason why a particular ground is held to be beyond the scope of the Act is not material at all. (A) Power of Court — Satisfaction of detaining authority if justiciable.

(B) Power of Court — Grounds of detention if justiciable.

25. Power of Court.

——S. 3 — Vagueness of grounds — Satisfaction of authority — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5).

Vague grounds do not stand on the same footing as irrelevant grounds. An irrelevant ground has no connection at all with the satisfaction of the State Government making the order of detention. Further it cannot be said that if the grounds are vague and no representation is possible there can be no satisfaction of the authority as required by Section 3. The sufficiency of the grounds, which gives rise to the satisfaction of the State Government is not a matter for examination by the Court. The sufficiency of the grounds to give the detained person the earliest opportunity to make a representation can be examined by the Court, but only from that point of view. The quality and characteristic of the grounds need not be the same for both tests. One person may be but another may not be satisfied on the same grounds. That aspect however is not for the determination of the Court. The second part of the inquiry is clearly open to the Court under Art. 22 (5). Even if the grounds are not sufficient or adequate for making the representation the grounds may still be sufficient for the subjective satisfaction of the authority. Tarapada De v. State of West Bengal, 52 Cri LJ 400: 1951 SCJ 233: (1951) 1 Mad LJ 431: 1951 SCR 212: 1951 Mad WN 549: 1951 Mad WN (Cri) 165: AIR 1951 SC 174 (176, 177) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

——S. 3 (1), (a), (ii) — Detention under and also under ordinary law — Effect — Habeas Corpus Petition — Proper order — (Constitution of India, Art. 226) — (Cri. P. Code (1898), Section 491).

In proceedings under habeas corpus petition what the Courts have to see is whether the particular detention complained of is lawful or not. If not lawful, the Courts would order the release of the petitioner from detention under such a detention order. If the petitioner is also being held in detention under some other valid and lawful order, the order that the Court would pass would naturally have to be a conditional one. Otherwise the petitioner who is detained both under the ordinary law — where he could apply for and possibly get bail — and the Preventive Detention Act which he attacks as being unlawful, would be in the impossible position of not being able to secure his release from detention under any circumstances. If the order is passed in the conditional form, the petitioner having secured to get the main impediment removed from his way could try for his release on bail for offences under the ordinary law. ——S. 3 — Duty of Court — Considerations of security of State — How far material — (Constitution of India, Art. 22).

It is very essential that a Court of Law should, as far as possible, keep away from the heat and dust of political battle and make an objective and detached appraisal of the record before it. That does not mean that the Court should not be anxious to see that the security of the State is maintained. Nor does it mean that the Court should not see to it that the Preventive Detention Act which is intended for security of the State, is not an effective instrument in the hands of the State.

It is however, equally necessary especially in critical times, that the Court should be vigilant to safeguard the liberty of the subject. The conflict between the security of the State and the liberty of the subject is always a conflict difficult to resolve but the Constitution and the Preventive Detention Act have sought to resolve it by arming the State with wide powers and at the same time providing important safeguards for the liberty of the subject. 1956 Cr LJ 875: ILR (1956) Bom 792: 58 Bom LR 473: AIR 1956 Bom 490 (491) (Pt B) (Pr 1) (DB).

——Ss. 3 (1) (a) (ii), 6 (1) (b) — Distinction between orders under —Grounds of order under S. 6 (1) (b) — Satisfaction of District Magistrate cannot be challenged.

Where the District Magistrate was already satisfied under Section 3 that the petitioner's detention was necessary and that satisfaction of the District Magistrate has not been challenged, the subsequent order issued under Section 6 (1) (b), calling upon the petitioner to appear before the Superintendent of Police within 10 days from the date of the order, cannot be challenged.

When the District Magistrate has stated in his order under Section 6 (1) (b) that he had reason to believe that the petitioner had absconded or was concealing himself, the High Court, in revision against the order, cannot substitute its own satisfaction for that of the District Magistrate. It is the subjective satisfaction of the District Magistrate which is material. 1950 SCJ 433; (1950) 2 Mad LJ 555; AIR 1950 SC 451, Rel. on. 1962 (1) Cr LJ 173: AIR 1962 Manipur 12 (13) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 7).

——S. 3 (1) — Validity of detention — Jurisdiction of High Court to grant bail.

Preventive Detention Act, Section 3 (1) requires that the authority directing the detention has to be satisfied after applying his mind, that such detention is necessary in the interests of the State and for the maintenance of public order. If a challenge is made about the accuracy or the prima facie correctness and regularity of the order, it is upon the State Government to satisfy the Court that the order complained against does not suffer from any obvious infirmity or irregularity. Where all that appears from the order is that it has been properly authenticated, that by itself does not show that the order of detention was validly made. If, as is clear from the evidence, the materials upon which the order of detention in question is based are not placed before the proper authority who has to decide such matters and it appears that that authority did not apply his mind with a view to satisfy himself about the necessity for such detention, then the condition precedent to the making of the order of detention is lacking and the order can consequently be successfully challenged as a nullity.

Ordinarily bail should not be granted in cases under the Preventive Detention Act but in an extraordinary case where the extreme urgency arising out of the commencement of the elections wherein the detenu is a candidate and the repeated dilatory tactics adopted by the Government not being ready for the final hearing of the petitions, granting of bail is justified, to enable the detenu to contest the elections in his constituency subject to certain necessary restrictions consistent with the security of the State. ILR (1951) Cut 624.

——S. 3 (1) — Satisfaction of executive authority — High Court cannot question.

Where two inferences including the one that was drawn by the State Government are possible on the facts mentioned in the grounds supplied to the detenu, it is not open to the High Court to say that that particular inference should not have been drawn by the State Government. The High Court cannot undertake an investigation as to the truth or otherwise of the materials on which the satisfaction of the executive authority is grounded. The facts alleged have to be taken to be correct and it will not be a ground for interference if the detenu merely puts forward a counter-version. Putting a counter-version is not the same thing as placing circumstances which can go to establish that the alleged facts or grounds are non est. 11 FCR 827, Ref. 52 Cri LJ 1231: ILR 30 Pat 653: AIR 1951 Pat 153 (155) (Pt C) (Pr 5) (DB).

In starting proceedings against a person where more courses than one are open to the State Government, to cancellation of the licence issued in his favour under one of the Control Orders, prosecution under the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, or detention under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, it is for the State Government to decide which alternative it should adopt or which is most effective in the circumstances of the case. It is not for the Court to decide the matter even to express any opinion as to which alternative should be the most effective. 52 Cri LJ 406: ILR 30 Pat 630: AIR 1951 Pat 47 (52) (Pr D) (Pr 15) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) — High Court when will interfere.

Affidavits filed on behalf of the detenus may generally be divided into three Classes (i) those that consist of a mere denial of the grounds or facts alleged (ii) those that consist of an attempted explanation of the fact alleged, the truth of the explanation depending on credibility of evidence; and (iii) those that disclose circumstances which render the grounds or the facts on which the grounds are founded completely non-existent, that is, inaccurate on the face of them, without the necessity, and independent of the question, of any evidence. It is in the last class of cases the High Court can interfere on the ground that the order is not bona fide. The first two classes of cases are those in which the Advisory Board is the proper authority to consider the denial or the explanation. 52 Cri LJ 1231: ILR 30 Pat 653: AIR 1951 Pat 153 (156) (Pt E) (Pr 9) (DB).

The propriety or reasonableness of the satisfaction of the Central or the State Government upon which an order for detention under S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act is based, cannot be raised and the Supreme Court cannot be invited to undertake an investigation into sufficiency of the matters upon which such satisfaction purports to be grounded. The Supreme Court can, however, examine the grounds disclosed by the Government to see if they are relevant to the object which the legislation has in view, namely, the prevention of objects prejudicial to the defence of India or to the security of State and maintenance of law and order therein. Where the grounds given for the detention are relevant the question whether they are sufficient or not is not for the decision of the Court. The Legislature has made only the subjective satisfaction of the authority making the order essential for passing the order. The satisfaction for making the initial order is and has always been under the Preventive Detention Act, that of the authority making the order. Because the Amending Act of 1951 establishes a supervisory authority, that discretion and subjective test is not taken away and by the establishment of the Advisory Board, the Court is not given the jurisdiction to decide whether the subjective decision of the authority making the order was right or not. ●——S. 3 — Satisfaction of Government — If can be challenged — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5).

Before the Government can pass an order of preventive detention under Section 3 it must be satisfied with respect to the individual person that his activities are directed against one or other of the three objects mentioned in the section, and that the detaining authority was satisfied that it was necessary to prevent him from acting in such a manner. It is the satisfaction of the Central Government or the State Government on the point which alone is necessary to be established.

The satisfaction of the Government must be based on some grounds. There can be no satisfaction if there are no grounds for the same. If the grounds on which it is stated that the Central Government or the State Government was satisfied are such as a rational human being can consider connected in some manner with the objects which were to be prevented from being attained, the question of satisfaction except on the ground of mala fides cannot be challenged in a Court. If the detaining authority on the evidence placed before it is satisfied that the applicants are, unless detained, likely to act in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community, the Court cannot go into the evidence and cannot question the satisfaction of the detaining authority. The satisfaction must, however, be honest satisfaction. Where wrong facts were placed by subordinate official before the detaining authority, but that authority acted on the belief that these facts were true, it cannot be said that its satisfaction was not an honest satisfaction. 1951 All WR (HC) 502: 1951 All Cri Cas 123: 1952 Cri LJ 372: AIR 1952 All 180 (182) (Pt C) (Prs 14, 17).

——S. 3 (1) (a) — Jurisdiction of Court — Merits of order — Power of Court to go into — Function of Court.

Under the scheme of the Preventive Detention Act, it is a matter entirely for the detaining authority as a representative of the executive Government to decide whether the activities of a particular person are prejudicial to the security of the State, the maintenance of public order, etc. It is that authority alone, and not the Court, who is in the best position to take a decision whether the detention of a particular person is called for on any of the reasons mentioned in Section 3 (1) (a) of the Act. The High Court is no doubt competent to decide whether a detaining authority had jurisdiction to pass an order of detention, or had applied its mind properly to the question of detention or whether the detention order was passed mala fide or whether any of the grounds fell outside the scope of the Act or whether the order is invalid for any other reason. But it is not open to the Court to go into the question whether on merits the detaining authority had jurisdiction to pass the order of detention or to continue the detention. That under the Act is a sphere exclusively of the detaining authority and upon this sphere the Court cannot encroach. It is the detaining authority alone whose satisfaction as to whether a person should be detained is material and relevant under the scheme of the Act, and it is that authority which has got to see whether the activities of the particular person are prejudicial to the maintenance of public order, the activities of the particular person are pre- 54 Bom LR 620: ILR (1953) Bom 182: 1953 Cr LJ 322: AIR 1953 Bom 59 (61) (Pt C) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 3 — Satisfaction of detaining authority — Sufficiency of materials — Powers of High Court.

The question of sufficiency of materials to induce the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority, does not fall to be considered by the High Court since that is not justiciable. The High Court cannot even examine whether the grounds were true or false. All that the High Court is concerned with is to see whether the grounds which were communicated to the detenue were such as enabled him to exercise his constitutional right to make an effective representation against the order of detention. 1962 (1) Cr LJ 311: ILR (1961) 1 Cal 276: AIR 1962 Cal 162 (166) (Pt G) (Pr 13) (DB).

——S. 3 — Satisfaction of detaining authorities — High Court cannot enquire into truth or otherwise of facts mentioned in grounds.

It is for the Government to be satisfied as to the truth or otherwise of the facts contained in the grounds; and thereafter it is for the detenue to make his representation before the Advisory Board, and then it is for the Advisory Board to consider the representation and the evidence produced by the State Government in support of the allegations and the evidence if any to the contrary, and then come to its decision. The satisfaction being a subjective satisfaction of the Government and of the Advisory Board, it is not open to the High Court to inquire into the truth or otherwise of the facts mentioned in any of the grounds. 1962 (1) Cr LJ 279: AIR 1962 Cal 119 (120) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Ss. 3 and 7 — Sufficiency of material to arrive at conclusion that detenu is likely to indulge in prejudicial activities is solely question for detaining authorities — Correctness of statements of past activities of detenu is not justiciable — Prejudicial activities alleged to continue till time of arrest — That activities in remote past were considered, is immaterial.

Whether there is sufficient material for arriving at the conclusion that the detenu is likely to indulge in prejudicial activities is a question solely to be decided by the Detaining Authority. It is not necessary that such a conclusion should be arrived at on legal proof. It is well settled that the question whether the Detaining authority was right in view of the material before it in issuing the order of detention is not justiciable.

The scope of judicial enquiry in the proceedings challenging the order under the Preventive Detention Act is a limited one. The correctness of the statements relating to the past activities of the detenu is not justiciable. Thus, the Court cannot examine the past activities of the detenu as alleged by the detaining authority. The reason for the exclusion from judicial scrutiny is that the satisfaction under Section 3 of the Preventive Detention Act is subjective and no Court can substitute its opinion of the material for that of the authority and thereby hold the satisfaction to be wrongly reached. Thus, if a detenu states that the grounds alleged are false, the Court cannot adjudicate on the question of the correctness of the grounds. ILR (1951) Hyd 654; AIR 1951 SC 157, Rel. on.

That the detaining authorities had taken notice of activities in remote past, is immaterial when prejudicial activities were alleged to continue till time of arrest.

Per Srinivasa Chari J.:— The state of mind of a person who makes an order is pre-eminently a fact within his knowledge and if on the material before him he comes to the conclusion that he is satisfied that if the detenu were allowed to be at large there was every likelihood of his inciting innocent people to resort to violence, he would be justified in restraining the activities of the man by an order of detention. It is a matter for subjective decision and can never be subjected to an objective test. The satisfaction that is expected is of the executive as it is the executive which is entrusted with the duty of maintaining peace and order. ILR (1952) Hyd 122: 1952 Cri LJ 1076: AIR 1952 Hyd 112 (114, 119) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 16) (DB).

——S. 3 — Satisfaction of detaining authority — Power of Court.

Where the Government of a State being satisfied that any person is acting in a manner prejudicial to public safety and maintenance of public order makes an order detaining him, it is not open to the detenu to invite the Court to go into the question as to whether the satisfaction of the detaining authority was on proper or reasonable grounds. 52 Cri LJ 710 (2); ILR (1951) Hyd 168: AIR 1951 Hyd 83 (85) (Pt B) (Pr 8) (DB).

Where it is amply clear that the State Govt. were in possession of facts on which they felt satisfied that it was absolutely necessary to prevent the petitioners from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community, the High Court cannot go into facts to find out whether the facts were sufficient for the satisfaction of the State Government or not. 1953 BLJR 371: 1953 Cr LJ 1734: AIR 1953 Pat 351 (352) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——S. 3 — Detaining authority must be satisfied that it is necessary to detain person to prevent him from carrying on prejudicial activities —Grounds supplied not irrelevant — Court cannot enter into their sufficiency.

Before the Government can pass an order of preventive detention under the Act it must be satisfied with respect to the individual person that his activities are directed against one or other of the objects mentioned in the Act and that it was necessary to prevent him from acting in such a manner. If the ground by itself is not so convincingly irrelevant and incapable of bringing about satisfaction to any rational person the question whether such ground can give rise to the satisfaction required for making the order is outside the scope of the inquiry of the Court. 1951 SCR 167, Rel. on. 1952 Cri LJ 1382: AIR 1952 Pat 374 (376) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 3 — Satisfaction — Nature of— Satisfaction based on wrong or false material — Effect — Jurisdiction of Court.

It is settled law that satisfaction contemplated by S. 3 is the satisfaction of the detaining authority and not that of the Court. From this it follows that the question that the material placed before the detaining authority upon which his satisfaction, was based was false or true or that he was misled in forming the satisfaction is irrelevant. So long as there is material before the authority on which the said authority bases his satisfaction and proceeds to act thereon, the Court has no jurisdiction to scrutinise that material. 1 Pepsu LR 447, Rel. on. 52 Cri LJ 1438: AIR 1951 Pepsu 164 (167) (Pt B) (Pr 11) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) (a) — Satisfaction — Duty of Court.

When an application is made challenging the existence of the satisfaction, what the Courts have got to see is whether there was the subjective satisfaction of the authority which made the order and not whether there were grounds upon which a reasonable person could be satisfied that it was necessary to make the order, the latter being at times called an objective test of the satisfaction. ('51) 4 Sau LR 45 (47) (DB).

——Ss. 3 (1) (a) (ii) and 7 — Detention under — Grounds for — Power of Court to determine sufficiency of — Grounds should not be vague or indefinite — Particulars of activities of detenu need not be supplied.

In determining the validity of an order of detention under S. 3, the Preventive Detention Act, it is not open for the Court to determine the sufficiency of the reasons which induce the detaining authority to issue the order of detention nor to investigate into the evidence upon which the authority was satisfied that it was necessary to detain the person concerned against whom such an order is made. The satisfaction required under the section must be the satisfaction of the authority issuing the order but such authority must be reasonably satisfied that the detention of the person is necessary for the security of the State or the maintenance of public order or communal harmony and the Court in the exercise of its powers will be competent to determine whether such an order could have been made by a person acting reasonably and if it is found that the authority did apply its mind in passing the order, it will set it aside. AIR 1949 Oudh 20, Applied.

The omission of the word "particulars" in the Preventive Detention Act is not accidental but deliberate and decidedly it has widened the scope of the detaining authority's discretion. He is not now required to supply the detenu with the particulars of his activities. But the elimination of the necessity of mentioning particulars does not take away from the detaining authority the responsibility of not leaving the grounds vague and indefinite. They must also be such as to enable the detenu to make an effective representation to him. If the aforesaid conditions are not fulfilled, the grounds of detention cannot be called good and the detenus are entitled to be released.

Held, on a consideration of the grounds supplied to the detenus that they were not good grounds and therefore, the detenus were entitled to be released. 1952 Cri LJ 660: AIR 1952 Bhopal 1 (5, 6) (Pt D) (Prs 21, 29).

——S. 3 (1) — Applicability — Detention under after expiry of period of detention under Orissa Act (4 of 1948) — Legality — Reasonableness of satisfaction of detaining authority — Power of Court to investigate — Past acts of detenu — Relevancy of.

It cannot be ruled as an absolute proposition of law that once a man is detained under a preventive detention measure (Orissa Maintenance of Public Order Act) on the basis of his prejudicial activities, he cannot, on the expiry of the term, again be detained on the selfsame grounds under the Preventive Detention Act. A man is to be adjudged by his association with politically dangerous individuals, or his advocacy of a cause which, if pursued, involves manifestation of violence, sabotage, chaos and confusion in the present day political and economic set up of things, and is, otherwise, subversive of the estabished Government. Nor can it be said that the past acts of a man are not safe criteria of his propensities. If the members of of a particular group of agitators are known to be, as a matter of habit, exploiting the situation prevailing in the country, and if their political aims, as judged from their past acts, are not offset by any change in their creed and if there be no reasonable ground to believe that the views of the particular member concerned have undergone fundamental change, these circumstances would constitute reasonable grounds to the satisfaction of the detaining authorities. The Court cannot investigate into the authenticity of the allegations on which orders of detention are passed. Grounds which would be insufficient in one state of things would be overwhelmingly sufficient in another state. So long and so far as the conditions justifying necessity for prevention exists, a detention order made within the reasonable limits laid down by the Legislature would be quite justifiable. It would be beyond the Court's power of interference even if it does not fit within judicial strait-jacket.

There is no fundamental or great divergence between the Preventive Detention Act (4 of 1950) and the Orissa Public Security Measures Act which was formerly in force. The relevant sections in both Acts are almost identical.

It may be assumed or acknowledged to be correct that for a certain period the past acts of a citizen will be a sufficient guide for the authorities to control his movements, so as to prevent him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the public safety. What would be the particular period is not for the Court of justice to decide or define, but for the detaining authority to decide nor can any hard and fast rule be laid down as to that. The detaining authority is in a more advantageous position of having all the materials before it, a large part of which is not available to the Court. 52 Cr LJ 110: 17 Cut LT 313: AIR 1951 Orissa 27 (27 to 29) (Pts A, B, C) (Prs 3 to 7) (DB).

——Ss. 3 and 4 — Power of Court — Power to substitute its judgment for that of Government.

In an application by a detenu ordered to be detained by an order under Sections 3 and 4 of the Preventive Detention Act filed under Section 491, Cr. P. Code, or Article 226 of the Constitution, the High Court cannot treat detention cases as though they were cases under trial before it and to substitute its own judgment for that of the State Government. When the grounds communicated to the detenu are sufficiently precise and definite and cannot be said to be imaginary, it is not for the Court to scrutinise the evidence and seek to draw a different interence from the facts stated from what has been drawn by the State. 1952 Cr LJ 1101: AIR 1952 Pat 298 (303) (Pt C) (Pr 13) (DB).

——S. 3 (1) — Extent of power of High Court to examine grounds supplied to detenu.

The grounds supplied to the detenu can be examined by the High Court to see if the mandatory provisions of Clause (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution have been complied with, viz. (1) that they have been communicated as soon as may be; and (2) they give definite and enough information so as to afford an opportunity of making a representation to the detenu. Secondly, the grounds or facts (materials on which the detaining authority says it has acted) can be examined to see if they are relevant to the object of detention and have a rationally probative value. They can also be examined, if the question of mala fides is raised, the onus on that question being heavy on the detenu. The detenu may, possibly in rare cases, show that the order of detention was made not on the grounds given, but for some other purpose.

The statement that the High Court cannot question the correctness of the grounds means that an investigation into the correctness or otherwise of the grounds, depending as it does on the believability of evidence, cannot be undertaken by the High Court because it is not the satisfaction of the High Court which is a condition precedent to the validity of the order but the satisfaction of the State Government. In such cases, whether there is an affidavit in reply or not the High Court is powerless to interfere. 52 Cri LJ 1231: ILR 30 Pat 653: AIR 1951 Pat 153 (156) (Pt D) (Prs 8, 9) (DB).

The satisfaction, which Section 3 (1) speaks of, is the satisfaction of the State Government It is not open to the Court to substitute its own judgment for that of the State Government. Thus, the sufficiency or adequacy of the facts on which the grounds of an order of detention are based is not a question which can be agitated in the Court, though if the grounds are vague and indefinite and afford no real opportunity to make a representation, the Court may hold that there has been a contravention of the mandatory provisions of Article 22 (5) of the Constitution. 52 Cri LJ 406: ILR 30 Pat 630: AIR 1951 Pat 47 (54) (Pt F) (Pr 20) (DB).

——S. 4 — Invalid order under — Place bad — If renders order of detention itself invalid — Proper order passed later — Effect — Detenu if to be released.

Merely because an order under Section 4 of the Preventive Detention Act, is invalid and would vitiate the detention in a particular place which is referred to in that order, the order of detention itself, which has been properly passed, will not be invalidated. It will remain a good order. An order of detention is quite a different thing from an order directing the detenu to be detained in a particular place. The latter may be bad in some cases for certain reasons but the former may be a perfectly valid and good order. If the factum of detention in a particular place becomes illegal by reason of an order under Section 4 being bad, it can be subsequently validated by a proper order made under Section 4. In such a case the absence of a valid order directing that the detenu be detained in a particular place would not compel the Court to release the detenu if a valid order directing his detention in a particular place is passed by a proper authority before his release. SECTION 5

——S. 5 — Jurisdiction of State Government to detain person outside jurisdiction — Constitutionality — Constitution of India, Article 245 (1).

Within the ambit of entry 3 in the concurrent list Parliament is supreme and sovereign and it can legislate with regard to all aspects of preventive detention. It can therefore legislate conferring upon the State a power to detain a person beyond its territorial jurisdiction. 58 Bom LR 602: ILR (1956) Bom 715.

——Ss. 5, 3-A and 4 (a) and (b) (as amended by Act 4 of 1951) — Construction of Section 5 — Constitution of India, Art. 245.

Section 5 plainly provides for passing an order of detention of the would-be detenu even though he is outside the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the Government, which may mean either the Central or the State Government. This connotes the exercise of the power of detention of a "person to be detained", i.e., the would-be detenu even when he is in a foreign country. The section does not draw any distinction between deliberate and unintentional exercise of extra territorial powers. The use of the words 'merely' is not intended to restrict the exercise of extra-territorial powers. Sections 3-A, 4 (a) and 4 (b) cannot be read as limiting the scope of Section 5. The context does not therefore narrow down to plain meaning of Section 5. The fundamental principles that: (1) "All legislation is prima facie territorial and should be so construed", that (2) in a federation of States no State has, under normal circumstances, extra-territorial powers", and that (3) No detaining authority is normally entitled to order detention outside its own territorial jurisdiction are not conclusive of the matter. These principles admit the legislative competence to confer extra-territorial powers but lay down that to warrant an intention on the part of the legislature to enact legislation having extra-territorial effect, it is necessary that the intention must be clearly expressed. The unambiguous meaning of Section 5 cannot be whittled down for these reasons. Thus Section 5 is not limited to cases of unintentional exercise, by the detaining authority, of extra-territorial powers. 52 Bom LR 711; 50 Cal WN 532, Disting. Where certain public agitation was going on in the State and the order of detention of the petitioner was passed to prevent his participation in the agitation in the interests of maintenance of public order, and the petitioner, without challenging the validity of the detention order, disobeys the order under Section 6 (1) (b) coupled with the attempt on his part to take part in a public meeting later, clearly shows that the stiff sentence was necessary and it cannot be said that the sentence of six months S. 1. Scope and applicability.

——Ss. 7 and 3 — Ground for detention — Instigation of hartal with a view to promote lawlessness and disorder is a ground on which an order can be made under Section 3 (2). See Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (4 of 1950), Section 3. 1957 Cri LJ 10: AIR 1957 SC 28.

——S. 7 — Notice — Satisfaction based on two circumstances — One of them irrelevant — Effect on vlidity of order — (Constitution of India, Article 22).

Where in a notice under Section 7 the reasons or the grounds for the detention order are stated to be: (1) that the petitioner had created disaffection and discontent among the Muslims towards the Government and (2) that he persisted in activities calculated to disturb public peace and tranquillity.

Held, that the spreading of disaffection against a party Government has been repeatedly held to be the right of every citizen in a democratic Government subject to the condition that there should be no advocacy to violence or incitement to use violence or to resort to other illegitimate means. The petitioner could not therefore be said to have done anything illegal and his detention, inter alia, on the ground of spreading disaffection against the Government in the absence of anything to show that the said ground was of an 'inconsequential nature' could not be upheld. AIR 1956 All 589 and AIR 1951 All 459, Rel. on. (2) that one of the grounds given in the Notice thus suffered from irrelevancy and as it was not possible to say to what extent the satisfaction of the detaining authority was based upon his consideration, the notice was bad as a whole and the detention order based on it must be quashed. ——Ss. 7 and 3 — Grounds of detention — Spreading of disaffection against party Government.

Spreading of disaffection against a party Government cannot be said to be a ground for inferring that the public order would not be maintained. It is the right of every citizen in a democratic Government to spread disaffection against a particular party Government. That right is, of course subject to the condition that the disaffection should not be so spread as to result in violence and there should be really no incitement to use violence. ——S. 7 — Detention by one State in respect of activities in another State — Legality — Transfer of detenu from jail in former State to jail in latter — Cancellation of order of detention by former State — Effect.

The State of Bombay cannot for the purpose of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, pass orders for detaining a person found within its territory for activities in Madras, that is outside that State, or direct that such a person be interned outside the Bombay State, that is, in Madras. When such detention has been ordered but subsequently cancelled after the detenu had been transferred to a jail in the Madras State under Section 2 (2) of the Transfer of Detained Persons Act, 1949, it cannot be validated by the Madras Government serving a fresh order of detention. When once the Bombay Government has cancelled the order of detention, the proper procedure to be followed, would be for the Madras Government to release him and if they considered that he should be detained in the State of Madras a fresh order of detention should be served on him. In the absence of such a procedure, his detention in jail would be illegal and he would have to be released. 1951 Mad WN 81: 1951 Mad WN (Cri) 21: 64 Mad LW 142: 52 Cr LJ 294: (1951) 1 MLJ 174: AIR 1951 Mad 583 (585, 588, 589) (Prs 6, 13, 14, 15) (DB).

——S. 7 — After expiry of detention under Orissa Act, detenu can be detained under Central Act on same grounds.

Once a man is detained under a Provincial Preventive detention measure on the basis of his prejudicial activities he can on the expiry of the term, again be detained under the Central Act on the self-same grounds, particularly when there has happened nothing to show that his approach, from the standpoint of his political creed, to the political, social and economical problems of the society has undergone any change. 17 Cut LT 313: 52 Cri LJ 110: AIR 1951 Orissa 27 (27) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——S. 7 — Insufficient ground — Member or Organisation not declared illegal.

As the organisations known as Bharatiya Jan Sangh R. S. S. S. and Gohatya Nirodh Samiti are not illegal organisations, mere membership of these organisations cannot bring to detenu within the mischief of the Preventive Detention Act. 1956 Cri LJ 86: AIR 1956 Pat 1 (2) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Ss. 7 and 11 — Detention order continued and extended — Fresh grounds not supplied — Legality of detention.

Section 11 does not govern the order made by Government to confirm the original order of detention or to confirm the period of detention originally fixed.

No doubt Section 7 gives a very valuable right to the detenu and should the Government fail to conform with the provisions of that section the detenu can claim to be released, but this fact does not extend its provisions to the orders to which it does not relate. It merely comes into play when an order of detention is made and it has no applicability whatsoever to the order confirming the order of detention or extending the period fixed by that order. Consequently the fact that no fresh grounds of detention were supplied to the detenu after the order of detention has been confirmed and extended by the Government does not make his detention illegal. 2. Communication of grounds.

——S. 7 — Furnishing copy of grounds to detenu — Necessity of.

It is not at all imperative under Section 7 to furnish a copy of the grounds to the detenu. Though it is desirable to supply such copy to the detenu as it would greatly facilitate the making of a representation this would be unnecessary where the detenu had the grounds before him when he made the representation and was not handicapped by a copy not having been supplied to him. 52 Cri LJ 1300: AIR 1951 Raj 69 (71) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 7 — Duty of detaining authority.

Section 5 has cast a duty on the detaining authority to supply the grounds of detention to the detenu and if it has not done its duty and has thereby incurred a liability there is no reason why the detenu should make complaint to it and not come to the Court and ask for his release on the ground that a mandatory provision of the statute not having been fulfilled his further detention has become illegal. Even if a detenu does make a representation in ignorance of his rights, it cannot be said that the High Court should not consider what the duties of the detaining authority were. (1950) 3 Sau LR 232: AIR 1951 Sau 13 (14) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

3. "Authority making the order".

●——Ss. 7 and 3 — Detention order purporting to be made by Governor and signed by Home Secretary is not bad — Communication of grounds need not be made directly by the authority making the order — It may be made through recognised channel prescribed by the administrative rules of business — (Constitution of India, Article 166 (1)). See Public Safety — Prevention Detention Act (4 of 1950), S. 3. AIR 1952 SC 350.

——S. 7 — "Authority making the order" — Meaning of — Grounds communicated by another District Magistrate — Legality — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5).

Article 22 (5), Constituion of India, contemplates that the grounds are to be furnished after the detention; therefore the words "the authority making the order do not mean the individual who made it. What is meant by the words "the authority making the order" is; if the order is made by the District Magistrate, the District Magistrate; if the order is made by the Government of a State, the State Government; if the order is made by the Central Government, then, necessarily the Central Government. Thus there is nothing wrong if an order of detention is passed by one District Magistrate and after his transfer the grounds are supplied by another District Magistate. 53 Bom LR 127: 21 Bom Cri Cas 80: 52 Cri LJ 418: ILR (1951) Bom 546: AIR 1951 Bom 33 (41) (Pt B) (Pr 16) (DB).

●——S. 7 — Communication of grounds — When to be made — Delay in furnishing grounds — Effect.

The Act does not fix the time within which the grounds should be furnished to the person detained. It merely states that the communication must be as soon as may be. This means reasonable despatch and what is reasonable must depend on the facts of each case. No arbitrary time-limit can be set down.

When the long delay in furnishing the grounds has been adequately explained, the detention cannot be held unlawful on that ground. Ujagar Singh v. State of Punjab, 1952 SCJ 521: (1952) SCA 648: (1952) 2 Mad LJ 641: 1952 SCR 756: 1953 Cr LJ 146: AIR 1952 SC 350 (352) (Pt D) (Pr 9).

●——S. 7 — Communication of vague grounds— Delay in supplying particulars — Detenu's right to be released.

Mere vagueness of grounds standing by itself and without leading to inference of mala fides or lack of good faith is not justiciable issue in a Court of law. AIR 1951 SC 157, Rel. on.

Where the petitioners were given only vague grounds which were not particularised or made specific so as to afford them the earliest opportunity of making representations against their detention orders, and there having been inexcusable delay in acquainting them with particulars of what was alleged, the petitioners were held entitled to be released. ——S. 7 (1) — Supplying grounds of detention to detenu within five days — Not merely directory but mandatory — Breach of, cannot be condoned.

The use of the word "shall" and further, the combined use of the positive as well as the negative injunctions conveyed in the expression "as soon as may be but not later than five days" indicates that the Legislature wanted to make it quite clear that the provision of law in this regard is obligatory and not merely directory. Its breach cannot, therefore, be condoned. ILR (1961) 1 All 427.

●——S. 7 — Delay in furnishing detention grounds — Effect — Constitution of India, Articles 21 and 22 (5). Under Section 7 of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 and Article 22 (5) of the Constitution, the grounds of detention have to be communicated to the detenu as soon as may be. There is no limit of time laid down in Section 7 of the Act. In a certain measure and degree it is left to the executive, but the time taken for the furnishing of the grounds must be a reasonable time reasonable in the circumstances of each case. It is impossible to lay down a definite, and unchangeable yardstick by which the Court must judge as to whether the time taken in a particular case was reasonable or not.

In order that the detention should be valid and should be upheld by the Court not only must the order of detention be valid, but there must be a substantial compliance with all the provisions of the statute. Therefore even though when the detenu was deprived of his personal liberty that deprivation was according to procedure established by law, if the Court finds that that deprivation was continued contrary to the procedure established by law, the Court must hold that Article 21 has been contravened. Hence if after a person has been detained grounds are not furnished within a reasonable time, his detention becomes invalid as he is being deprived of his liberty contrary to the procedure established by law.

——S. 7 — 'As soon as may be' — Meaning of.

The words 'as soon as may be' appearing in Section 7 of the Preventive Detention Act have to be interpreted as meaning as soon as circumstances permit the authority to furnish the grounds. No unreasonable or unjustifiable delay can be allowed. (1953-54) 8 Moo PC 203, Ref.

——S. 7 — Delay in furnishing grounds — Delay of 14 days held not unreasonable — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5).

Considering that the grounds for detention covered about thirteen paragraphs, from the large volume of information available to the detaining authority, the time of 14 days which elapsed between the order of detention and the furnishing of grounds held was not unreasonable in view of the provisions of Article 22, Clause (5) of the Constitution. ——S. 7 — Scope — Non-compliance — Failure to furnish grounds — Effect on continuance of detention.

Under Section 7 of the Preventive Detention Act, the grounds of detention must be communicated to the detenu as soon as may be so that he may have an opportunity of representing against the order at the earliest moment. Non-compliance with this requirement makes the detention improper and the detention cannot be permitted to continue further. AIR 1952 Hyd 24 (24) (Pr 1) (DB).

See Constitution of India, Article 22 (5). 52 Cr LJ 1402: AIR 1951 Hyd 128 (FB).

——S. 7 — Unreasonable delay.

——S. 7 — Detention grounds — Communication of — Delay in — Delay of 18 days between the date of the order of detention and the actual service of the grounds of detention is not an unreasonable delay — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5). 52 Cri LJ 282: ILR (1950) 29 Pat 992: AIR 1951 Pat 389 (392) (Pt D) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 7 — 'As soon as may be' meaning of — Grounds not communicated within reasonable time — Validity of detention — Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 491.

The words 'as soon as may be' in Section 7 of the Act mean that the grounds of detention should be communicated to the detenu within a reasonable time and if this is not done the detention must be regarded as illegal. The reason is that the law gives a detenu a valuable right to make a representation to the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, against his detention and unless the grounds of detention are communicated to him within a reasonable time his right to make the representation is really affected thereby. AIR 1948 All 225, Rel. on.

(Delay of one month and eleven days held was not reasonable and therefore detention held illegal). (1950) 2 Pepsu LR 471: AIR 1952 Pepsu 61 (62) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——S. 7 — Inordinate delay in supplying grounds — Supplementary grounds supplied pending application of detenu to Court — Legality of detention.

Communication of the grounds to the detenu has to be made as early as possible regard being had to all attendant or likely exigencies. Inordinate delay in communicating the grounds of detention vitiates the order and renders the detention improper and illegal. Further the defect that is engendered by supplying belated and vague grounds is not cured by supplementary and more specific grounds supplied pending an application by the detenu to the High Court for his release. ('50) 2 Pepsu LR 394: AIR 1951 Pepsu 84 (85) (Prs 3, 4).

——S. 7 — "As soon as may be" — Meaning of —Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 491.

Where a contention is based on the question of delay, it is for the Government to explain why the grounds were not furnished sooner than they were. Thus, this is a question of fact on which light can be thrown by the Government alone. It is, therefore, necessary that the allegation must find a place in the petition under Section 491, Criminal P. C. 52 Cri LJ 1300: AIR 1951 Raj 69 (71) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

5. "Grounds on which an order has been made".

●——Ss. 7 (1) and 3 (3) — "Grounds on which an order has been made" — Meaning of — Expression does not bear same meaning in Section 3 (3) and Section 7 (1) — Report under Section 3 (3) not accompanied with the very grounds communicated to detenu under Section 7 — Sufficient compliance. See Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (4 of 1950), Section 3 (3). 1957 Cri LJ 5: AIR 1957 SC 23.

——Ss. 7 and 3 — Reference of case pending as one of the grounds — As the detention did not rest on this ground alone the detention could not be held to be illegal even if there was any case pending against the person arising out of any one transaction. See Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (4 of 1950), Section 3. AIR 1953 Assam 63.

——S. 7 — 'Grounds on which order has been made" — Interpretation of — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5) and (6).

The words "grounds on which the order has been made" are to be considered in context of the Constitution and the Preventive Detention Act. Article 22 (6) contemplates that the detaining authority, while furnishing grounds of detention, is required to state facts on account of which he is satisfied that the detention is necessary in the interest of the security of the State, maintenance of public order, etc. The only privilege a detaining authority can claim against disclosure of facts is on grounds of public interest. If no facts at all leading to the detention of a detenu are to be mentioned in the grounds which are to be furnished to him, then obviously the intention underlying the enactment of Article 22 (6) is frustrated. 53 Bom LR 127: 21 Bom Cri Cas 80: 52 Cri LJ 418: ILR (1951) Bom 546: AIR 1951 Bom 33 (37, 42, 43) (Pt C) (Prs 5, 19) (DB).

——S. 7 — Communication of grounds — Purpose of — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5).

The purpose of Article 22 (5) of the Constitution and Section 7 of the Preventive Detention Act clearly is that the grounds which are to be furnished to the detenu should be sufficient to enable him to make an effective representation to Government in the matter of his detention. If a statute is to be construed in such a way that a representation provided for by it can never be effective, the provision itself becomes meaningless in practice. Unless the facts and particulars on the basis of which the detention is ordered are furnished to the detenu in the grounds which are given to him so soon as may be after detention, he cannot possibly make an effective representation to Government against his detention. Thus the scheme of the Act is not merely to import mechanically the language of Clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Preventive Detention Act into the grounds given under Section 7, but to give all facts, particulars and details on which the detention is based. 53 Bom LR 127: 21 Bom Cri Cas 80: 52 Cri LJ 418: ILR (1951) Bom 546: AIR 1951 Bom 33 (43) (Pt D) (Pr 20) (DB).

——S. 7 — Grounds — Membership of Communist party which was declared an unlawful body under Section 16 which was declared as void — Declaration also is void — Being member of Communist Party, one of grounds of detention — Detention is not rendered invalid — (Criminal Law Amendment Act (1908), Section 16) — (Constitution of India, Articles 19 (1) (c), 19 (4) and 22). AIR 1955 NUC (Cal) 1009 (DB).

——S. 7 — Grounds of detention — Detenu being member of Communist Party.

The orders of detention are not invalid because of the statement in the grounds that the organisation to which the detenu belongs has been declared an illegal organisation and therefore is an illegal organisation. It has never been held by the Supreme Court that an order declaring the Communist Party to be an illegal organisation is illegal. This particular ground has been before the Supreme Court on a number of occasions and no suggestion has ever been made that it is an improper and a bad ground. Further the gravamen of the allegation made in this ground is that the detenu belongs to an organisation which is committed to violent and subversive acts and which has as its main objects the overthrow of the State by violence. Such being the case it is of little importance whether such an organisation has or has not been declared to be illegal. On a fair reading of the ground it would appear that the detenu is regarded as dangerous not because he is a member of an illegal organisation but because he is a member and assists in the activities of an organisation whose objects are said to be a danger and a menace to the maintenance of public order and the security of the State. 1953 Cri LJ 361: AIR 1953 Cal 129 (133, 134) (Pt B) (Prs 30, 31, 32) (DB).

——Ss. 7 and 3 — Ground for detention — To consider its relevancy, grounds must be regarded as whole— Ground showing association of detenue with proclaimed dacoit is a relevant ground. See Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (4 of 1950), Section 3. 1955 Cri LJ 476: AIR 1955 Madh Bha 36 (DB).

——S. 7 — Detention grounds — Necessity to disclose all grounds — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5) and (6).

The grounds on which the order of detention has been made must be communicated to the person detained and the right to get the grounds on which the order of detention has been made is one of the fundamental rights. The Preventive Detention Act (4 of 1950) has quite properly given due consideration to that fundamental right embodied in Article 22 (5) of the Constitution and detaining authority, under Section 7. Preventive Detention Act, is bound to furnish the grounds on which the order of detention has been made. He is not at liberty to disclose some and withhold other grounds on which the order is made. If some of the grounds on which the order has been made are not communicated to the detenu, then he is not in a position to make an effective representation which he has the right to do under Article 22 (5) of the Constitution.

There may be a number of grounds in support of the order, but the authority making the order must be held entitled to base the order of detention only upon some out of the many grounds in his possession. It is only those grounds on which the order has been made that have to be communicated to the detenu.

The safeguard provided by Clause (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution of India is a safeguard in favour of the detenu, and the detenu is entitled, as a matter of right, to know the grounds on which the order of detention has been made against him. No question of waiver can arise in such circumstances. 52 Cri LJ 282: AIR 1951 Pat 389 (293, 394, 400) (Pt E) (Prs 10, 12, 36) (DB).

——S. 7 — Detention grounds — Form of — Conclusion from facts — Necessity to reproduce words of S. 3.

It is true that the grounds to be supplied to the detenu under Section 7 must give some particulars of the acts ascribed to him as well as the conclusions drawn from those acts but it is not necessary that they should meticulously reproduce the relevant words of Section 3 itself. AIR 1951 SC 157, Ref.

Section 7 merely mentions "the grounds on which the order has been made" and does not prescribe any form of the grounds. From this it is legitimate to infer that all that is necessary is that the grounds should be such that should enable the detenu to make a representation to the proper authority and this condition should be regarded as amply satisfied when the grounds contain the particulars of the detenu's activities, on account of which the detaining authority formed his satisfaction that it was necessary to order his detention and it is also stated therein what the nature of the conclusion arrived at by the detaining authority was.

Where after giving the particulars of the detenu's acts, it was stated in the grounds supplied that the detention had been ordered to ensure the maintenance of public order, evidently what was meant was that the activities of the detenu were prejudicial to the maintenance of public order and he was being detained with a view to preventing him from indulging in those activities.

The words used for the conclusion are no doubt capable of improvement and probably the better way of saying was that the detaining authority had come to the conclusion or had formed the opinion that his activities were prejudicial to the maintenance of public order, but the defect is not material. (1951) 3 Pepsu LR 238.

6. Vagueness of grounds — General.

●——S. 7 — Vagueness of grounds — Particulars of events in offing — If to be definitely stated — (Constitution of India, Article 22).

Vagueness is a relative term. Its meaning must vary with the facts and circumstances of each case. If the statement of facts is capable of being clearly understood and is sufficiently definite to enable the detained person to make his representation, it cannot be said that it is vague. Further particulars of what has taken place, can be more definitely stated than those of events which are yet in the offing. In the very nature of things, the main object of the Act is to prevent persons from doing something which comes within the purview of any one of the sub-clauses of Clause (a) of Section 3 (1) of the Act. AIR 1957 SC 164, Rel. on. Naresh Chandra Ganguli v. State of W. B., 1959 Cr LJ 1501: 1960 SCJ 303: 1960 Mad LJ (Cr) 200: (1960) 1 SCR 411: AIR 1959 SC 1335 (1341) (Pt B) (Pr 13).

——Ss. 7 and 3 — Grounds of detention vague — Order of detention is bad. See Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (4 of 1950), Section 3. 1962 (1) Cri LJ 279: AIR 1962 Cal 119 (DB).

——S. 7 — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5) — Vagueness of grounds — Grounds capable of being intelligently understood and sufficiently definite to furnish materials to enable the detained person to make representation against the respective orders of detention — Grounds are not vague. See Constitution of India, Article 22 (5). AIR 1954 Cal 591 (DB).

——S. 7 — Vague grounds — What are.

Grounds of detention can be regarded as being vague only if they are couched in such language which makes it impossible for the detenu to make an effective representation to the Advisory Board. If they are understandable by the detenu to enable him to make his representation to the Advisory Board, the grounds would be certainly regarded as clear and unambiguous. This is especially so when the detenu has actually made a representation. ILR (1953) Hyd 459: (1953) Cr LJ 1845: AIR 1953 Hyd 277 (279) (Pt D) (Pr 6-b) (DB).

●——S. 7 — Detention grounds — Statements in — Vagueness — Test.

The test as to when the grounds of detention can be held vague is that if on reading the ground furnished it is capable of being intelligently understood and is sufficiently defined to furnish materials to enable the detained persons to make representation against the order of detention, it cannot be called vague: AIR 1951 SC 270, Foll. Bompalli Sathia v. Government of Hyderabad. 52 Cri LJ 1527: AIR 1951 Hyd 162 (162, 163) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (FB).

●——S. 7 — Grounds supplied to detenu when can be called vague — Test.

Vague can be considered as the antonym of 'definite'. If the ground which is supplied is incapable of being understood or defined with sufficient certainty it can be called vague. It must vary according to the circumstances of the case. It is however, improper to contend that a ground is necessarily vague if the only answer of the detained person can be to deny it. If, on reading the ground furnished it is capable of being intelligently understood and is sufficiently definite to furnish materials to enable the detained person to make a representation against the order of detention, it cannot be called vague.

Where the detenu after intelligently understanding the ground, has procured the certificates to contradict its statements, the ground cannot be said to be vague: AIR 1951 SC 157, Applied. Santhamma B. v. State of Hyderabad. 52 Cri LJ 1402: ILR (1951) Hyd 654: AIR 1951 Hyd 128 (131, 132) (Pt C) (Pr 13) (FB).

——S. 7 — Grounds to be supplied — Nature of — Non-compliance with section — Effect — Test to determine vagueness or precision of grounds.

It is to be noted that the grounds are not given to justify the detention but to afford the detenu a chance to make a representation. The grounds furnished must be clear, precise and must disclose facts except those which the detaining authority considers to be against the public interest to disclose; otherwise, the grounds would fail to serve the purpose for which they were intended by the Parliament. The discretion given to the detaining authority under Section 7 (2)is not to be exercised capriciously, and if no facts are given or if they are given in such a way as to make it impossible for the detenu to make a representation against the order then there is a failure to comply with the mandatory provision of the section and the order of detention under Section 3 cannot be held to be good. It is, however, impossible to lay down an inflexible rule for determining whether the grounds furnished to the detenu are vague or clear and precise. The question is to be determined in each case with reference to its facts and circumstances remembering that a certain amount of vagueness is bound to occur when the facts are inter-woven with the grounds and the detaining authority may consider the disclosure of those facts to be against the public interest. AIR 1951 Madh Bha 51 (55, 56) (Pt D) (Prs 14, 15) (DB).

——S. 7 — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5), (6) — Basis of grounds — Disclosing of — The detaining authority is under no obligation to disclose the basis of the allegation i. e., the particulars of the allegation on which the detention is made — Grounds of detention cannot be said to be vague and indefinite for the reason that they do not contain the basis of those grounds. See Constitution of India, Article 22 (5), (6). 52 Cri LJ 688: AIR 1951 Mad 182 (DB).

——S. 7 — Grounds — Particulars — Duty of detaining authority — Vagueness of grounds — Effect of.

It is well settled that whenever the grounds of detention are found vague, the detenu is entitled to an order of release from the Court. What constitutes vagueness has to be determined by keeping in view the purpose for which the grounds are supplied. They are supplied in order to enable the detenu to make a representation to the detaining authority refuting the correctness of the involved facts and inferences founding the grounds. They can be held to be vague if the minimum of information which will enable the detenu to present a case in his expected representation is not available on the face of it. Vagueness also consists in that the reasons of apprehension of the detaining authority are too remote, being mere possibility upon possibility or contingency upon contingency. If under the cause-and-effect rule circumstances reveal no proximity between the apprehension and the possibility of his future activities and the reasons given for the preventive orders, they can be considered vague. That a detenu is of a desperate character and his political creed is communism are too vague and are not sufficient to enable the detenu to make a representation to the authorities concerned. 52 Cr LJ 110: 17 Cut LT 313: AIR 1951 Orissa 27 (28) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 7 — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5) — Insufficient and vague grounds — Violation of safeguards under Article 22 (5) — The detenue deserves to be released. See Constitution of India, Article 22 (5). 1956 Cri LJ 86: AIR 1956 Pat 1 (DB).

——S. 7 — Grounds — Vagueness — Non-mention of time of activities of detenu.

It is not always necessary that the time of a particular activity of the detenu must also be given in order to make a ground explicit, if otherwise it is clear enough to make the detenu understand what is being complained against him. The question what information would be sufficient to enable the detenu to make a proper representation has to be decided with reference to the facts of each case and it cannot be held as a general rule that without specification of time of the activities the ground would always be considered to be vague and indefinite. 52 Cr LJ 1100: AIR 1951 Pepsu 134 (134) (Pr 4).

7. Vagueness of grounds — Illustrations.

——S. 7 — "Vague grounds" — What are.

In none of the grounds had any date or time been mentioned. In one of the grounds in which it was alleged that the petitioner orgainsed two illegal strikes not only was there no mention of the date but no particulars were given as to the place or places where the alleged strikes were said to have occurred nor of the persons against whom they were alleged to have been directed.

Held, that these grounds were in terms which were too vague to enable the petitioner to make an adequate representation. AIR 1953 SC 318, Foll. 1954 All LJ 6: 1954 All WR (HC) 34: 1954 Cr LJ 685: ILR (1954) 2 All 230: AIR 1954 All 315 (316, 317) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 13, 15) (DB).

——S. 7 — Detention for maintenance of public order — Ground supplied mentioning breach of public peace and helping another to go underground — Sufficiency of.

The ground supplied to the detenu that he with another person tried to chalk out a programme for the breach of the peace is not enough to detain him in order to prevent him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. Such disclosure of ground conveys nothing. A breach of peace may affect only a limited number of persons but breach of public order conveys the idea of actions on the part of individuals acting as a community calculated to disturb the peace. Thus the ground has no causal or direct connection with the maintenance of public order and is far too vague and indefinite. So also to help a person go "underground" cannot be a ground for detaining a person unless such rendering of help is connected with the maintenance of public order. 52 Cri LJ 732: ILR (1951) 2 All 493: AIR 1950 All 709 (711) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

——S. 7 — Grounds of detention — Particulars — Sufficiency.

It is absolutely necessary that the grounds of detention supplied to a detenu must be quite definite as well as precise.

A ground of detention stating that the detenu used to meet certain dacoit whenever he came to the detenu's village is absolutely vague and indefinite. So also a ground, which states that the detenu had given shelter to the gang of that dacoit in his village at some period before the date when the detenu was taken under detention, and that in this way and also other ways, the detenu had directly or indirectly helped the dacoits in their activities. (1950) 3 Sau LR 232: AIR 1951 Sau 13 (14) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

——S. 7 — Detention grounds — Vagueness — Statement in grounds that detenu was responsible for strike — Fact that strike was illegal not mentioned — Ground if vague.

Merely stating in the grounds for detention that the detenu was responsible for strikes amongst the labourers without mentioning whether they were legal or illegal is not a ground of such precision or adequacy as to enable the detenu to make a representation against the order of detention. AIR 1949 Pat 236, Foll. 1952 Cri LJ 683: AIR 1952 Bhopal 6 (12) (Pt E) (Pr 21).

——S. 7 — Grounds of detention — Insufficiency — Grounds and facts — Distinction — Constitution of India, Article 22 (6).

Insufficiency of the ground supplied to a detenu would not render the detention order invalid ab initio.

Unreasonable delay however in communication of the grounds or communication of inadequate or vague and indefinite grounds would make further detention of the detenu illegal. Distinction between 'facts' and 'grounds' pointed out.

Where the grounds stated that the detenu (a wholesale licensed dealer in foodgrains) was engagaing himself in the activity of hoarding considerable quantity of food-grains from out of their normal circulation so vitally necessary for the life of the community and thereby offended against the provisions of Section 3 (1) (a) (iii) and also disclosed that the object of such hoarding was to profiteer by selling the hoarded stock in the blackmarket.

Held, that the grounds disclosed were not insufficient for enabling the detenu to make a representation, although all the sources of information which led the authorities to the conclusion that detention was essential to prevent the detenu from selling in black-market, were not disclosed.

Selling in the black-market amounts to interfering with the normal supply to the community at large.

The act complained of was not done by him as a licensed dealer but stood completely outside it. Hence, it could not be argued that the self-same act of the detenu, as a licensee, could be dealt with in a punitive measure rather than preventive. 17 Cut LT 109: 52 Cri LJ 679: ILR (1951) Cut 387: AIR 1951 Orissa 251 (253 to 255) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 9 to 11, 17, 18) (DB).

——S. 7 — Vagueness of grounds — Tests of vagueness.

Whenever the grounds are found vague, the detenu is entitled to an order of release from the Court. They can be held to be vague if the minimum of information that will entitle the detenu to present a case in his expected representation is not available on the face of it. Besides, the vagueness consists in that the reasons of apprehension of the detaining authority are too remote being mere possibility upon possibility or contingency upon contingency. Merely saying that detenu is a dangerous character and his creed is communism, is not sufficient.

It is not for the Court to consider the falsity or otherwise of the allegations. It is the function of the Advisory Board. 17 Cut LT 313: 52 Cri LJ 110: AIR 1951 Orissa 27 (28, 29) (Pt C) (Prs 5, 6, 7) (DB).

——S. 7 — Duty of detaining authority — Grounds to be specific and precise.

Section 7 of the Preventive Detention Act which compels the detaining authority to supply persons deprived of their liberty without a trial and to afford them an opportunity of making a representation for the purpose of clarifying their position and repudiating the grounds urged against them, are meant to be considered as substituted for trial. This minimum of liberty should not be further whittled down. The grounds should not be indefinite or vague, but should be specific and precise, though they need not disclose facts which are against the public interest to disclose. Where the grounds communicated to a detenu are that he is an avowed member of the communist Party who are out to follow the avowed policy of the party and are describing the agitation of that party as civil war, and are making every attempt to collect weapons and foment disorder, etc., and that the detenu is likely to go underground to further the plans of the Communist Party, namely, commission of sabotage and violence, but there is no mention as to when, where and with whom he was planning, it must be held that the grounds are too vague to be availed of for the purpose of making a representation. Such grounds when the party as such has not been declared unlawful are not valid grounds for taking action under S. 8 of the Act, and the Court will order the detenu to be released forthwith, because in the circumstances the State cannot be considered to have made out a case of any clear, immediate danger happening to the maintenance of public order by allowing the detenu to remain at large. ILR (1950) Cut 540: 52 Cr LJ 104: AIR 1951 Orissa 20 (21) (Prs 4, 5) (DB).

——S. 7 — Insufficient ground — Personal opinion about Prime Minster of India.

One of the grounds supplied to the petitioner for his detention was that he associated himself with the fast undertaken by A and that the petitioner criticised the Congress Government and accused the Indian Prime Minister in his speeches saying that the Prime Minister was solely responsible for the partition of India and cow-slaughter. It was also alleged that he incited the public against cow-slaughter and threatened the Government with bad consequences if A expired.

Held, that the statement about the Prime Minister of India indicated only the personal approach to those problems of the petitioner but that statement in itself could not be taken in any way to have any connection with the maintenance of public order, inasmuch as these statements could not have any rational probative force to serve as a ground for the detention of the petitioner. Held, further that both the expressions 'incited the public against cow-slaughter" and "threatened the Government with bad consequences" were so vague as not to lead to the conclusion that any kind of violence was to be practised by the people in case A expired. 1956 Cr LJ 86: AIR 1956 Pat 1 : (2) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Ss. 7 and 3 (1) (a) — Facts and particulars of detenu's acts — Disclosure of — Government is not bound to disclose — But where ground merely states that the detenue is constantly engaged in doing something without telling him anything further it falls short of the requirements of law — It does not give any information to the detenue which he can controvert — Ground is therefore, vague — See Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (4 of 1950), Section 3 (1) (a). AIR 1953 Pepsu 190.

——Ss. 7 and 3 — Ground furnished to detenu stating that he was a believer in the cult of violence — No facts quoted in support of the allegation — Ground is vague and detention illegal. See Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), Section 3. 1952 Cri LJ 1485: AIR 1952 Pepsu 126 (DB).

——S. 7 — Sufficiency of grounds of detention — Test — Precision.

It is necessary that the grounds of detention supplied to detenu under S. 7 of the Preventive Detention Act must be quite definite as well as precise. So merely stating that the detenu had given shelter to the gang of dacoits some time prior to his being taken into detention is not enough as it is vague and a proper representation cannot be made on such grounds. 3 Sau LR 232: AIR 1951 Sau 13 (14) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

● ——S. 7 — Grounds of detention — Vagueness — Test — (Constitution of India, Article 22 (5)).

The question as to whether the grounds furnished are vague or not, is ultimately a question that has to be determined on a consideration of the circumstances of each case. AIR 1951 SC 15, Foll.: The grounds of detention furnished to the detenu were as follows: "With the financial help given by the Portuguese authorities you are carrying on espionage on behalf of the Portuguese Government with the help of underground workers. You are also collecting intelligence about the security arrangements on the border area and you make such intelligence available to the Portuguese authorities. These activities which are being carried on by you with the object of causing further deterioration in the relations between the Portuguese Government and the Indian Government over the question of Goan National Movement, are prejudicial to the security of India and to the relations of India with Portugal". The detenu did not apply to the Government to be supplied with the particulars of the grounds furnished to him.

Held, that it was true that the allegations were not as precise and specific as might have been desired. But having regard to the nature of the alleged activities of the appellant, it was not unlikely that no more could be gathered or furnished. The fact that the detenu made no application for particulars was a circumstance which might well be taken into consideration in deciding whether the grounds can be considered to be vague. In the circumstances and having regard to the fact that what was alleged was espionage activity at a time when relations between the two Governments on the affairs of Goa were somewhat delicate, the grounds could not be considered to be vague. Lawrence Joachem Joseph D'Souza v. State of Bombay, 1956 SCA 766: 1956 Cr LJ 935: 1956 SCJ 559: 1956 All WR (Sup) 121: 58 Bom LR 989: 1956 SCR 382: AIR 1956 SC 531 (534) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

——S. 7 — Grounds of detention vague — No prejudice to detenu — Section, if complied with.

Although grounds and particulars communicated to the detenu must not be vague, indefinite or incomplete and must convey sufficient information to the detenu to enable him to make a representation that the detaining authority was wrong in its belief that his detention was necessary in the interest of public safety etc., if the detenu knew what incidents were being referred to and was, therefore, not prejudiced by any defect in the grounds themselves. There is a substantial compliance with the provisions of Section 7. 1952 Cri LJ 422: AIR 1951 All 18 (19) (Pt B) (Pr 2) (DB).

——S. 7 — Scope — Compliance — Detention order under Section 3 (2) but grounds described as being under Section 3 (1) (a) (iii) — Held, this was a slip in the superfluous portion of the communication — There was sufficient compliance with the forms and rules of law — Order of detention was valid. ——S. 7 — Vagueness of grounds — Detenu member of party not declared illegal — Activities of party may afford background for appreciation of acts attributed to detenu, which acts may by themselves be innocent — Grounds supplied held not vague.

The grounds suppiied to the detenu must be such as would assist the detenu to know exactly what he has been charged with and to make a proper representation to which he is entitled both under the Act and under the Constitution. If they are not, there is violation of fundamental right and a contravention of the statutory provisions, which will make the order a void order. What is a ground contemplated under the Act to be given to a detenu for the purpose of his representation has been explained in the case of the State of Bombay v. Atma Ram Shridhar Vaidya (1951 SCR 167) by Kania C. J. The activities of a party, in general, which has not been declared illegal may not by itself be a ground for holding that any particular programme of that party. The activities of the party only afford background for an intelligent appreciation and weighing of the acts attributed to the particular member. In the light of this back ground many of the acts of the particular member, which are innocent and legal on the face of it, may be found to have a different implication behind them. Therefore, the ground that a particular act on the face of it is legal or innocent by itself is not sufficent to exonerate the individual for the purpose of preventive detention. His activities have to be weighed in the light of all surrounding circumstances wherein he has voluntarily placed himself. The responsibility is his for placing himself in those surroundings, and he does it not without risk of being even sometimes truly misunderstood. The remedy of having been so misunderstood is in the right of explaining his acts in his representation and not a plea in Court for setting aside the order. 1951 SCR 167, Relied on.

Held, on facts that the grounds supplied did afford sufficient facts to disclose the charge framed against the detenu and enable him to make a representation. 1952 Cri LJ 1382: AIR 1952 Pat 374 (375) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 7 — Grounds — Held on facts that they were not vague and that the detention was legal.

The statement of the grounds supplied to the detenu mentioned that he was an important member of the Communist Party of India, that though there was change of leadership in the middle of 1950 this brought about "little change in the highly subversive programme of the party", all the members of the reconstituted Central Committee and "practical experience of leading armed agrarian agitation in the rural areas", that, this Committee in the early part of 1951 circularised all party units that "while exploiting the legal possibilities" the revolutionary trade unions should orientate towards illegal trade unionism as the principal form of organisation, and that "the perspective of the fight to be initiated was armed guerilla struggle in rural areas leading to the gradual establishment of 'liberated bases' setting up of 'liberation armies' for the purpose of a final overthrow of the Government". The present programme of the party was set out in paragraph 6 and the following paragraphs of the grounds which were: "Although Sri Chandra Rajeshwar Rao has resigned from the General Secretaryship of the party and the Polit Bureau, which is now functioning as the Secretariat of Central Committee, has issued a draft programme of the party which gives an impression that the party has decided to abjure violence and armed struggle and has taken to only legal methods, Government have dependable information that the party is still definitely of the view that without violence no revolution can take place and consequently it is taking steps not only to continue its underground "Tech" organisation but to strengthen it and tighten it. In actual practice also it is continuing its orgy of loot, arson and murder in Hyderabad, Andhra, Tripura, Manipur and other places. It is, therefore, abundantly clear that the C. P. I. has now divided the activities on two fronts, an open front where the party still exploits all legal possibilities and an illegal front for carrying on armed guerialla struggle in rural areas for the formation of liberation bases and liberation armies, that the State Government is satisfied that the members of the Communist Party of Bihar who continue to be working for the party's cause have accepted the party's aforesaid programme, and that members who do not accept the programme or show any hesitation are promptly suspended, expelled or 'purged' from the party".

Held, per Reuben and Narayan JJ.— There was nothing in the grounds, to justify the inference therefrom that the party was divided into two groups, one consisting of those partaking in the legal activities and the other consisting of those indulging in activities of the opposite kind. The grounds were quite consistent with a member of the party taking part openly in one set of activities and at the same time being an active participator in underground activities of the other set. It was also consistent with a member of the party whose participation in the illegal activities at an opportune moment was important, attempting to evade detention or arrest in the meantime by apparently confining himself to legal activities. What had been pointed was this that though the draft programme showed that the party had now decided to abjure violence, it had really not done like that and that the draft programme was nothing but a camouflage meant to deceive the public and the State. The question of mentioning to which group the detenu belonged did not, therefore, arise and the grounds were not vague on that ground.

Per Imam J.— (Contra) — That the grounds definitely mentioned that the Communist had formed into two groups and the grounds should have mentioned to which group detenu belonged. Without this it was impossible for him to make effective representation. The grounds were vague and the detention illegal. ILR 31 Pat 1: 1952 Cri LJ 484: AIR 1952 Pat 177 (179, 182, 183, 184) (Pt B) (Prs 5a, 12g, 16a, 18c) (DB).

——S. 7 (1) — Vagueness of grounds — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5).

Where it is apparent from Annexure containing the grounds and the facts or particulars that the petitioner had been clearly told that he had come into possession of certain official secrets connected with the security of India and having a bearing on relations of India with foreign powers while he was serving under the Government of India as an officer in the Air Headquarters in the Ministry of Defence and that during the period March to October, '63 he had established and maintained secret contacts with an agent of a foreign power and had been in unauthorised and clandestine communication with him with a view to disclosing vital secret information connected with the security of India and further that he continued to be in possession of that secret information which justified a belief that he would communicate the same to the agents of foreign powers, it could not be said that the grounds did not disclose the necessary facts or particulars or that in the absence of such facts or particulars he was not in a position to make an effective representation. Though the petitioner could have been tried under Section 34 (d) or 35 (b) of the Air Force Act (1950) or under Section 5 (1) of the Official Secrets Act (1923), that does not suggest that there was any lack of good faith on the part of the respondents in detaining him under Preventive Detention Act. 1965 Pun LR (Supp) 286: 1965 (2) Cr LJ 119: AIR 1965 Punj 270 (275, 276) (Pt C) (Prs 7, 9) (DB).

——S. 7 — Sufficiency of grounds.

Where the first sentence in the grounds supplied to the detenu only alleged his association with a gang headed by a certain named person wanted by the police in 15 cases of murder and dacoity, but in the same paragraph the grounds continued with the words 'amongst the many acts of your association and assistance, a few specific acts are mentioned below' which were followed by details of three recent occasions on which the detenu had been seen in the company of that leader of the gang the ground cannot be said to be vague, though the first sentence taken by itself may possibly be regarded as somewhat vague. 56 Punj LR 291: 1954 Cr LJ 1068: AIR 1954 Punj 154 (155, 156) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 7 — Grounds of detention — Vagueness.

10. Sufficiency of grounds.

——S. 7 — Notice containing grounds and other facts — Vagueness in facts — Effect on validity — (Constitution of India, Article 22 (5)).

When on perusal of the notice under Section 7 it is clear that the grounds and reasons for the detention are contained in the first paragraph of the said Notice and that other paragraphs are only compendium of the facts and particulars on whch the subjective satisfaction of the statutory authority was based for coming to the conclusions mentioned in the first paragraph, any vagueness, irrelevancy or the like in the facts and particulars supplied in the other paragraphs would not affect the validity of the detention order so long as the grounds furnished do not suffer from any of those defects. AIR 1951 SC 157 and AIR 1954 SC 276, Rel. on. ILR (1957) 2 All 42: 1957 Cri LJ 1361: AIR 1957 All 782 (792) (Pt E) (Pr 17) (DB).

——S. 7 — Ground of detention — Ground held not vague and indefinite — Detenue was holding secret meetings and inciting students and villagers of a place to resort to unconstitutional activities in order to bring about a disruption of the present order by violent means—This ground is by itself not insufficient to warrant an order of detention. AIR 1951 Assam 29 (31, 34) (Prs 9, 24) (DB).

——S. 7 — Grounds making wide and sweeping allegations against detenu without disclosing bases of those allegations are not sufficient. AIR 1951 Cal 194 (196) (Pt C) (Pr 13) (DB).

——S. 7 — Scope — Membership of communist party is not enough for action under Act.

When nothing else is known a mere membership of the Communist Party, if it has not been declared an unlawful body, would not attract the provisions of the Preventive Detention Act. In all democratic States it is essential that the citizens should be made conversant with the pros and cons of every political system and every politial ideology, and so long as a party organisation merely tries to place its own views before the people it does not matter, and a Court cannot in such a case interfere with the activities of that party as long as they are confined to the limits mentioned above. The broadcasting and the preaching of the philosophy and the ideology of a party like the Communist Party would not justify an interference by the Government with the activities of that organisation but once such an organisation in attempting to achieve its object has recourse to activities of a violent nature resulting in danger to public safety, the Government would step in to stop the organisation from carrying on its activities. Where, therefore, members forming part of an organisation are known to indulge in acts of violence and brutality and a person is a member of such an organisation, it is sufficient to raise a suspicion in the mind of the Government that if such person were allowed to be at large he is likely to act in a manner prejudicial to the safety of the public. In order to warrant action being taken under the Preventive Detention Act, it is necessary that there should be sufficient material to satisfy the Government that the person was actively fomenting and inciting violence and instigating people to resort to subversive activities. AIR 1950 FC 129, Rel. on. ILR (1952) Hyd 122: 1952 Cri LJ 1076: AIR 1952 Hyd 112 (118) (Pt I) (Pr 14) (DB).

——S. 7 — Grounds of detention — Sufficiency of.

The petitioner was originally detained in 1948 under the Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act, and when that Act was considered to be inconsistent with the Constitution, was directed to be detained by the State under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, passed by Parliament. The grounds of detention which were served on the petitioner were attacked on three grounds, viz., (i) that the grounds were vague and indefinite as no particulars were given; (ii) there was no present connection between the order of detention and past activities of the petitioner; and (iii) they had no relation either to the security of the State or the maintenance of public safety.

Held: (i) The satisfaction contemplated in Section 3 of the Act is that of the detaining authority and since the section only provided for a subjective standard and not an objective standard of satisfaction, the particulars of the reasons for detention need not be furnished, though if the grounds of detention are very vague and indefinite so as to render the object of furnishing the grounds nugatory the order may be set aside.

(ii) No doubt a person cannot be deprived of his liberty merely because he belongs to a political organisation whose ideologies differ from the party in power but when the aims and objects of the party are to create confusion and to threaten injury to society which the Government has a right to protect and they are sought to be achieved by resorting to violence and terror, the Government would well be justified in detaining a peson who is instrumental in carrying out such a programme and who is likely to resort to activities calculated to prejudice the security of the State and the maintenance of the public order in pursuance of the aims of such a party.

(iii) In judging likelihood of a person of his propensities to indulge in activities prejudicial to the security of the State or maintenance of public order, regard can be had to the antecedents of the person. 1951 Mad WN 248: 1951 Mad WN (Cri) 76: 64 Mad LW 311: 52 Cr LJ 688: (1951) 1 MLJ 274: AIR 1951 Mad 182 (184, 185) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 13) (DB).

——S. 7 — Detention grounds — Inaccuracy in — Effect — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5).

Any slight inaccuracy in details of the grounds stated cannot be held to invalidate an order of detention. The inaccuracy has to be considered in the light of, and against the background of, all the grounds which have been communicated to the detenu. It would be pushing technicality to an unreasonable extent. If it were to be held that a slight inaccuracy in the name of the village or regarding a date amounts to a contravention of Clause (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution, or shows that the order is mala fide or that the detaining authoriy did not apply its mind before passing the orders of detention. The inaccuracies complained of are not inaccuracies which affect either the form or substance of the orders of detention. 52 Cri LJ 603: AIR 1951 Pat 68 (72) (Pt C) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

11. Supplementary grounds — When permissible.

● ——S. 7 — Communication of supplementary grounds.

A description of the contents of the second communication of the grounds for detention as "supplementary grounds" does not necessarily make them additional or new grounds. One has to look at the contents to find out whether they are new grounds. When they only furnish details of the grounds furnished to the detenu previously, they can be treated as new grounds. Further the fact that the details were communicated later does not necessarily show that they were not within the knowledge of the authorities when they sent the first communication of grounds. ——S. 7 — Scope — Non-compliance — Particulars not such as to enable detenu to make representation — Effect — Subsequent furnishing of better and further particulars — If validates order — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5).

The grounds of detention which have to be furnished under Section 7 of the Preventive Detention Act, as well as under Article 22 (5) of the Constitution, constitutes a very important and vital safeguard for the subject. If the grounds furnished are not such as to give him the opportunity, which the Constitution makes it incumbent, of making a representation against the order of detention, then there is a clear contravention of the fundamental rights given to the subject and of the safeguard given to him under Article 22 (5) of the Constitution, and the detention becomes bad and illegal for non-compliance with Article 22 (5) and of S. 7 of the Preventive Detention Act. That defect and illegality cannot be set right by the detaining authority by amplifying or improving the grounds already given, by subsequently furnishing further and better particulars. It is not open to the detaining authority to furnish grounds in several instalments. The grounds to be furnished are grounds in existence at the time of the order and on the basis of which the detention order is made. 21 Bom Cri Cas 43: ILR (1951) Bom 155: 52 Bom LR 856: AIR 1951 Bom 266 (267) (Pt B) (Prs 3, 5) (DB).

See Constitution of India, Article 21. 1954 Cri LJ 685: AIR 1954 All 315 (DB).

——S. 7 — Grounds of detention — Vagueness — Test.

Sub-clause (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution enjoins upon the detaining authority the duty to communicate to the detenu as soon as may be the grounds on which the order has been made and the detaining authority should afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order. In that context the supply of the grounds and the opportunity of making a representation are to be read together so that if the grounds are too vague that they make representation ineffective or impossible in any real sense of the term, then such vagueness will be defeating the constitutional right of representation. When that is so, then the order of detention can be set aside.

The object of this constitutional safeguard is that the grounds must be such as to enable the detenu to make what has been called an 'effective representation". Vagueness of grounds therefore is not an abstract notion but is always to be examined by the test whether the grounds permit the detenu to make an effective representation or not. 55 CWN 27, Rel. on.

Each case has to be decided on its own merits and with special reference to individual facts. The confusion that is to be avoided on this branch of constitutional law is that while the sufficiency of the grounds in the sense whether the same could give satisfaction to the Government is not a matter for examination by the Courts, the sufficiency of the grounds in the sense of enabling a detenu to make an effective representation can be examined by the Courts. Case No. 24 of 1950 (SC), Rel. on.

In considering the grounds they must be taken and read as a whole and in context in which they are stated. While a ground taken in isolation might appear to be too vague for representation may nevertheless in the context of other grounds stated, give sufficient materials for effective representation. It is not correct to say that when one out of many grounds is too vague the order of detention itself is bad even though such order is based not only on that ground alone but also on other grounds which do not suffer from vagueness. The order of detention is the result of the cumulative effect of the different grounds stated and the vagueness of one ground cannot therefore be said to vitiate the order of detention. 56 Cal WN 42: ILR (1953) 1 Cal 59: 1952 Cri LJ 204: AIR 1952 Cal 26 (28, 29) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 8, 9) (DB).

●——S. 7 — Grounds — Contents — Introduction of irrelevant matter — Effect.

The grounds supplied to the person detained should show relevancy to the object which the Legislature has in view, namely, the prevention of objects prejudicial to the maintenance of law and order. For introduction, of irrelevant matters vitiates the detention order as a whole, though there may be only a few grounds that are irrelevant or illusory. AIR 1954 SC 179, Foll. Ghulam Qadir Hawaraz v. State, 1955 Cr LJ 1597: AIR 1955 J and K 35 (36) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (FB).

——S. 7 — One of several grounds vague — Effect.

ILR (1953) Patiala 1: 1953 Cri LJ 1710: AIR 1953 Pepsu 190 (192) (Pt C) (Pr 6).

——S. 7 — Grounds under — Validity — Some grounds vague and incorrect — Effect.

The question whether the grounds supplied in the particular case can be regarded as vague and incomplete is a question of fact to be decided with respect to facts of each case.

If some of the grounds given are not outside the scope and ambit of the Act but are merely vague and indefinite, it cannot be said that the whole order is vitiated because some extraneous consideration might have weighed with the detaining authority in making the order. A ground which is bad because it lacks precision and accuracy has to be completely ignored as if no ground was furnished at all. If after eliminating such grounds there still remain a ground or grounds which are precise and accurate and which can justify the order, then there is no reason why the order made by the detaining authority should not stand. AIR 1948 Bom 334 (FB) and AIR 1950 Mad 162, Rel. on.

Held, that though some of the grounds supplied to the detenu were vague and indefinite, there were others which could justify the order of detention. 52 Cri LJ 1100: AIR 1951 Pepsu 164 (165 to 167) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 8, 10) (DB).

——S. 7 — Sufficiency of grounds.

The mere past mental attitude of the detenu, which showed that at some past period he indulged in prejudicial activities cannot form a ground for any reasonable satisfaction of the detaining authority so as to justify his detention, when there is no statement of his activities in the proximate or immediate past in the grounds. 1952 Cri LJ 683: AIR 1952 Bhopal 6 (10, 12) (Pt D) (Prs 15, 24).

15. Representation by detenu.

——S. 7 — 'Earliest opportunity of making representation' — Meaning of — Provision mandatory — Effect of non-compliance — Supplying two sets of grounds resulting in prejudice to detenu — Proceedings vitiated.

The third requirement of Section 7 is that the grounds shall afford the detenu "the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order". Bearing in mind the object of the section and its entire context, the word "opportunity" used therein should be construed to mean "adequate opportunity" and the word "representation" should be construed to mean "effective representation".

Where the detenu was supplied with two sets of grounds, one by the District Magistrate making the order and the other by the State Government after the expiry of 5 days allowed by law, the second set of grounds should be ignored as not being in accordance with law. If the detenu is misled into thinking that the first set of grounds is superseded and makes a representation againt the second set, a serious and irreparable prejudice is caused to the detenu so as to vitiate the proceedings. Moreover where such a mandatory provision of law is contravened in a case of this nature, the proceedings are vitiated irrespective of the question of prejudice. Prejudice in such a case should be presumed. ILR (1961) 1 All 427.

——Ss. 7 and 9 — Sections show that detenu should have a minimum period of 25 days to submit his representation — Curtailing such period is a serious irregularity which cannot be condoned. ILR (1961) 1 All 427.

——S. 7 — Right of detenu to ask for further particulars.

If the detenu feels embarrassed by reason of want of necessary details he has the right to ask for further necessary particulars since that right follows from his other right to make an effective representation before the authority concerned. 1964 (1) Cri LJ 515: AIR 1964 Cal 231 (234) (Pt D) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 7 — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5) — Grounds of detention — Insufficiency of particulars — Detenu has right to obtain further details.

Sufficiency of the grounds for the purpose of inducing satisfaction of the authority concerned is entirely different from sufficiency in relation to the detenu's right to make an effective representation. If the detenu even felt that sufficient details had not been supplied with respect to them or any of them, it was quite open to him to apply for further particulars. He had that right flowing from his constitutional right of making an effective representation against the order of detention. 1963 (2) Cri LJ 499: AIR 1963 Cal 589 (590) (Pt C) (Prs 8, 9) (DB).

16. Disclosure of facts — Sub-sec. (2).

——S. 7 — Affidavit filed by detaining authority — Recourse to Constitution of India, Article 22 (6).

"I must point out that we have noticed a general, but definite, tendency amongst the detaining authorities to say in their affidavits in a vague way that whatever is stated in the grounds of detention is the only material which could be furnished to the detenu and that any further disclosure is against public interest. I must express disapproval of the omnibus manner in which recourse is taken to Article 22 (6) of the Constitution for claiming privilege. In my opinion, such general, indefinite and omnibus expression as is employed in the detaining authority's affidavit is open to a real danger that it may be used sometimes to shut out some possible contentions which a detenu may take in order to challenge his detention. That surely could never have been the intention of the Constituent Assembly in enacting Article 22 (6)". 53 Bom LR 127: 21 Bom Cri Cas 80: 52 Cri LJ 418: ILR (1951) Bom 546: AIR 1951 Bom 33 (43) (Pt I) (Pr 21) (DB).

17. Powers of High Court.

——S. 7 — Constitution of India, Article 22 (5) — Grounds supplied to detenu — Jurisdiction of Court to test if they are sufficient arises when the question whether the vagueness or indefiniteness of the statement furnished to the detained person is such as to give him the earliest opportunity to make a representation to the authority arises. See Constitution of India, Article 22 (5). 52 Cri LJ 373: AIR 1951 SC 157.

——S. 7 — Constitution of India, Articles 226, 21 and 22 — Habeas Corpus — Detention under Preventive Detention Act — Allegation as to non-existence of grounds would be basis for the Board to hold that there is no sufficient cause for detention — Opportunity to be heard can be had before the Advisory Board — Reagitation of matter before High Court is not allowed — Absence of provision for reagitation in High Court — Remedy is to get the law changed and not to approach the Court. See Constitution of India, Article 226. 1956 Cri LJ 1152: AIR 1956 All 589 (DB).

——Ss. 7 and 3 — Grounds of detention — Sufficiency of — Power of Court to go into — Preventive and punitive detention — Distinction — (Constitution of India, Articles 22 and 226).

The subjective satisfaction as regards the sufficiency of the grounds for passing a detention order is the satisfaction exclusively of the authority which has to pass such an order, and it is not for the High Court to enter into the merits of that order. That being so, it follows necessarily that it is not open to the High Court to examine the said materials with a view to determining whether the aforesaid subjective satisfaction of the executive authority concerned had been arrived at correctly or not.

The only purpose for which the grounds, and therefore the materials for those grounds, could be judicially examined would be to see whether they were sufficient to enable the detenu to make an effective representation contemplated by Article 22 (5) of the Constitution, or whether they were relevant to the circumstances under which the detention could be supported or whether the order had been made mala fide. It follows therefore that it is not open to the detenu to urge before the High Court that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction or authority to take into account the speeches delivered by him in the district outside his jurisdiction.

Further, preventive detention is by its very nature different from what may be called punitive detention. The latter results, on a trial of the person concerned for committing a crime after his guilt has been established in a competent Court of justice, whereas the former is not a punitive but a precautionary measure the object of which is not to punish a man for having done something but to intercept him before he does it and to prevent him from doing it. That being so, justification for action under the Act is suspicion or reasonable probability and not criminal conviction. Such a suspicion may well be based on any past actions of the person concerned, and they may even be actions committed outside the jurisdiction of the authority passing the order of detention. ——S. 7 — Grounds of detention supplied to detenu — Court if can look into these and to what purpose.

It is open to the Court to look into the grounds supplied to the detenu, in order to determine whether the detention is proper or improper. It can look into the grounds to see whether they are precise and definite. Thus, although it is not open to the Court to question the reasonableness or otherwise of the satisfaction of the detaining authority yet it is certainly competent to the Court to satisfy itself that, on the materials supplied to the detenu, the detaining authority could be honestly satisfied as to the correctness of the order passed by it. 52 Cri LJ 732: ILR 1951-2 All 493: AIR 1950 All 709 (710) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

——Ss. 7 and 3 — Power of Court to question truth or falsity of grounds — The Court cannot go into the question of truth or falsity of the statement of facts contained in the grounds of detention. If the facts stated in the grounds of detention are disputed, the remedy that the law allows to the petitioner is by a representation to the Government. See Preventive Detention Act (4 of 1950), Section 3. 1953 Cri LJ 770: AIR 1953 Assam 97.

——S. 7 — Power of High Court.

High Court cannot enter into the question whether the statement of fact made in the grounds supplied to the petitioner are true or not. It is a matter for the consideration of the Advisory Board. 1953 Cr LJ 507: AIR 1953 Assam 63 (64) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——S. 7 — Detention grounds — Vagueness of mind of detaining authority.

The detention grounds are liable to be examined not with a view to ascertain their existence as a fact, but with a view to examine the state of mind of the detaining authority. If the state of the mind of the detaining authority discloses that he has been casual in his approach and that he has not applied his mind with that diligence which is necessary when the question is of taking away the liberty of a subject, the Court will interfere and will set at liberty the detenu arrested by the order of the detaining authority. ——S. 7 — Order of detention — Grounds — High Court's power to go into the matter.

Although it is not open to the High Court to question the sufficiency of grounds on which the order has been made or to embark upon an enquiry into the questions of fact, the High Court can find out whether the order of detention has been made on rational grounds. 1961 Nag LJ (Notes) 34 (Bom).

——Ss. 7 (1), 3 — Satisfaction — Essentials of — Grounds as evidence of satisfaction — (Constitution of India, Article 22).

The Courts must look at the grounds disclosed to the detenu under Section 7 (1) from two points of view: In the first place to consider whether they came within the ambit of the Act and the second, which is equally important, is whether they furnish an opportunity, and a reasonable opportunity, to the detenu of making a representation which he has a right to make under the section.

Further, the grounds that are to be furnished to the detenu being grounds on which the order has been made, they may also be looked at by the Courts for the purpose of satisfying themselves whether the Government or the officer concerned arrived at the satisfaction which is necessary under Section 3 before a valid order could be made. It may be that the detaining authority may have more materials than the grounds; but the grounds must be the essential basis upon which the detaining authority arrives at its satisfaction and makes the order of detention. 1956 Cr LJ 875: ILR (1956) Bom 792: 58 Bom LR 473: AIR 1956 Bom 490 (491) (Pt C) (Pr 3) (DB).

——S. 7 — Nature of order of detention and duty of High Court — High Court can only see whether the order challenged is sufficiently full and clear so as to give the detenu an opportunity to make an effective representation against the order — It cannot decide whether the material in possession of the Government was sufficient to justify the order or the reasonableness of the satisfaction of Government as to the necessity of passing the order against the detenu. See Constitution of India, Article 22 (5). AIR 1955 NUC (Bom) 5556 (DB).

——S. 7 — Grounds for detention — Sufficiency, vagueness or imprecision of — Powers of High Court to determine.

The High Court has only the power to see whether the detenu has been enabled to exercise his constitutional right of making an effective representation against the order he complains of. This really resolves itself to the question of vagueness or imprecision, of the grounds. Whether the grounds were sufficient in the opinion of the detaining authority for the purpose of inducing its subjective satisfaction in making the order of detention, is a matter which is entirely outside the purview of the Court's consideration. Further, it is not right to equate want of particulars or vagueness with irrelevance. An irrelevant ground has no connection at all with the satisfaction of the authority making the order of detention.

While the Court should not uphold an order of detention in spite of invalidity of some of the reasons or grounds, it is its duty to be satisfied as to whether the allegedly vague or irrelevant ground is such as, if excluded, might reasonably have affected the subjective satisfaction of the authority concerned. If some ground or reason appears to the Court to be of comparatively unessential nature, the order of detention cannot be held bad, merely because there are one or two such particulars amongst a number of others upon which an order of detention has been made. AIR 1957 SC 164, Rel. on. 1963 (2) Cri LJ 499: AIR 1963 Cal 589 (590) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 8, 9, 10) (DB).

——S. 7 — Facts in grounds of detention — High Court's power to question them.

The High Court is not entitled to go into the question whether the statements made in the grounds and in the particulars served later were untrue.

The High Court cannot sit as a Court of appeal and hold that the facts alleged are not true or have not been established. 1953 Cri LJ 361: AIR 1953 Cal 129 (134) (Pt C) (Pr 33) (DB).

——Ss. 7 and 3 — Power of Court to question vagueness of grounds — The Court can only go into the question whether the grounds supplied to the detenu are irrelevant or vague and can afford a basis for the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority. See Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), Section 3. 1953 Cri LJ 310: AIR 1953 Cal 81 (DB).

——S. 7 — Grounds, sufficiency of.

Adequacy or sufficiency of grounds justifying an order of detention is not justiciable. Inference drawn by Government on facts supplied to it cannot also be gone into. AIR 1951 SC 157 and 1950 SCJ 433, Rel. on. ILR (1953) Hyd 459: (1953) Cr LJ 1845: AIR 1953 Hyd 277 (280) (Pt E) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 7 — Grounds of detention — Power of High Court to look into, to determine whether order of detention is mala fide.

In cases of preventive detention the executive must act within the limits of the powers conferred by law; it must act bona fide and it must act according to the provisions of the Law and the Court has a power to scrutinise the action of the executive from the point of view of ascertaining whether the action taken was bona fide or not. Hence, where a person arrested in respect of certain offence is released from jail on a writ of habeas corpus but is immediately arrested under Section 7, Preventive Detention Act on ground which had been held to be illegal that very day, the Court can look into the grounds of detention with a view to see whether the order of detention is male fide or bona fide. Such an action on the part of the executive is bound to shake the confidence of the public in Courts and suitable action for committal for contempt should invariably be taken. 1956 Cr LJ 1411: AIR 1956 Manipur 44 (47, 48) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 10, 11).

——S. 7 — Grounds of detention — Satisfaction of detaining authority — Interference by Court.

Before the Government can pass an order of preventive detention under the Act it must be satisfied with respect to the individual person that his activities are directed against one or other of the objects mentioned in the Act and that it was necessary to prevent him from acting in such a manner. If the ground by itself is not so convincingly irrelevant and incapable of bringing about satisfaction in any rational person the question whether such ground can give rise to the satisfaction required for making the order is outside the scope of the inquiry of the Court. 1952 Cr LJ 1382: AIR 1952 Pat 374 (375, 376) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——S. 7 — Detenu's petition for release to the High Court — It is not within the scope of such a petition to enquire into the truth or falsehood of the grounds supplied to the detenu — (Constitution of India, Article 226). See Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 491. 1953 Cri LJ 1710: AIR 1953 Pepsu 190.

——S. 7 — Grounds not true — Interference by High Court — Constitution of India, Article 226.

The mere fact that the grounds on which the detaining authority made an order of detention were not true is not a matter for the High Court to go into in a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution. ILR (1952) Patiala 445: 1953 Cr LJ 1519: AIR 1953 Pepsu 145 (145) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

——S. 7 — Grounds of detention vague — High Court should not direct Government to supply fresh grounds containing fuller particulars. AIR 1951 Punj 8 (10) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

——S. 7 — Particulars of grounds of detention need not be furnished — Grounds supplied should not be irrelevant — Detenu can however ask for further particulars — Courts cannot enquire into truth of grounds, unless it is found that action of detaining authority is mala fide — Burden to establish mala fide is on detenu — Court cannot also enquire into sufficiency of grounds for satisfaction of detaining authority — It can only see whether grounds are relevant and whether the authority was reasonably satisfied — Since grounds had no bearing on objects order of detention held bad — Constitution of India, Article 22.

Neither in Article 22 nor in Preventive Detention Act is there any express provision that particulars of the grounds of detention should be given to the person detained. Looking to the wordings of Article 22 of the Constitution of India and Section 7 of the Act, it is not necessary that any particulars should have been given by the detaining authority in the grounds furnished to the detenu. Grounds which form the basis of satisfaction when formulated are bound to contain certain facts but mostly they are themselves deductions of facts from facts. Simply because the grounds are such that no answer can be given to them excepting a simple denial, it cannot be said that the grounds are vague. Of course, it is desirable that the detaining authority should give the information with reasonable details to the detenu, but when it is not so given and only the grounds for the order are given, it cannot be said that the provisions of either Article 22 of the Constitution of India or of Section 7 of the Act are not complied with. An order of detention cannot therefore, be vacated simply on that gounds so long as the grounds furnished are not irrelevant to the objects mentioned in Section 3 of the Act. It is open to a detenu to ask the detaining authority for further particulars if he thinks that he is not in a position to make an effective representation on the grounds supplied to him, or the Government itself might at a later date furnish such particulars but it is not incumbent upon the detaining authority to furnish all sorts of particulars in its possession, besides the grounds having a bearing on the objects which satisfied the detaining authority that the detenu should be detained.

As regards the truth of the grounds, it is not open to the Court to go into them, unless it records a finding that the action of the detaining authority was mala fide. The burden of proving the mala fides lies heavily on the detenu and under circumstances by their mere affidavit which have been answered by the counter affidavit of the District Magistrate, it cannot be said that they have established a case of mala fide.

It is also not permissible for the Court to see whether the grounds were sufficient for the satisfaction of the District Magistrate that the detention of the detenu was necessary in the interest of the objects mentioned in the order of detention. All that it is authorised to see is whether the grounds bear any relevancy to the objects mentioned in the detention orders. Unless mala fides are proved, a Court cannot go into such questions.

The only thing, therefore, that the Court has to consider is whether the District Magistrate can be said from the grounds furnished to the detenu to have had mental satisfaction that it was necessary to detain him with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State and the maintenance of the public order (which objects were mentioned in the detention order). The term "satisfied" in this context means "reasonably satisfied".

Though it is not permissible for the Court to see whether the grounds given are true or sufficient, it is certainly (permissible for it to be satisfied) whether detaining authority was reasonably satisfied that the material supplied showed that an intended detenu was acting in any manner prejudicial to one or more of the objects, given in section 3. It is not permissble to a detaining authority to issue an order of detention mechanically incorporating the words of Section 3. It is necessary for it to issue such order after mental satisfaction. In grave cases of detention without trial, it would not do to pass routine orders, but the detaining authority should carefully consider the materials before it, and then form its opinion whether it warrants order of detention for fulfilment of any of the objects given in Section 3. When orders of detention are made for several reasons without distinguishing between them, there is a reasonable doubt as to whether the detaining authority was reasonably satisfied that the materials placed before it were sufficient for making a detention order because it cannot be said which of the reasons principally influenced the detaining authority in making the detention order. It is necessary for the detaining authority to examine the materials before it and then to form a clear opinion as to whether it was necessary to make an order of detention in the interest of one or the other object given in Section 3 of the Act. It is not permissible to recite all, or more than one object given in Section 3 in the order of detention, and when it is shown by the grounds that they have no bearing upon some of those objects, to fall back upon the argument that they have at least bearing upon one or more of those objects. This argument does not take note of the fact that it is necessary for the detaining authority to apply its mind before making an order of detention to the question as to which of the acts alleged against the intended detenu have bearing on a particular object for which he is going to be detained. 1953 Cri LJ 34: 1953 Raj LW 232: ILR (1952) 2 Raj 569: AIR 1952 Raj 171 (174 to 177) (Prs 10, 11, 13) (DB).

——S. 7 — Failure of detaining authority to do his duty properly — Right of detenu to apply to Court.

A duty has been cast upon the detaining authority by Section 5 of the Preventive Detention Act to supply to the detenu the grounds of his detention. If he fails in that duty, the detenu can come up to the Court direct and ask for his release on the ground that a mandatory provision of the Act has not been complied with. He is not bound to complain to the authority. Even if he complains to the authority in ignorance of his rights, the Court can take cognizance of it and consider whether the duty has been discharged properly. 3 Sau LR 232: AIR 1951 Sau 13 (14) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

18. Burden of proof.

——S. 7 — Grounds for detention — Burden of proof.

The burden to prove that the reasons for detention supplied to the detenu were of such a nature that it was possible for the detenu to base thereon his representation to the Government lies upon the State.

Where the Government verbally communicates the reasons for detention and there is no evidence to show what those reasons were the order of detention must be held to be illegal. (1950) 2 Pepsu LR 471: 1952 Cri LJ 591: AIR 1952 Pepsu 61 (62) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

19. Pleas permissible in the Court.

——S. 7 — Detention grounds — Further facts not disclosed on grounds of public interest — Decision can be challenged only on grounds of mala fides.

When giving the grounds for detention, the authority may and indeed usually should embody in the grounds the conclusions which are reached by him. But under the Constitution itself he is not required to disclose such facts as it is not in the public interest to disclose. It is obvious, therefore, that, in the first instance, at any rate, the authority which detains has to determine whether it is in the public interest to disclose a particular fact or not. Its decision can be challenged consequently only on the ground that it is a mala fide decision. 53 Bom LR 717: 21 Bom Cr C 210: 1952 Cri LJ 81: ILR (1952) Bom 134: AIR 1952 Bom 1 (10) (Pt G) (Pr 21) (DB).

——S. 7 — Sufficiency of grounds upon which the satisfaction of the detaining authority is based cannot be challenged in a Court of law except on the ground of mala fides — A Court of law is not competent to enquire into the truth or otherwise of the facts which are mentioned as grounds of detention communicated to the detenu. Mere vagueness of grounds standing by itself and without leading to an inference of mala fides or lack of good faith is not a justiciable issue in a Court of law for the necessity of quashing the order of detention, inasmuch as the ground or grounds on which the order of detention was made is a matter for the subjective satisfaction of the Government or of the detaining authority. —S. 8 (as amended by Act 4 of 1951) — Notification constituting Advisory Board issued after the amendment — Omission to state that notification was issued under Section 8 as amended — Effect.

Where the Notification constituting an Advisory Board under S. 8 was issued after the Act had been amended, and the notification took cognizance of the amendment, it must be assumed the Board was constituted under the Act of 1950 as amended. The omission to state that the notification was being issued under Section 8 of the Act of 1950 as amended does not detract from the validity of the Notification. 1953 Cri LJ 220: ILR (1952) 4 Assam 295: AIR 1953 Assam 22 (23) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

● —Ss. 8, 10 (as amended in 1951) — Constitution of India, Article 21 — Reference of detenu not considered by three members — Effect.

Having regard to the proviso added to sub-section (2) of Section 8 and to sub-section 2-A, inserted after sub-section (2) of Section 10 of Act

4 of 1950 by the amending Act of 1951 there is no doubt that references made in respect of orders of detention passed on or after 22-2-51 must be considered by all the three members of the Advisory Board.

Article 21 of the Constitution applies to orders passed under a Preventive Detention Act. A State can justify continuance of detenion of a person if it has followed the procedure established by law, namely procedure as laid down in the Preventive Detention Act 1950 (4 of 1950) as amended by Act 4 of 1951. Where, therefore, a detenu's case is considered only by two members and not by all the three members of the Advisory Board, it follows that the fundamental right of the detenu as guaranteed by Article 21 has been infringed, and that he is entitled to be released forthwith. ——Ss. 9, 3—Mala fides of authority—The mere fact that the Government had made an undue haste in obtaining the decision of the Advisory Board for purpose of confirming the order of detention cannot lead to inference of mala fide on part of the Government especially when there is no allegation of any violation of any provisions of the Act — See Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), Section 3. 1953 Cri LJ 770: AIR 1953 Assam 97.

●——Ss. 9, 14 (as amended in 1951) — Detenu released on parole — Effect on reference under Section 9.

It is plain from the language of Section 9 that the necessity for a reference to an Advisory Board is the subsistence of an order of detention and that it matters not that the detenu has been temporarily released in pursuance of Section 14 of the Act. There is no limitation placed by the Constitution upon Parliament in deciding what procedure should be laid down for the holding of the inquiry by the advisory board. Further, the advisory board has been given the power to call for such further information as it may deem necessary from the Government. Further, the right has been given to the detenu to be heard by the advisory board. Even assuming that the Constitution contemplated a judicial or quasi-judicial inquiry by the advisory board, the procedure laid down in Section 10 does not offend against either the principles of natural justice or the test of a proper judicial inquiry. 58 Bom LR 602: ILR (1956) Bom 715.

Though Government is technically correct in not accepting the representation sent by the detenu after the period prescribed under S. 9, yet it would be far better if the technicalities are waived and the representation is placed before the Advisory Board. 1953 Cri LJ 361: AIR 1953 Cal 129 (135) (Pt G) (Pr 43) (DB).

——Ss. 9, 10, 11 — Right of detenu to apply under Section 491, Criminal P. C. or Article 226 — Reference to Advisory Board.

A detenu has the legal and constitutional right to approach the High Court, under S. 491, Criminal P. C. or Art. 226, Constitution of India, before he has made any representation or before there is any reference to the Advisory Board and before the time for such reference or report by the Board has expired.

The disposal of a petition under Section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or even Article 226 of the Constitution cannot at all affect the applicant's cause before the Advisory Board.

There is no competition or conflict between the Advisory Board and the Courts under the scheme of Constitution as well as under the Preventive Detention Act. The Court's order of dismissal is not an adverse adjudication on the merits of the "cause for detention" in this context. The merits or demerits of the cause for detention are not within the purview of the Courts but of the Advisory Board. 56 Cal WN 42: 1952 Cri LJ 204: ILR (1953) 1 Cal 89: AIR 1952 Cal 26 (31, 32) (Pt D) (Prs 24, 26).

——S. 9 — 'Within thirty days from the date of detention' — (General Clauses Act (1897), Section 10).

The thirty days period prescribed by Section 9 is governed by Section 10, General Clauses Act, so that if the period expires on a holiday, the material can be placed before the Board on next day on which the office of the Board is open. The placing of the requisite material before the Board is an act or proceeding within the meaning of Section 10, General Clauses Act. Madh BLR 1955 Cr 268: Madh BLJ 1954 HCR 1442: 1955 Cr LJ 476: ILR (1955) Madh Bha 98: AIR 1955 Madh Bha 36 (38) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 9 — 'Place before the Advisory Board' — Meaning of.

The plain meaning of the expression 'place the material before the Advisory Board' is simply this, that the material should be made available to the Board or placed in their hands. It cannot be said that the material can be said to be placed before the Board only if the Board at a formal meeting is made aware of the material and the Board at that meeting applies its mind to the detenu's case. Section 9 is sufficiently complied with if the material referred to therein is handed over in the office of the Board within thirty days from the date of detention. Madh BLJ 1954 HCR 1442: Madh BLR 1955 (Cri) 268: 1955 Cr LJ 476: ILR (1955) Madh Bha 98: AIR 1955 Madh B 36 (38) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Ss. 9 (2) (a) and 12 (a) as amended by Act 4 of 1951 — Scope of Section 9 (2) (a).

Though Section 9 (2) (a) in terms applies to all classes of detentions under the Act which continued to be in force from the date of the commencement of the amending Act by virtue of Section 12 (a), the scope of that clause should however be limited to those classes of detentions where orders did not expire within six weeks from 22-2-51. ILR (1951) Cal 529: 18 Cut LT 58: 1952 Cri LJ 1113: AIR 952 Orissa 208 (209) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

Where the petitioners were detained under the Act before its amendment and after the amendment the Government passed fresh orders of detention wherein previous orders were expressly referred to and it was stated that "in partial modification" of those orders the Government were pleased to detain the petitioners and the grounds for detention communicated to the petitioners were identical with those for the detention under the unamended Act and the reference to Advisory Board was made after the expiry of the period of six weeks from 22-2-51 and similarly the report of the Board was submitted to the Government after the expiry of ten weeks from that date.

Held, that the detention had been all along continuous and consequently the right of the petitioners to have their case referred to the Advisory Board within six weeks from 22-2-51 would not be taken away and similarly the duty cast on the Board to submit their report to the Government within ten weeks from that day must be strictly obeyed.

Held, further that since the time-limits fixed in Sections 9 (1) and 10 (1) were not complied with it could not be held that the detention was in accordance with the procedure established by law. There was a clear violation of the fundamental right guaranteed under Article 21 which invalidated the subsequent detention even if it be held that the detention orders were valid in their inception. ILR (1951) Cut 529: 1952 Cri LJ 1113: 18 Cut LT 529: AIR 1952 Orissa 208 (210, 211) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

——Ss. 10 and 11 — Report of Advisory Board — Order of detention not confirmed within reasonable period — Continued detention — Legality.

Section 10, Preventive Detention Act, imposes a statutory obligation on the Advisory Board to submit a report to Government within a period of 10 weeks from the date of the detention under Section 11 (1). The Government may confirm the order of detention if the Advisory Board is of the opinion that there is sufficient cause for the detention of the detenu. Section 11 (1) does not specify the period during which the order of detention should be confirmed by the appropriate Government, but there can be little doubt that it should be confirmed within a reasonable period, i.e., within a period which a man of ordinary prudence would consider reasonable in the circumstances of the case. If the Government does not confirm the order of detention within a reasonable period, the detention of the detenu becomes illegal and improper, and he is entitled to be released from custody. 1952 Cr LJ 1493: 54 PLR 47: ILR (1952) Punj 129: AIR 1952 Punj 349 (349) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

2. Desires to be heard.

——S. 10 (1) and (3) — 'If the person concerned desires to be heard" — Meaning of.

Reading sub-sections (1) and (3) of Section 10 together there is no doubt that the intention behind the use of the words "if the person concerned desires to be heard" appearing in sub-sec. (1) was that the detenu, if so desired to be heard personally, would be entitled to be heard by the Board. To say that these words mean a desire to be heard either in person or through counsel would be to overlook sub-sec. (3) on account of which a detenu can never claim to be heard through counsel. 1955 Raj LW 480: 1955 Cr LJ 1517: ILR (1955) 5 Raj 761: AIR 1955 Raj 185 (185) (Pr 3) (DB).

●——S. 10 (1) — Validity — Procedure under — If opposed to principles of natural justice.

It is clear from Section 10 (1) that the Advisory Board, after considering the materials placed before it under Section 9, can call for further information from the appropriate Government and that thereafter if in any particular case it considers it essential so to do or if the detenu desires to be heard, after hearing him, submit its report to the appropriate Government. In such a situation the Advisory Board must of necessity obtain further information from the appropriate Government before it hears the detenu. ——S. 10 — Scope — Refusal of the Advisory Board to call records of cases required by detenu — There is no infringement either of Article 22 (5) or of Section 10 of the Preventive Detention Act (1950). See Constitution of India, Article 22 (5). 1962 (1) Cri LJ 311: AIR 1962 Cal 162 (DB).

In an application under Article 226 of the Constitution questioning the validity of an order of detention of a person under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, it is not open to the petitioner to canvass the factual correctness of the grounds of detention even for the limited purpose of deciding whether the order of detention is mala fide. The report of the Advisory Board under Section 10 of the Act is not equivalent to a judgment or order of a judicial or quasi-judicial tribunal. It is no doubt true that Section 10 (2) draws a distinction between the report of an Advisory Board and its opinion. But the question does not prescribe as to what the report should contain. Having regard to the provisions of Section 10 (3) which make the report of the Advisory Committee confidential what is really required is the unambiguous opinion of the Advisory Board and the factual existence of a report setting out the reasons for the opinion is not a condition precedent for the exercise of power by the Government under Section 11 of the Act. The non-existence of a report setting out the reasons of the Advisory Board for its opinion will not affect the validity of the order of Government under Section 11 of the Act. (1958) MLJ (Cr) 607: 1958 Mad WN 369: (1958) 2 MLJ 169: ILR (1958) Mad 692: 71 Mad LW 228: 1958 Cr LJ 1047: AIR 1958 Mad 425 (429, 430) (Pt D) (Prs 17, 21).

4. Non-submission of report within ten weeks — Effect.

●——S. 10 — Advisory Board not making report within 10 weeks — Effect on — Detention — (Constitution of India, Article 226).

The making of the report by the Advisory Board under Section 10 within the time prescribed by law (10 weeks) is of the utmost importance to the detenu and the failure to make the report in time may quite conceivably have the effect of unlawfully prolonging the detention and, therefore after the expiry of the ten weeks the detenu may well complain that he has been deprived of his personal liberty otherwise than in accordance with procedure established by law. Where the ten weeks' time within which the report of the Advisory Board was to be filed expired on October 27, 1957 and the habeas corpus petition was filed on November 8, 1957, the detenu may well complain that on and from October 28, 1957, his detention has become illegal and bad.

Under Section 10 of the Act the Board has no power to make any order to continue or discontinue the detention, but is only under a duty to submit its report to the State Government. When the petitioner says in his petition for habeas corpus, that the Board has not passed any order, in the context, he means that the Board has not submitted its report. Dharam Singh v. State of Punjab, 36 Mys LJ 341: 1958 Cr LJ 282: 1958 SCJ 425: 1958 All WR (HC) 396: 1958 Mad LJ (Cri) 409: 1958 All Cri R 289: 1958 SCR 96: AIR 1958 SC 152 (153) (Prs 3, 4).

——S. 10 — Non-compliance — Effect — Constitution of India, Art. 22.

The provisions of Section 10 of the Preventive Detention Act appear to be mandatory. If the Advisory Board fails to submit its report within the period prescribed by Section 10 and consequently the Government does not pass orders under Section 11 the detention of the detenu after the expiry of the period provided will in any case become illegal, and the accused is entitled to be set at liberty. ——S. 10 (1) — Failure to report within ten weeks — Constitution of India, Art. 21.

It is clear from the language of Section 10 (1) of the Act that the provision as to the submission of the Advisory Board's report within ten weeks is imperative and that the Advisory Board has to conform to the time limit there prescribed. If the report of the Advisory Board was not submitted to the Government within ten weeks from the date of the order of detention further detention becomes illegal — Case law discussed. 1953 Cri LJ 503: AIR 1953 Sau 51 (51, 52) (Pt B) (Prs 3, 5) (DB).

5. Detenu whether entitled to a copy of the report.

——Ss. 10 and 7 — Object of Advisory Board's report — Communication of Board's report to detenu more than three months after his arrest — If renders detention illegal.

The Act does not provide anywhere for the communication of the Advisory Board's report to the detenu. Under Section 10 the report has to be submitted by the Board only to the appropriate Government within 10 weeks from the date of detention. In other words, the Board's report only serves the purpose of enabling the appropriate Government either to confirm the detention order and continue the detention of the person concerned or to revoke that order and cause the person to be released forthwith. That being so, no question of supplying the detenu with a copy of the Advisory Board's report arises, for it would be of no use to the detenu. Hence, the fact that the decision of the Board was communicated to the detenu more than three months after his arrest will not make the detention illegal. 1956 Cr LJ 1152: AIR 1956 All 589 (592) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

Before exercising the statutory power under Section 11 (1) of the Act at its discretion, the Government is not bound to take into account both the report and the opinion of the Advisory Board. Both sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 11 require of the Government that it should consider the opinion of the Advisory Board reported to it by that Board. It is the opinion of the Advisory Board that is relevant both under sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 11, the opinion of the Advisory Board reported by that board to the Government. The language of Section 11 (1) gives no indication of what the "report" referred to in Sections 10 (2) and 10 (3) of the Act should contain.

The report is confidential even from the Court. The Court is not entitled to examine the report even to verify whether it satisfies what Section 10 requires. There is certainly nothing in Section 10 or in Section 11 that required the Advisory Board to submit to the Government the reasons for the opinion, which Section 10 (2) requires the Board to report to the Government. Whether or not the Court can ascertain whether there was factually a report apart from the opinion of the Advisory Board, the Court is not entitled to examine the contents of the report for any purpose. 1958 Mad WN 369: (1958) 2 Mad LJ 169: 71 Mad LW 328: 1958 Mad LJ (Cri) 607: 1958 Cr LJ 1047: ILR (1958) Mad 692: AIR 1959 Mad 425 (429, 430) (Pt E) (Prs 18, 19) (DB).

Held, that the order was not in conformity with Section 11 under which Government could either confirm the order of detention made under Section 3 or revoke it completely and that there was nothing in law which prevented the Government from making a fresh order of detention if it so chose. ●——S. 11 (i) — Decision confirming detention order — Inclusion of direction for continuation of detention — Necessity.

Per Das, J.— Patanjali Sastri, C. J., concurring :— Grammatically Section 11 (1) confers two powers, namely (1) the appropriate Government may confirm the detention order and (2) the appropriate Government may continue the detention for such period as it thinks fit. The confirmation of the detention order certainly contemplates the taking of an executive decision, but the detenu being already in custody and the detention order being confirmed his detention continues automatically and, therefore, no further executive decision is called for to continue the detention. It follows that it is not necessary to include a direction for the confirmation of the detention in the decision confirming the detention order. Dattatraya Moreshwar v. ●——S. 11 (1) — Confirmation order — Non-compliance with Article 166 of Constitution — (Constitution of India, Article 166 (1)).

It is well settled that generally speaking the provisions of a statute creating public duties are directory and those conferring private rights are imperative. When the provisions of a statute relate to the performance of a public duty and the case is such that to hold null and void acts done in neglect of this duty would work serious general inconvenience or injustice to persons who have no control over those entrusted with the duty and at the same time would not promote the main object of the legislature, it has been the practice of the Courts to hold such provisions to be directory only, the neglect of them not affecting the validity of the acts done.

While the Preventive Detention Act requires an executive decision, call it an order or an executive action, for the confirmation of an order of detention under Section 11 (1) that Act does not itself prescribe any particular form of expression of that executive decision. Article 166 directs all executive action to be expressed and authenticated in the manner therein laid down but an omission to comply with those provisions does not render the executive action a nullity. Therefore, all that the procedure established by law requires is that the appropriate Government must take a decision as to whether the detention order should be confirmed or not under Section 11 (1). Where such decision has been in fact taken by the appropriate Government, there is no breach of the procedure established by law and the detention cannot be called in question. ● ——Ss. 11 (1) and 13 — Order under Section 11 (1) — Power to extend period of detention.

Per Mukherjea, J.:— Chandrasekhara Aiyar. J. Concurring:— Once the appropriate Government in making the order under Section 11 (1) specifies the period during which the detention of the person concerned is to continue, it does not become functus officio and is not incapable of extending the detention for a further period at a subsequent time if it considers necessary. Section 13 of the Act gives very wide powers to the detaining authority in this respect and it can revoke or modify any detention order at any time it chooses and the power of modification would certainly include a power of extension of the period of detention, provided such power is exercised before the period originally fixed has expired and provided the extended period does not exceed the over-all limit which is co-extensive with the life or duration of the Act itself. ——Ss. 11 (1) and 3 (1) (a) — Scope — Government, if bound to disclose all the grounds on which order of detention is made.

Having regard to the different provisions of the Preventive Detention Act the order of confirmation which the Government is required to make under Section 11 of the Act has to be made within a period of three months from the date of detention. Sub-section (1) of Section 11 makes it clear that confirmation order in question has to be made if the Government after the receipt of the report from the Advisory Board decides to continue the detention and in view of the provisions of Clause (4) of Article 22 of the Constitution such confirmation has to be made within three months from the date of detention. Clause (5) and Clause (6) of Article 22 of the Constitution read together make it obligatory on the part of the Government to disclose all the grounds on which the order has been made though not all the facts constituting such grounds. In other words although the Government may not in the public interest disclose the full particulars of the grounds supplied, the Government is bound to disclose all the grounds on which the order of detention is based. 36 Mys LJ 580: ILR (1957) Mys 374: (1958) Mad LJ (Cr) 670: 1959 Cr LJ 63: AIR 1959 Mys 7 (9, 10) (Pt A) (Prs 13, 14, 15) (DB).

Section 11 does not specify the period during which the order of detention should be confirmed by the appropriate Government, but there can be little doubt that it should be confirmed within a reasonable period, i.e., within a period which a man of ordinary prudence would consider reasonable in the circumstances of the case.

Where the report of the Advisory Board was received on the 4th August and the order of confirmation was not communicated till the 24th September it was passed after the lapse of a period which could not be regarded as reasonable.

When order of confirmation was passed one month after the petitioner detenu had presented an application for writ of habeas corpus, after the counsel of the State had been repeatedly asked to produce it, the detention is an infringement of fundamental rights of the petitioner. ('52) 54 Pun LR 47: 1952 Cri LJ 1493: ILR (1952) Punj 129: AIR 1952 Punj 349 (349, 350) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 7, 8) (DB).

——S. 11 — It is obligatory on State to confirm order of detention and satisfy court that order has in fact been confirmed.

Section 11 imposes a statutory obligation on the appropriate Government to confirm the order of

When no evidence of this confirmation is placed before the Court excepting only the letter of the Home Secretary to the Chief Commissioner informing the Supdt. of jail in which the detenu was confined that his representation to the Advisory Board has been rejected, in the absence of evidence to the effect that the Chief Commissioner had in fact passed the order of confirmation, the Court will only hold that no such order was passed. 54 Pun LR 47: 1952 Cri LJ 1493: ILR (1952) Punj 129: AIR 1952 Punj 349 (349) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

4. Fixing the period of detention.

● ——S. 11 (1) — Constitution of India, Article 22 (4) and (7) — 'Such detention' — Meaning of — Section 11 (1), Preventive Detention Act, whether contravenes Article 22.

Per Majority, A. K. Sarkar, J., (Dissenting). — Clause (4) of Article 22 does not state that the Advisory Board has to determine whether the person detained should be detained for more than three months. What it has to determine is whether the detention is at all justified. The matter before the Advisory Board is the subject of detention of the person concerned and not for how long he should be detained. Clause (7) of Article 22 is an exception to Clause (4) of that Article. The expression 'such detention' in Article 22 (4) (a) refers to preventive detention and not to how long the person is to be detained. The decision as to the period of detention must be of the detaining authority. The reference to the Board is only a safeguard against Executive vagaries and high-handed action and is a machinery devised by the Constitution to review the decision of the Executive on the basis of a representation made by the detenu, the grounds of detention, and where the order is by an officer. the report of such officer.

Under the Preventive Detention Act as amended in 1951, the Government must determine what the period of detention should be only after the Advisory Board to which the case is referred reports that the detention is justified. AIR 1952 SC 27 and AIR 1952 SC 181, Rel. on. Sub-section (1) of Section 11 of the Preventive Detention Act does not, therefore, contravene any of the provisions of Article 22 of the Constitution and is accordingly valid.

Per A. K. Sarkar, J.: — The words 'such detention' in Article 22 (4) (a) of the Constitution must necessarily refer to detention for a period longer than three years and not to preventive detention simpliciter; and hence Section 11 (1) of the Preventive Detention Act must be held to be ultra vires. ● ——S. 11 (1) — "Such period as it thinks fit" — Non-specification of period — Validity of detention.

Per Majority of the Court (Mahajan, J. dissenting) :— On a proper construction of Section 11 (1), a specification of the period of continuation of the detention is not necessary, however desirable one may consider it to be. Non-specification of such period at the time of confirming the detention order will not, therefore, make detention a nullity.

The non-determination by Government of the period of the continuance of the detention operates prejudicially against the detenus and makes the detention illegal. Dattatraya Moreshwar v. ——S. 11 (1) — Confirmation order of detention under Section 11 — No obligation to fix detention period.

The language employed in Clause (1) does not impose any obligation on the appropriate Government to determine the period of detention when confirming an order of detention.

It may be very desirable that the Provincial Government should be under an obligation to fix a period at the confirmation stage. But if the Legislature has not made it obligatory for the appropriate Government to do so, the requirement may not be read in Section 11, Clause (1) by the process of interpretation. Principles of natural justice also must not be invoked for the purpose.

The Government no doubt has got the power to determine for what period a person is to be detained if the Advisory Board has reported that there is sufficient cause for his detention. If it wants to fix it, it would be after the receipt of the report. But it is a very different thing to say that it is obligatory on it to fix the period and that if it does not, there is necessarily a non-compliance with the requirement of Section 11 (1). Majority view, (Bose, J., dissenting) :— As the Amending Act of 1951 is to be in force only up to 1-4-1952 and no detention under the Act can continue thereafter, the discretionary power given to the appropriate Government could be exercised only subject to that over-all limit and therefore, the validity of Section 11 (1) of the Act cannot be questioned on the ground that it authorises preventive detention for an indefinite period which is contrary to Art. 22 (4) of the Constitution. 1951 SCJ 453: (1951) 2 Mad LJ 105: 52 Cri LJ 1103: 64 Mad LW 945: 1951 SCR 621: AIR 1951 SC 301 (304) (Pt D) (Pr 11).

It cannot be contended that in so far as Section 11 of the Act as it stands after its amendment permits further detention after receiving the report of the Advisory Committee, there has been any contravention of Article 20 of the Constitution.

What sub-article (1) of Article 20 prevents is the infliction of a penalty greater than that which might have been inflicted under the law in force at the time of the commission of the same offence. The sub-article has, therefore, reference to a penalty to be imposed in respect of an offence, and where the question is one of preventive detention, the article has no application. 21 Bom Cri Cas 210: 1952 Cri LJ 81: ILR (1952) Bom 134: AIR 1952 Bom 1 (9) (Pt D) (Pr 15) (DB).

SECTION 11-A

● ——S. 11-A (2) as amended by Second Amendment Act 61 of 1952 — Applicability — Order of detention confirmed — Period not specified in order — Section 11-A (2) applies — Dates of expiry of earlier Acts (Amendment Act 4 of 1951 and Amendment Act 34 of 1952) cannot be read into order.

Section 11-A is clear and unless a shorter period is specified in the order of detention, Section 11-A (2) applies. The Court cannot add the words "or must be deemed to have been specified by reason of the expiry of the earlier Act" into the section. Section 11-A (2) validly extended the period of detention till the 1st April, 1953, and the contention that although no shorter period was specified in the order of petitioner's detention, since the detention under the previous Acts (Amendment Act 4 of 1951 and Amendment Act 34 of 1952) would have expired either on 31st March, 1952 or 30th September, 1952, one of those dates must be read into the order, is not tenable. ● ——S. 11-A — Validity.

Preventive Detention (Second Amendment) Act (61 of 1952) extended the life of the Principal Act 4 of 1950, till 31-12-1954. Therefore in the absence of Section 11-A all the old detentions would have been extended till that date. But Section 11-A modified that period and put 1-4-1953 as the latest date for them. Section 11-A therefore conferred a benefit and is not unreasonable. But it is inevitable that the length of detention will vary in each individual case, for, it is the discretion of the Government to fix the period of detention. Classification of detentions into those before and after 30-9-1952 is therefore not discriminatory within the meaning of Articles 22 (7) (b) and 14 of the Constitution and Section 11-A is not ultra vires. Godavari Parulekar v. State of Bombay, 1953 SCA 287: 1953 SCJ 28: (1953) 1 MLJ 203: 1953 Cri LJ 508: 1953 SCR 210: AIR 1953 SC 52 (53) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 10, 12).

Section 11-A (2) held, the detention did not extend automatically since the words "the order" in Section 11-A (2) refer, not to the initial order of detention, but to the order of detention as eventually confirmed under Section 11 (1). ——S. 11-A — Detention for period of more than one year.

What is rendered invalid by Section 11-A is continued detention for more than one year. Where the order of detention was passed on 29-7-1953 but the detenu was detained on 19-8-1955 in pursuance of this order, although detention commenced from 19-8-1955, the order passed on 29-7-1953 was still a good and valid order under which action could be taken by the State of Bombay.

But the Preventive Detention Act is not a Penal Statute. Therefore it was right for the State of Bombay to think that because an order was passed on 29-7-1953 therefore necessarily the detenu must be detained for a period of one year. What the Court has to consider is whether in detaining the detenu on 19-8-1955, the State of Bombay was acting bona fide. As there was no suggestion that there were any materials before any authority that between the period of 29-7-1953 and 19-8-1955 the detenu had indulged in any prejudicial activities or that his being at large on 19-8-1955 would be prejudicial to public order the detention was not bona fide. 1956 Cr LJ 379: AIR 1956 Bom 127 (127, 128) (Prs 3, 4, 5, 6) (DB).

——S. 11-A (2) — Fixation of period by District Magistrate is not permitted by any of the provisions of Act and such a direction would tend to prejudice a fair consideration of the Detenu's case by the Advisory Board — The Order referred to in Section 11-A (2) is the order to be passed by the Government under Section 11 after the receipt of the report of the Advisory Board. SECTION 12

● ——S. 12 — Omission to specify definite period of detention — If renders order invalid.

Section 12 of the Preventive Detention Act does not require that the period of detention should be specified in the order itself where the detention is with a view to preventing any person from acting in any manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. The section itself provides that he can be detained without obtaining the opinion of an Advisory Board for a period longer than three months but not exceeding one year from the date of detention. Under Art. 22 (4) (a) read with Art. 22 (7) (a) of the Constitution detention for more than three months can be justified either on the ground of an opinion of the Advisory Board sanctioning of warranting longer detention or on the ground that the detention is to secure the due maintenance of public order, in which case it cannot exceed one year in any event as stated in Section 12 of the Preventive Detention Act. It is thus clear that the period is not to exceed three months generally, but may go up to one year in certain special cases. In view of these provisions, the non-specification of any definite period in the detention order is not a material omission rendering the order itself invalid. Ujagar Singh v. ●——Ss. 12 and 3 — Order of detention under Section 3 not specifying period of detention is not invalid as S. 12 prescribes a maximum period of one year and hence such orders cannot be said to be of indefinite period or unlawful on that ground. ●——S. 12 — Scope — Section 12 of the Act merely lays down the maximum period for which a person can be detained but it does not lay down that in case the detaining authority prescribes no period, the detention will continue for the whole of this maximum period. ——Ss. 12, 3 and 7 — Grounds supplied to detenu must be connected with preventive order — Failure to establish such connection makes the order of detention invalid — Right of detenu — Detenu can contend before the Court that the grounds have no connection with the maintenance of public order or have no connection with the circumstances or class of cases under which a preventive detention order could be supported under Section 12, Preventive Detention Act 1950 — Constitution of India, Article 22. See Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), Section 3. 52 Cri LJ 732: ILR (1951) 2 All 493: AIR 1950 All 709.

——S. 12 — Scope.

Section 12 does not provide that detention under any law providing for preventive detention could be for a period up to one year. This provision is made just for the purposes of that Act only and the detention referred to therein is detention ordered under that particular Act. It cannot, therefore, be taken to be an enactment under Article 22 (7), Clauses (a) and (b) of the Constitution. 52 Cri LJ 1282: ILR (1952) 1 All 8: AIR 1950 All 562 (576) (Pt M) (Pr 56) (DB).

——S. 12 (as amended in 1951) — Legislation continuing detention of persons already detained — If ultra vires on ground of encroachment by Legislature upon powers of executive.

Section 12 as amended in 1951 is not ultra vires inasmuch as it continues detention by an Act passed by the Legislature.

It is true that the Legislature has continued for a further period, which was to be regulated by certain procedure mentioned in the amending Act, the detention of the persons who had already been detained by a valid order of detention in force at the date of the coming into force of the amending Act but that does not render the Act invalid. It is true that it may often be found that orders of detention are passed by executive officers whom the Legislature empowered by suitable legislation; but that does not come in the way of the Legislature legislating that, if there was in respect of any person a valid order of detention in force, the person shall be continued to be detained for a period to be stated or for a period to be regulated. It is not the question of an encroachment by Legislature upon the powers of the executive.

Where a nexecutive officer is empowered to do an act by a legislation enacted by Parliament, it cannot be said that Parliament encroaches upon th powers of the executive if subsequently it passes legislation continuing the orders of detention already in force. Even if there is any interference with the powers of executive given by Parliament, Parliament gave them and consequently was in a position to interfere with them. 53 Bom LR 717: 21 Bom Cr C 210: 1952 Cri LJ 81: ILR (1952) Bom 134: AIR 1952 Bom 1 (3) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 12 (as amended in 1951) — Validity — Provisions if contravene Article 20, Constitution of India — Constitution of India, Art. 20.

It cannot be contended that in so far as Section 11 (effecting amendment in Section 12) of the Act as it stands after its amendment permits further detention after receiving the report of the Advisory Committee, there has been any contravention of Article 20 of the Constitution.

What sub-article (1) of Article 20 prevents is the infliction of a penalty greater than that which might have been inflicted under the law in force at the time of the commission of the same offence. The sub-article has, therefore, reference to a penalty to be imposed in respect of an offence, and where the question is one of preventive detention, the article has no application. 53 Bom LR 717: 21 Bom Cr C 210: 1952 Cri LJ 81: ILR (1952) Bom 134: AIR 1952 Bom 1 (9) (Pt D) (Pr 15) (DB).

——S. 12 — Applicability — 'Such order' — Meaning of.

Per Guha Ray, J.:— Section 12 has no application to any order of detention which was not in force at the commencement of the Preventive Detention (Amendment) Act, 1951, i.e., on 22nd

February, 1951. The words "such order" in sub-section (b) clearly mean an order referred to in sub-section (a) i. e., an order in force on 22nd February, 1951. 1955 Cr LJ 1055: ILR (1957) 2 Cal 149: AIR 1955 Cal 374 (381) (Pt C) (Pr 30) (DB).

——S. 12 (2) — Mere initiation of review proceedings within six months.

Under Section 12 (2) it is necessary for the review to be completed within six months, and it is not a sufficient compliance with the statutory obligation if the proceedings be initiated within that period. The legislature by using words "shall within a period of six months from the date of his detention be reviewed" intended that the authorities concerned must complete their review within that period. The non-compliance with Section 12 (2) renders the further detention illegal. 1881 QBD 376, Rel. on. ——S. 12 — Previous detention under other law — If can be considered for one year, under Section 12.

The expression 'from the date of his detention' in Section 12 must refer to the detention under the Act under which the person is to be detained, that is to say, the Preventive Detention Act (4 of 1950) if Parliament has enacted that a person should be detained without his case having been referred to an Advisory Board for a period not exceeding one year from the date of his detention, it must have reference to the detention under the Preventive Detention Act and it would be ridiculous to hold that this maximum period of one year could be made up by taking into consideration, the previous detention under some previous enactment. ILR 29 Pat 992: 52 Cri LJ 282: AIR 1951 Pat 389 (392) (Pt C) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 13 — Scope of power of revocation.

The power of revocation conferred on the State Government by Section 13 of the Preventive Detention Act is untrammelled by any restrictions. There is nothing in the Act to suggest that this power of revocation cannot be exercised unless the procedure prescribed by Sections 9 and 10 of the Act has been followed. It follows, that when the State Government passes its own order of detention after revoking the order of detention passed by the District Magistrate, it cannot be attacked as ultra vires because the procedure prescribed by Sections 9 and 10 was not followed. 1951 All Cri Cas 123: 1951 AWR (HC) 502: 1952 Cr LJ 372: AIR 1952 180 (180, 181) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 7, 9).

——S. 13 (2) — Satisfaction based on past and present facts — Propriety.

When the detaining authority is in possession of some facts, both past and present, it is on the aggregate effect of all the facts taken together that the detaining authority has got to make up its mind, and it cannot be said with any reasonableness that the past activities of a man cannot be taken into account on which the satisfaction of the State Government should be based as to whether or not a particular person should be prevented from acting in a particular manner within the meaning of the Preventive Detention Act. It is open to the detaining authority to take into consideration and apply its mind afresh to the past activities as also to the activities which came to light after the revocation of the previous order of detention. When fresh grounds based on fresh facts have been incorporated in the same it is not at all necessary, under the provisions of Section 13 (2) of the Act, for the detaining authority to say expressly that its satisfaction about the necessity of passing a fresh order of detention was based on fresh facts. 1953 BLJR 371: 1953 Cri LJ 1734: AIR 1953 Pat 351 (352) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 13 (2) — 'Expiry" — Order of detention held illegal and invalid — It does not amount to "expiry" of order.

The word 'expiry' must necessarily have reference to time. If an order or an Act is held illegal, it becomes invalid as if it never existed. If an order or an Act is said to expire, it must convey the idea that the order or the Act has run out its full course with reference to time. Accordingly a declaration by the High Court that the detention of the detenu was illegal does not amount to expiry of the order of detention.

Where therefore the earlier order of detention is held invalid on more or less formal grounds, there is nothing in law, to prevent a proper order of detention being passed on the same grounds, and the mere fact that the subsequent detention order has been passed on the grounds as were mentioned in the previous order cannot lead the Court to hold that the detaining authorities acted mala fide. 1953 BLJR 354: ILR 32 Pat 480: 1953 Cri LJ 1690: AIR 1953 Pat 334 (335, 336) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 9) (DB).

——S. 13 — Power to revoke previous order.

When an authority has a power to make an order he has also inherent power to revoke the order once made, unless there is an express provision of law to the contrary.

Thus when a Deputy Commissioner passes an order under Section 3, Preventive Detention Act, he is competent to revoke the same. Moreover, in view of the fact the grounds of detention had not been supplied to the detenu in respect of the first order, that order was inoperative and illegal and for practical purposes it did not exist at all. The only order that would be effective is the later order. ILR (1952) Patiala 445: 1953 Cri LJ 1519: AIR 1953 Pepsu 145 (146) (Pt C) (Pr 4).

●——Ss. 9 (2) and 12 (1) (as amended in 1951) — Validity — Sections substantially satisfy requirements of Article 22 (4) (b) and are valid.

The combined effect of Sections 9 (2) (a) and 12 (1) of the Act as amended by Act 4 of 1951 is to provide, in a certain class of cases, namely, where detention orders were in force at the commencement of the new Act, that the persons concerned could be detained for a period longer than three months if an Advisory Board reports that there are sufficient grounds for detention within ten weeks from the commencement of the new Act, that is to say, without obtaining the opinion of an Advisory Board before the expiration of the three months from the commencement of the detention as provided in sub-clause (a) of Cl. (4). And, although the new Act does not in express terms prescribe in a separate provision any maximum period as such for which any person may in any class or classes be detained, it fixes, by extending the duration of the old Act till 1-4-1952, an over-all time-limit beyond which preventive detention under the Act cannot be continued. These sections, therefore, substantially satisfy the requirements of sub-clause (b) of Clause (4) of Article 22, and cannot be declared unconstitutional and void.

Per Mahajan, J.:— Technically speaking, an amended statute remains the same statute as originally enacted but from that proposition it does not follow that the law contained in the amended statute is the same law as was contained in the original one. The law declared by Sections 9 and 12 of the amended statute is not the same law as was declared by the original statute and to that extent the amended statute is in the nature of a new and independent statute. The new law admittedly standing by itself does not authorise detention of any person beyond a period of three months except in the manner provided by Article 22 (4) of the Constitution. No question whatever arises of tacking of the period of detention under one law to the period of detention under another law inasmuch as the detention under the earlier law automatically terminates with the repeal of Section 12 of Act 4 of 1950. These sections, therefore, do not contravene Article 22 (4) of the Constitution. 1951 SCJ 453: (1951) 2 Mad LJ 105: 52 Cri LJ 1103: 64 Mad LW 945: 1951 SCR 621: AIR 1951 SC 301 (303, 304, 306) (Pt A) (Prs 10, 22.)

——Ss. 9 (1), 10 (1) and 12 — Detention continued under Section 12 — Fresh opportunity to detenu to make representation it must be given.

It appears from the amending Act that where an order for detention is continued under the provisions of Section 12 of the Act the case of the detenu must be referred to an Advisory Board. But there is nothing whatever which requires the appropriate Government to give an opportunity to the detenu to make a representation to the Advisory Committee.

The detention is continued by the new Act pending the examination of the question by an Advisory Committee; but it cannot be regarded as a new detention in the sense that the detenu is to be given another opportunity to make a representation. 53 Bom LR 717: 21 Bom Cr C 210: 1952 Cri LJ 81: ILR (1952) Bom 134: AIR 1952 Bom 1 (9) (Pt E) (Prs 16, 17) (DB).

——Ss. 9, 10 and 11 — Scope — Order of detention under Section 3 — Report of Advisory Board under Section 9 that detention was justified received by Government — Failure of Government to pass order under Section 11 within three months of initial order — Further detention is illegal.

The intention of the Legislature in enacting Sections 9, 10, 11, Preventive Detention Act is that no detention is to be regarded as lawful beyond three months unless within that period the Government, on a report from the Advisory Board justifying detention, decides to confirm the detention order that in its view may appear to be necessary. It is mandatory that within three months of the detention, the initial detention order be reviewed in the light of the recommendation of the Advisory Board by the Government and that appropriate order be passed within that period. The remaining period of two weeks after the report of the Advisory Board is provided by the statute for that purpose. The law does not confer any authority or option on the Government to make a validating order after the expiry of the statutory three months beyond which the detention, although valid originally, must become invalid unless the Government exercises its discretionary powers under Section 11 to confirm the order and continue the detention.

The absence of an order terminating the detention, would not by itself, mean that the Government had decided to continue the detention for the period originally fixed by the District Magistrate, unless the Government makes a clear order to that effect, it cannot be taken to have considered the advisability of confirming the detention order and continuing the detention of the person concerned.

What Section 11 provides is that Government "may confirm and continue the detention" of the person concerned. The words "may confirm" and "and continue detention" have their own significance and they obviously mean that if the Government decides to continue the detention it must confirm the order of detention, and that the non-confirmation of the order would result in its revocation and termination of the detention. The verb "may" only indicates that it is not obligatory on the Government to confirm the detention order even though the Advisory Board has reported in favour of the necessity of continuing the detention. The phrase, read in its context, undoubtedly signifies that the Government, if it decides to continue the detention, must confirm the detention order. 3 Pepsu LR 595: 1952 Cri LJ 1452: AIR 1952 Pepsu 134 (135, 136) (Prs 3, 4, 5) (DB).

●——S. 3 — Section does not offend Article 22 (4) and (7) of Constitution — (Constitution of India, Article 22 (4) and (7)).

It cannot be contended that Section 3 offends the Constitution because Article 22 (4) and (7) do no envisage the direct intervention of Parliament in a whole batch of cases. Parliament can prescribe the minimum period for a class taken

●——S. 3 — Indefinite detention — Repugnancy to Constitution — (Constitution of India, Article 22 (7) (a)).

It cannot be said that Section 3 is repugnant to the Constitution, and in any event a fraud upon it, as it fixes no time limit, because the section specifies the exact period of the detention, namely till the expiry of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, that is to say, till the 1st of October 1952. —PREVENTIVE DETENTION (EXTENSION OF DURATION) ORDER (1950)

——Cl. 1 — Commencement of operation of Order — General Clauses Act (1897), Section 5 (3).

The Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, passed by the President under Article 22 (7) read with Article 373 of the Constitution does not amount to an Act of Parliament and does not come within the definition of Central Act or Regulation and as such Section 5 (3), General Clauses Act can have no application in determining the time from which the Order has to come into effect. Moreover the Order expressly states that it shall come into force 'at once' which refers to the time when it came into existence after the President assumed his office at 10.15 A. M. on 26th January 1950. Hence it cannot be held that the Order came into operation on the midnight of 25th January 1950. 52 Cri LJ 1282: ILR (1952) 1 All 8: AIR 1950 All 562 (573, 574, 580) (Pt I) (Prs 46, 47, 76) (DB).

The power to make adaptations in the Constitution itself could be exercised under Article 392 (3) by the Governor-General of the Dominion of India only before the commencement of the Constitution and not after it. Therefore, the Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order dated 26th January 1950 and purported to be signed by the Governor-General is of no value at all for purposes of adaptation of the Constitution Act; nor can it be of any value for purpose of Article 373 because, under that Article, it is only the President who can act after the commencement of the Constitution. 51 Cri LJ 1081: ILR 29 Pat 335: AIR 1950 Pat 265 (280) (Pt J) (Pr 63) (FB).

The Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950, made by the President of the Indian Republic, can have no effect so far as the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930 and the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949 are concerned.

The Act and the Ordinance became void as soon as the Constitution came into force (i. e., at midnight on 25th January 1950) by reason of the provisions of Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution. They cannot be revived by the subsequent Order of the President passed in the exercise of the powers conferred by Art. 22 (7) (a) and (b) read with Art. 373 of the Constitution. Sunil Kumar Bose v. The Preventive Detention Order of 1950 is of no effect.

The Order is also void because the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, is not an Act providing for preventive detention. — The Act and the Ordinance having become void could not be revived by the Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order 1950. The fiction applies to the law or the signature but not to the author. The exact time of signing of the Order by the President may be immaterial but the exact time of the President having the power to make an enforceable law becomes material. —PUNJAB CRIMINAL LAW (AMENDMENT) ACT (30 of 1960)

——S. 6 (2) — Bail — Granting of — Matters to be considered.

In deciding the question of bail in prosecutions under the Punjab Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, among the matters that are to be considered are (1) the charge made, (2) the attendant facts including such police reports as the Courts may think proper to consider, (3) the facts as stated by the petitioner in the petition for bail and (4) the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused. Though the stage for raising the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused does not arise till the conclusion of the trial and the appreciation of the entire evidence on the record, yet the matter of granting bail has to be considered in the background of the fact that in the Criminal Jurisprudence, which guides the Courts, there is a presumption of innocence in favour of the accused.

At this stage the question is only of a reasonable belief and not of a conclusion and a reasonable belief at this stage has nothing to do with the final conclusion which may be arrived at by the trial Court on the material on record as it would come after the evidence is recorded. ——S. 6 (1) and (2) — Sub-section (1) applies only to instigation or incitement for disobedience of order under Section 144, Criminal P. C.

Sub-section (1) of Section 6 does not punish instigation and incitement for commission of any offence, but only instigation or incitement "to act in disobedience of any order made under Section 144 of the Criminal P. C."

If, on the facts disclosed at the hearing, there is no reasonable ground for believing that the alleged offender, who is being prosecuted under Section 6 (1), has instigated or incited disobedience of an order under Section 144 of the Criminal P. C. or had not done anything to encourage disobedience of such an order, the Court will be at liberty to admit him to bail. 64 Pun LR 396: 1962 (2) Cr LJ 633: AIR 1962 Punj 487 (489) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 10).

SECTION 6

——S. 6 (2) — Grant of bail under — Relevant considerations — Grant of bail to member of Legislative Assembly — Desire to attend current Assembly Session not a relevant consideration.

The rule which has been laid down in the matter of bail by Section 6 of the Criminal Law (Amendment) Ordinance does not affect the presumption of innocence of the accused which is a cardinal principle of criminal jurisprudence. All that the Court in granting bail in such cases has to do is to examine the available material to come to a conclusion whether or not there is a reasonable belief to hold that the accused is guilty of the offence charged with.

The desire of a member of the Legislative Assembly who is accused of an offence of inciting others to disobey an order passed under Section 144, Cr. P. C., to participate in the current Assembly Session is not a relevant consideration in coming to a conclusion about the guilt or innocence of the member for the offence charged. (1961) 63 Pun LR 531.

The Punjab Detenus Rules have been framed by the Government for the purpose of determining the conditions of detention of persons detained in any prison in the State of Punjab. The effect of these rules is to avoid differential treatment and arbitrariness in the matter of treatment of the detenus and the jail authorities, in whose custody the detenus are kept, are bound to abide by those rules. The Government under sub-rule (4) of Rule 30 of the Defence of India Rules had the power to lay down the conditions as to maintenance, discipline and the punishment of offences and breaches of discipline for the detenu while in detention. These rules were within the rule making power of the Government and as they are not shown to be violative of any law, they cannot be struck down. The mere fact that the rules framed by the Kerala Government in the matter are comparatively more liberal, there is no ground for striking down the Punjab Rules. 67 Pun LR 1165: ILR (1965) 1 Punj 273: 1966 Cr LJ 690: AIR 1966 Punj 248 (253) (Pt B) (Pr 12).

—PUNJAB SECURITY OF THE STATE ACT (12 of 1953)

●——S. 9 — Charge — Matters to be proved.

Admitting that the accused are not justified in hurling vulgar abuses against the Ministers of the State howsoever prejudicial to the interest of the accused the policy of nationalised motor transport sponsored by them might have been, yet when the charge which is levelled against the accused is one under Section 9, of the Act, before the prosecution can succeed it has not only to prove that what the accused did is against decency and is defamatory of these individuals, but also is such that it undermines public order, decency or morality or is tantamount to an incitement to an offence prejudicial to the maintenance of public order.

(Note :— It was held that indecent and vulgar though the slogans uttered by the accused were directed against the Ministers of the Punjab Government, the utterance thereof by the accused who were the members of the procession protesting against the scheme of nationalised motor transport was hardly calculated to undermine decency or morality, the strata of society from which they came being habituated to indulge freely in such vulgar abuses without any the slightest effect on the persons hearing the same).
